Kiwanis Preventorium Will Begin '43 Season on Friday

The Kiwanis Preventorium will open Friday.

The Preventorium has been operated by the Kiwanis club each summer since 1935. It is designed to prevent tuberculosis by providing youngsters with good food and rest to help them build up their resistance against disease.

Col. and Mrs. William George Anderson of Sebring, Fla., retired Salvation Army officers, will be in charge of the children during their stay at the Preventorium. Mrs. Anderson was for many years in charge of a large Kiwanis camp for underprivileged boys at Star Lake, Butler, N. J.

W. H. Kindler, chairman of arrangements, visited the Preventorium today, with members of the club, to complete final arrangements, and to supervise the opening of the building. Dr. John Huston is Preventorium physician, and Dr. and Mrs. Walter I. Abernethy, operators of Zephyr Hill sanitarium, next door to the Preventorium, are "father and mother" to the children during their stay.

WALTER IRWIN ABERNETHY

This is the story of two people, inseparable in their work as they are in loyalty and devotion to each other and to the humanitarian effort they began, together, years ago. True, my heading names only my good friend Walter Abernethy, since he it was I talked to yesterday. But any story about Walter Abernethy would be incomplete without Mrs. Abernethy, or "Mrs. Ab", as she is so fondly called by the patients at Zephyr Hills sanitarium and the Preventorium of the Asheville Kiwanis club.

Longfellow put it very well when he wrote, "As unto the bow the cord is, so unto the man is woman . . . useless each without the other." Honestly, he must have been thinking about Walter and Linda Yow Abernethy when he wrote that, for I have never seen two people more complementary to each other than Mr. and Mrs. Walter I. Abernetry. In their work, in their wholesome recreations they have been a delightful One since January 8, 1921. Before that,

Walter Irwin Abernethy was born on a farm in Mecklenburg county near Charlotte. His parents were the late Dr. and Mrs. J. S. Abernethy. "Dad was just a country doctor," Walter said, and I add, "a country gentleman, too." Else his son would not possess such unlimited gentlemanly characteristics.

Mrs. Walter Abernethy was born in Thomasville, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Yow. Her father was a merchant and manufacturer in a small way; and her selfless career is likewise a tribute to her parents.

Both the Abernethys completed their public schooling and Walter went on to finish at Oak Ridge, one of the South's most outstand- one of the South's mst utstanding military schools. Mrs. Ab, on graduation, took nurse's training at Presbyterian hospital in Charlotte. Then Walter went back home to operate the large farm where he was born, and Miss Lida Yow continued as a charge nurse at Presbyterian.

Early in his career as gentleman farmer ("Mr. Ab" to the people at his Zephyr Hills sanitorium, lost his health. His family took him to Presbyterian hospital in Charlotte, and there he met the lovely, vivacious Lida Yow. On December 2, 1921 the bride and groom came to Asheville, he to rest and she to be his devoted helper,—"in sickness and in health, till death us do part."

The Abernethys have one daughter, Nancy, a graduate of the Woman's College, U. of N. C.

In the Land of the Sky this perfect Abernethy team did very well in every way. Just about the first thing they did was to win the hearts of everyone who met them. Both were splendidly trained for sanitorium work and in 1931 they bought the Zephyr Hills establishment.

Along about that time the local Kiwanis club adopted as its major civic effort an idea fathered in the public-spirited mind of one of its most loyal member: Dr. J. W. Houston. This idea was the founding of a permanent Preventorium at which local children with pre-tubercular tendencies might receive preventative treatment. With other members of the Kiwanis club committee on the Preventorium project, Dr. Houston went to see Mr. and Mrs. Walter Abernethy at Zephyr Hills in an effort to enlist their aid. Walter became so impressed with the work of Kiwanis that he was soon one of its most enthusiastic members. He has already completed his 13th year of perfect attendance at meetings, and in 1938 he served as the club's president.

It did not take Dr. Houston and his committee long to convince Mr. and Mrs. Ab that their hospital grounds on Shelbourne road in West Asheville was the very place for the Kiwanis Preventorium. It was so established, and it has always been one of the most important things in the lives of the Abernethys, especially Mrs. Ab. Here each summer two group of sixteen children receive the finest care and expert nursing provided by the Kiwanis members for the community and directed by our wholesome, faithful Abernethys. Below the cottages of the Preventorium is an outdoor fireplace, and here the Kiwanians usually have a summer outing, with Walter Abernethy doing the planning. How well do I remember a delicious broiled steak supper . . . but that was Before Rationing! Regardless of which, the kiddies at the Preventorium have a most beneficial and a happy stay during their weeks under the care of their beloved Mr. and Mrs. Ab.

One day I went out to Zephyr Hills to see a patient friend. Walter took me upstairs and there in a sunny glassed-in porch I saw several of the most cheerful patients I ever met, though I'd spent many years in a hospital myself. After Walter left us I asked my friend how it was that all the patients seemed so happy, so contented and busy with writing and little things they were making with their hands. My friend did not answer in words; he merely nodded toward the door. I looked around—just as Mrs. Ab entered the room. She smiled, and then I knew why a hospital ward could be such a cheerful place to be.

A Mason, and elder in the First Presbyterian church of Asheville, Walter I. Abernethy is a loyal, hard worker in any activity he undertakes. But both his hobby and his job are Zephyr Hills sanitorium and the Kiwanis Preventorium! "Though I do raise a few chickens on the side," he said.

Walter Abernethy did not want me to write this story about him. "Dr. Houston is the one you should see in doing a feature about the Preventorium. This fellow Abernethy isn't worth a story. . ." Which is characteristic of the modest Mr. and Mrs. Ab. I explained that I could not get in touch with Dr. Houston; but my friend never did agree for me to write this piece concerning him and his charming wife (who, incidentally, knows nothing about its being done).

I know enough fine things about the Abernethys to fill a book. Honestly, I wish I could tell you more. For there is not in all this land a nicer couple to know than Walter and Lida Abernethy.

"Vote for Experience"!

BUSINESS MEN

Successful in Business -- Unselfish in Service to All Asheville!

Mr. Abernethy, who is manager and operator of Zephyr Hill Sanitarium, presents to the people of Asheville a long record of worthy accomplishments in business, civic and religious fields.

A particularly helpful project which he assisted in organizing, and of which he is now manager, is the Kiwanis Preventorium which has won wide praise for its effective health work among our children. Mr. Abernethy is past president of the board of directors of the Kiwanis Club, member and director of the Asheville Executives Club, director of Asheville Federal Savings & Loan Association, member of the Buncombe County Tuberculosis Association, former member of Asheville Federal Housing Commission, member of the Family Life Council, and is now a member of the Asheville City Council.

Mr. Abernethy's church affiliation is with First Presbyterian, where he is an elder and past deacon, and past president of the Men's Group. In this field he is chairman of Men's Work in the Synod of The Appalachia, and member of the Men's Council of the Southern General Assembly.

Such a record of successful and unselfish service will, we feel sure, appeal strongly to our Asheville citizenship.

New ABC

Asheville - Alcoholic

Chairman Is Named

Abernethy Picked To Succeed Groome

Walter I. Abernethy, former city councilman and vice mayor, was named chairman of the Asheville Alcoholic Beverage Control Board yesterday.

City Council picked Abernethy to fill the top ABC post left vacant last Tuesday by the resignation of W. Jennings Groome. Abernethy will complete Groome's unexpired term which runs out in November, 1959.

Other ABC board members are Lawrence C. Merchant, whose term runs to November, 1958, and Hyman Dave, whose term expires this November. Robert N. Grice was named supervisor of the system last month.

WILL KEEP CITY JOB

Abernethy at present is affiliated with the City Tax Department and will continue to hold that post. He is owner of Zephyr Hill Sanitarium and is a member of the board of directors of the Asheville Federal Savings and Loan Assn.

A native of Mecklenberg County, Abernethy came to Asheville in 1921. He served as a member of City Council from 1947 until September of 1955, when he resigned. He served as vice mayor from 1952 until his resignation.

He is a member of First Presbyterian Church, where he has served as church school leader and chairman of the Christian education committee for 15 years. He has served as president of the Men of the Church and the Men of the Presbytery, and has been a member of the Men's Council of the Synod of Appalachia and of the Southern General Assembly.

Abernethy is a past president of the Asheville Kiwanis Club and a former director of the Chamber of Commerce.

GETS $100 PER MONTH

Under a resolution adopted by City Council last February, the ABC board chairman receives $100 per month and the other two members $75 per month each for their part-time jobs. Previously, board members received $11 per day of service.

In other business yesterday Council:

Heard City Manager J. Weldon Weir report that plans for improved street lighting in the downtown area are nearly complete and will probably be presented to Council next week.

Approved a suggestion by Councilman Theodore B. Sumner that copies of reports of electrical inspections of city schools by the county electrical inspector be made available to Council as completed.

Was told by Weir that following recent rains Bee Tree Reservoir is holding steady at 14 feet below the spillway and North Fork Reservoir has a small overflow. Weir said one of two pumps used to boost water flow from North Fork has now been cut out.

Council members present were Mayor Earl W. Eller, Vice Mayor Frank M. Mulvaney and Councilmen Sumner, William F. Algary and Carter M. Preslar.

Asheville - Biography - Abernethy, Walter

W. I. Abernethy Dies; Served City And Area

CITIZEN
JAN 18 1966

Walter I. Abernethy, 74, who came here for his health in 1921 and remained to become a leading business and public figure and a campaigner against tuberculosis, died Monday in a hospital.

He had been ill for two weeks.

He was a four-term city councilman, resigning in 1955 after serving also as vice-mayor for the last three years of his tenure, and currently was chairman of the local Alcohol Beverage Control Board. He also was a director of the Asheville Federal Savings and Loan Assn.

His home at 216 Shelburne Road in past years was Zephyr Hills Sanatorium from 1932 until 1961, when it was closed to patients.

Mr. Abernethy was recognized for his service to the community in the fight against tuberculosis, for which he received a special award in 1961 from the Buncombe County Tuberculosis and Health Association, of which he was a member of the executive committee.

torium, an institution dedicated to health work among children.

He was a past president of the Asheville Kiwanis Club and a former member of its board of directors, and also a former director of the Asheville Chamber of Commerce and a former member of the Asheville Federal Housing Commission and the Family Life Council.

A member of the First Presbyterian Church, he served as church school superintendent and chairman of the Christian education committee for 15 years, for which he was honored in ceremonies in 1956 at the church. He also served as an elder in the church, president of the Men of the Church and the Men of the Presbytery, and as a member of the Men's Council of the Synod of Appalachia and of the Southern General Assembly.

The son of the late Dr. J. S. and Lenora Potts Abernethy, Mr. Abernethy was born and reared on a farm in Mecklenburg County. He came to Asheville in 1921 for health reasons.

Survivors include the widow, the former Miss Lida Yow of Thomasville, whom he married on Jan. 8, 1921; one daughter, Mrs. Nancy A. Norton of Atlanta, and five sisters, Mrs. Alexander McNeill of Wade, Mrs. C. W. Harbison of Morganton, Mrs. Walker Thomas and Mrs. C. H. Duty, both of Asheville, and Miss Sarah Abernethy of Riverside, Calif.

Funeral services will be held Tuesday at 11 a. m. in First Presbyterian Church, with the Rev. A. Allen Gardner Jr., pastor, the Rev. Leroy Secrest, assistant pastor, and Dr. C. Grier Davis, president of Mountain Retreat Assn., Montreat, officiating.

Pallbearers will be J. W. Byers, Robert N. Grice, Ira B. Jones, Raymond A. Wanner, J. O. Angel, Franch Gooch, Murray Strain and Arnold C. Shaw.

Honorary pallbearers will be elders and deacons of First Presbyterian Church, directors of Asheville Federal Savings and Loan Assn., Dr. Edward W. Schoenheit, Dr. Samuel Crow, Dr. C. C. Belcher, Dr. Edwin J. Chapman, directors and employes of the Asheville ABC board, members of the Asheville Kiwanis Club, Mayor Earl Eller, J. Weldon Weir, city employes and directors of the Buncombe County Tuberculosis and Health Assn.

The body will be taken to Harry and Bryant Funeral Home in Charlotte for burial on Wednesday at 11 a.m. in a family plot at Hopewell Presbyterian Church near Charlotte.

In lieu of flowers, the family has requested that contributions be made to the building fund of Asheville First Presbyterian Church.

Descendants of Avery Alexander

Generation No. 1

1. AVERY[3] ALEXANDER (JOHN[2], WILLIAM[1]) was born July 25, 1819 in Buncombe Co., NC, and died March 12, 1900 in Buncombe Co., NC. He married JANE EVELYN ALEXANDER March 19, 1842 in Rabun Co., GA, daughter of JAMES ALEXANDER and MARY. She was born January 13, 1824 in Cumberland Valley Tennessee, and died January 24, 1909 in Buncombe County, NC.

Notes for AVERY ALEXANDER:
According to the Census of 1880, Avery's father was born in Tennessee and his mother was born in North Carolina.
Avery was a Carpenter.
When Avery was a boy, he was involved in a prank, that he thought resulted in a neighbor being frightened to death. He fled over the mountains to North Georgia where he worked for a farmer named James Alexander in Rabun County, who with his wife (reportedly from Scotland). They had moved to Georgia from Tennessee. This farmer had fought in the Revolutionary War???? and the Mexican War. (The Rev. War could have ment The War of 1812). These Alexanders had a daughter named Jane Evelyn who Avery fell in love with and had two children John L (1845-1863) and Elizabeth A. (1846-1913), while still in Georgia. Theythen returned to Western North Carolina (West Asheville), to discover the neighbor in question alive and well. They settled in Leicester and then in West Asheville and had five more children that were born in Buncombe County. John L. died in a hospital in St. Louis, Mo. after he was wounded and captured by the Union Army and was buried there. (Provided by James and Tari Alexander of South Carolina).
(The following information was given to us by Barbara Bumbgardner of Rock Hill, South Carolina)
James???Avery Alexander was of Scotch Irish Decent, he was born in Buncombe County in 1816?? and died in Asheville NC in 1901?? at age 85.
(HERE IS A POEM WRITTEN BY AVERY ALEXANDER TO HIS WIFE AFTER THE DEATH OF THEIR SON JOHN)>
On mother no (know) your little son is rich he is not poor for him there is a home in heaven for him a treasure shure
His father is the King of Kings and now to him he's gon (gone)
Now he shall weare a beauteous robe, white as the spotless snow
And never will that garment faid (fade) it never old can be
It is the givt of him we love of him who died for us
How happy he will make you there no words of mine can tell he there shall have no want no sin but with the angels dwell
So do not grieve and say poor child when in the grave he's laid but think how rich with gold he is tho that great price he paid
And Mother seek to meet him there and you his sisters dear
So rich and happy you will be when your no longer heare (here)
And in that city bright above at last a garthered band we'll ever bless our Saviours name by whom redeemed we stand.
(Addressed to Mrs. Jane E. Alexander)(A copy was given to us by Mary Lynn Fletcher of Asheville North Carolina)
(Birth and death dates for Avery was provided by Mable Alexander Wilson of Asheville)Avery was said to have been born ih Haywood County, NC and also in Buncombe Co. NC. He was a Carpenter and Casket Maker. He is believe to have a sister named Ella? Eliz? Elrod? from Waverly, SC.
We do have a letter written to Avery and Jane calling them brother and sister.
Believe that Avery lived with John George Miller and Anna Alexander Miller, reason is unknown, unless his father died when was just born. Perry Julian Alexander always said that Avery's farther died young and Avery's mother married a Miller.

Notes for JANE EVELYN ALEXANDER: Birth and death dates are from a book that Mable Alexander Wilson had written her birth and death dates.
(Following from Rev. James Alexander as told to him by his Father William Bryan telling him abourt Jane and Avery Alexander
Jane was born in the Cumberland Valley of Tennessee, and moved to Georgia when she was very young.
Janes mother came from Scotland as an aduld and spoke with an accent.
He has a vague memory of being told that Jane had some Indian blood, possibly her grandmother was a Cherokee Indian.
Jane smoked a pipe and dipped snuff. She often plowed the garden with a mule.
Jane was red headed and fiery of temperment. Jane lived with Perry and Magdalina after Averys death for some time. Jane wanted to baby Perry, so she did not get along well with Magdalina. Jane eventually moved back to the house on the farm where Marcus was living. My daddy who was born in 1896, remembered Jane because he had to sleep on the floor while she was staying wing them. Janes brother James came to the area and married.

Jane was born in the Cumberland Valley of Tennessee, her Father and Mother were born in North Carolina.
Birth and death dates are from a book that Mable Alexander Wilson had written her birth and death dates.

Notes for SAMUEL H. ALEXANDER:
VALOR OF EMMA MAN RECOGNIZED 36 YEARS LATER.
HOUSE VOTES TO AWARD $ 6,349.00 TO WIDOW OF S.H. ALEXANDER.
Thirty-six years after the later Samuel H. Alexander, former assistant postmaster at Emma Post Office, the federal government has taken official recognition of his act.
The House of Representative yesterday passed and sent to the Senate a bill authorizing the payment of $ 6,349.00 to Mrs. Alexander , widow of the former postal official. Mrs Alexander lives at 40 White Fawn drive.
The measure, which was introduced by Representative Zebulon Weaver, was passed by unanimous consent in the house and was ordered sent to the Senate.
In reporting the bill to the house, the committee said that Alexander, in fighting off two armed bandits who sought to rob the post office,"played the heroic part in a scene packed with more action than a western fiction thriller."
The attempted post office robbery, which took place on the night of Feb 8, 1901, attracted state-wide attention at the time it happened and the heroism of the 23 year old mountaineer, the house recognized, was appreciated then by the people of North Carolina.
The post office was held up by four armed bandits, two of whom forced their way into the building and compelled Alexander to open the safe. One of these two bandits, a white man named Frank Johnson, started to rifle the safe, leaving his pistol on its top, while the other bandit, a negro named Ben Foster, covered Alexander with his pistol.
While Johnson was rifiling the safe a cat in the rear of the room jumped and caused sufficient nois to cause the bandits to turn their heads. When they did Alexander grbbed Johnson's gun and shot Foster through the chest near the heart. He attempted to shoot Johnson also but a scuffle resulted and Foster, although seriously wounded, succeded in shooting Alexander through th abdomen, the bullet carrying away the lower part of Alexander's limb and coming out near the spine.

At this point Johnson opened a clasp knife and seriously cut Alexander. Foster had backed off to fire but Alexander forced Johnson around so that Johnson received the bullet in the jaw. The fighting continued and although suffering from serious wounds, Alexander forced his way to the outside of the building and called for help.
Johnson and Foster disapeared along with their two accomplices, R. S. Gates, a white man, and a negro named Harry Mills, who had remained outside. The bandits forced a hack driver to take them to Asheville. The driver notified police and soon the bandits were captured. Subsequantly they were convicted and sentenced to be hanged. The two bandits who had not entered the building were, on appeal, given life imprisonment while Johnson and Foster were executed in 1902.
Alexander lived until 1919 but, according to the house report aswell as the files of the post office department, he was unable to work full time and much of his income had to go for medical attention.
Under a ruling of the post office department the award could be paid to Alexander for his service in protecting government property.
In reporthe the Weaver bill to the house the claims committee said, " Under all of the circumstances your committee is of the opinion that congress should properly recognize an heroic service to the government shuch as this.

BOB'S MARKET SELLS QUALITY MEATS HERE

One of West Asheville's newest business concerns is Bob's Market, located at 707 Haywood road. This firm is headed by Robert Allen, who is well known in the market business in Asheville. Mr. Allen reports a very favorable and steady increase in his business, and expects it to be even better when the colder weather sets in, as that is the time when more meats are eaten, he states.

Bob's Market carries a complete line of the finest quality fresh, smoked, cured meats, and game in season. They are said to have exceptionally low prices at all times, and the quality is always maintained so that you are assured of getting the best at the very lowest possible price. "Bob" states that, due to his low overhead expense he can make the lowest possible prices without sacrificing quality.

Bob's Market also has fresh fruits and vegetables, strictly fresh and stamped eggs, and many other food items that the housewife needs in her every day menus. Prompt delivery service is assured those who phone 4404 ... just ask for "Bob" or "Bill" (Bill Fox) and you will get excellent prompt attention, just like you were right in the store.

Anders, Burgin

THE NEWS PERSONALITY OF THE WEEK

BURGIN ANDERS

The man with a friendly smile and an ever helpful disposition in time of trouble. That's Burgin Anders in a small nutshell, but not the personality altogether.

Four characteristics give a more complete picture of the man—modesty, honesty, a remarkable memory and professional ability.

For a person of a quite unassuming manner, Burgin Anders personally knows as many people in Buncombe county as any other one person. Also, he has many friends and a host of acquaintances throughout Western North Carolina, having had charge of or assisted in funeral arrangements in every county in this mountain region.

When on a funeral he is perhaps the most inconspicious person in the entourage, but when the rites are completed not a detail is left undone. And this modesty marks all of his day's activity.

As for the above said second quality, we quote from one of his contemporaries: "Burgin Anders is one of the straightest fellows I ever knew."

And Burgin has one of the most unusual memories you ever came across. For instance, when one of his fraternal organizations wants a ritual recited, Burgin is often called upon. He can quote a ritual by heart from "kiver to kiver." Burgin belongs to the Junior Order, Improved Order of the Red Man, and the Loyal Order of the Moose. His church affiliation is with Calvary Baptist.

In his profession, Burgin is more than an embalmer; he is an artist. And this appraisal also comes from a member of his calling.

Burgin started his profession in 1918 with the McKoy-Hare company. Three years later he became connected with the Reynolds mortuary until 1937 when he went into business for himself in copartnership with C. T. Rice in the firm of Anders-Ricec, at 820 Haywood road. In July of last year the mortuary moved into its present home, 521 Haywood road.

Burgin completed his mortuary course at Hohenschuh Carpenter College of Embalming, of Des Moines, Iowa, in 1922, and passed the North Carolina Board of Embalming in 1923.

Burgin recalls that his first years in the business was in the horse and carriage days. He says that if war conditions should happen to force his business to return to that mode of transportation, he hopes he doesn't experience such mishaps as that occurred one time when a three-seated open carriage turned over en route to the cemetery.

Back in those days a funeral was a whole day affair. Today the average time is about two hours.

A native of Madison county where he attended the public schools, Burgin came to Asheville in 1909 and attended the old Asheville Business college. Then, in the intervening years he engaged in the grocery business, being associated with the E. C. Jarrett, and Estes and McGuire.

Mr. Anders was married to Miss Florence Icenhower of Leicester in February, 1920. He recalls he had met her at a funeral.

The Anders have two children, Mrs. Vivian Long and Ruth, a student at Aycock.

Yes, everybody around here seems to know Burgin Anders. And for this column's part, knowing him is a pleasure.

James B. Anders Dies; Funeral Home Founder

James Burgin Anders of 128 Starnes Cove Road, retired Asheville mortician and founder of Anders-Rice Funeral Home, died Wednesday in an Asheville hospital following a short illness.

A native of Madison County, he had lived in Buncombe County for 65 years and retired in April of 1957 as co-owner of Anders-Rice Funeral Home. He attended Blanton Business College, was a graduate of Holtzclaw-Matthews Course of Mortuary Science and received his embalming license in 1922. Mr. Anders began funeral work in 1916 and was employed with Reynolds Funeral Home at the time he entered business with Curtis J. Rice in 1937. He had formerly served as secretary and treasurer of Anders-Rice Mutual Burial Association and was a member of Starnes Cove Baptist Church, where he belonged to the London Bible Class and was a member of the Brotherhood. He had served as treasurer for 15 years and was a former deacon at Calvary Baptist Church and was treasurer at the time the new addition was built. He was also the last living member of the local council of Junior Order of United American Mechanics and had served as its financial secretary. He was a son of the late John H. and Leekie Buckner Anders.

Surviving are the widow, Mrs. Florence Ecenhour Anders, to whom he married Feb. 22, 1920 two daughters, Mrs. Vivian B. Long of Elizabethton, Tenn. and Mrs. Ruth I. Forrest of Pleasant Valley, N. Y.: and 2 grandchildren.

Funeral services will be held at 2:30 p.m. Saturday in the chapel of Anders-Rice Funeral Home. The Revs. Jesse Head and A. J. Buckner will officiate. Burial will be in Green Hills Cemetery. Pallbearers will be Jack Ecenhour, George Becker, Harlen Barnes, Luther and Leonard Anders and Milton Shuford. Members of the Sunday School class at Starnes Cove Baptist Church will be honorary pallbearers.

J. B. ANDERS

The family will receive friends from 7 to 9 p.m. Friday at the funeral home.

C. B. ANDERSON, HALL FLETCHER PRINCIPAL, DIES

Is Stricken With Heart Attack While Attending Teachers' Meeting

C. B. Anderson, 51, principal of Hall Fletcher junior high school in West Asheville, died suddenly at 8 o'clock last night following a heart attack at Lee Edwards high school.

Mr. Anderson, who was at Lee Edwards high school attending the annual convention of the Western district of the North Carolina Education association, was talking to G. C. Brown, principal of Vance school, and G. T. Leonard, principal of Randolph school, when he suddenly slumped over in his seat in the school auditorium.

Doctor Summoned

Mr. Leonard and Mr. Brown placed Mr. Anderson on the floor of the auditorium and Dr. Julian Moore was called from Biltmore hospital. An ambulance also was summoned. When Dr. Moore arrived at the school he pronounced Mr. Anderson dead. The body was taken to the Dunn-Groce funeral home.

Out of respect to Mr. Anderson, last night's session of the teachers' meeting was adjourned. Dr. Clyde A. Erwin, state superintendent of public instruction, before adjourning the meeting, told the assemblage that Mr. Anderson "has written his history in the lives of hundreds of boys and girls who have been better fitted to live their lives."

Mr. Anderson was considered to be in perfect health, and his sudden death came as a great shock to relatives and friends.

Surviving Mr. Anderson are his widow; one son, John Anderson, student at Lee Edwards school; one daughter, Miss Margaret Anderson, student at Greensboro Woman's college.

He also is survived by three brothers, B. A. Anderson of Peru, Ind., and George and Barley Anderson of Covington, Ky.; and three sisters, Mrs. Bradley Lake and Mrs. Emma Lake of Berea, Ky., and Mrs. S. A. Ball of Mount Vernon, Ky.

Funeral services will be held Sunday at Calvary Baptist church. The hour of the funeral will be announced later.

Born In Kentucky

Mr. Anderson was born in Orlando, Ky., in 1886. He received his early education in public schools of Kentucky and was graduated from Berea college in 1914. His first teaching experience was in Rock Castle, Ky., before his graduation from Berea college.

—(Please Turn To Page Two)

After his graduation from Berea, Mr. Anderson was on the faculty of the college for four years, serving in the rural demonstration school. About this time the United States entered the World war and Mr. Anderson enlisted. He served overseas with the American Expeditionary forces and at one time was in charge of the department of education of the entire fourth division of the army of occupation. His principal work in instruction in France was done at Baume.

At the close of the war, Mr. Anderson became assistant principal at Farm school, near Swannanoa. In 1922, he came to Asheville as principal of Aycock school. The next year Vance school was opened and he became principal of that school.

Taught At Normal

Mr. Anderson remained as principal of Vance school until 1931 when he was appointed principal of Hall Fletcher school. For eight years he taught in the summer school of Asheville Normal and Teachers' college. He held a master's degree from Cornell university and was a graduate student of Peabody college for teachers.

He was a past president of the West Asheville club, a member of Calvary Baptist church, and the West Asheville Masonic lodge, president of the Men's Brotherhood of Calvary church, and a member of the Phi Gamma Nu, a scientific organization.

All members are deceased.

FOUND LYING IN ROAD WITH GASH ON HEAD

Last night about 8 o'clock a man was found lying in one of the streets of West Asheville who appeared to be in a rather serious condition—in fact he was thought to be dead or that was the message that was sent to Dr. Anderson, who arrived in his automobile soon after. The man was found to be John Swink, who lives in Asheville. He had a gash on the side of his head that had evidently been inflicted with some weapon and he was considerably the worse for drink.

Dr. Anderson took Swink, who is a paper hanger, to a drug store in the city and dressed his wound, which looked worse than it really was.

Swink told that he had been hit by W. H. Hughes of West Asheville, a merchant and brother-in-law of Swink. He said that he had been at Hughes' home and they had been discussing some property which is in dispute; that he had started to leave the house and that was the last he knew.

Williamson reports donations for August as follows: Miss Rita Rees, $2, from "charity drink" sales $14.10, R. J. Woodcock, $2, Mrs. M. D. Long, $6, city of Asheville, $100, county of Buncombe, $50.

The following donations were received by the secretary: From W. C. Carmichael, check for $14.10, amount of proceeds from the "charity drink," that was voted to the flower mission, the check being turned over to the treasurer; Mrs. Howland, .50 per week; Miss Maud Waddell, clothing; Mrs. Lewis Ellas, $1; Mrs. Shell, cot and clothing; Pallas Royal, hats; Mrs. R. F. Porter, clothing and ~~25 for~~ dray.

Brown's creamery has given to our poor and sick $16.15 worth of milk during the summer and is continuing this valuable work.

We are still indebted to the Asheville Power and Light company, the Southern railway, through their polite and courteous agents for continued favors, to the Asheville laundry for gratuitous work and to both the daily papers for kindnesses.

Respectfully submitted,
(MRS.) F. P. WILD, Secretary.

TWO ARE HURT AS THEY JUMP FROM BUILDING DOOMED BY FLAMES

Colonel and Mrs. P. G. Bowman Seriously Injured Making Escape From Handsome Home, Strawberry Hill, Destroyed by Fire Last Night.

Their escape cut off by flames before their peril was discovered, Colonel P. G. Bowman and Mrs. Bowman, narrowly escaped being burned to death after Mrs. Bowman had fallen and Colonel Bowman had been forced to jump from the second story of their beautiful country residence, Strawberry Hill, which was destroyed by fire shortly before 12 o'clock last night.

Finding his escape by the stairway rendered impossible by the rush of flames from below, Colonel Bowman attempted to lower his wife down by use of bedclothing, but her hands slipped and she fell to the ground beneath, breaking her right leg. Colonel Bowman jumped immediately from the second story and fell close by where his wife lay; in the fall he was so injured that he could not move himself nor aid Mrs. Bowman. Both lay nearly an hour almost within reach of the burning timbers of the house.

Neighbors Come.

After what seemed an age to the imperiled sufferers neighbors finally came and hastened to call a physician. Dr. J. O. Anderson was the first to get to the spot and he placed Mrs. Bowman in his automobile and hurried to the Mission hospital, where it was found that her right leg had been broken as a result of the fall. Shortly afterward Noland, Brown and company's ambulance, which had been called by telephone, arrived and Colonel Bowman was immediately taken to Meriwether hospital, where it was found he had a dislocated knee, fracture of several bones in the foot, and a large number of bruises about the body.

At the time the fire broke out, about 11:10 p. m., Mrs. Bowman was sitting up reading, and her first warning was a rush of smoke and flames up the stairway, which took the route probably because it offered the only opening. This was heightened by a draft of hot air from the cellar where the furnace was located, and from which the fire is supposed to have started.

When Mrs. Bowman fell from the end of the improvised rope on which her husband hoped to let her safely to the ground it was just 11:10; Colonel Bowman jumped immediately and both were on the ground practically unable to move from that time until 11:50. The fire was discovered by the cook who tried to warn the occupants of the house in which were only Colonel and Mrs. Bowman. The servant was returning from Asheville when she saw the blaze.

After the alarm was given a crowd of nearly 200 people went out from West Asheville to the burning house, but neither they nor the West Asheville fire department, which responded to the alarm, were able to do anything to prevent the destruction of the house and its valuable contents. This was due to the fact that the house was located nearly a mile from the end of the car line in West Asheville and beyond the reach of the water lines.

The house which was valued at $25,000 was partially covered by insurance. It was built in 1890 by W. D. Hoagland of Chicago, Ill., and was originally planned as a country club, but after its construction Mr. Hoagland used it as a residence for his family for about ten years. It was then sold to Dr. Winters, of Philadelphia, who occupied it for more than two years. Its last occupant was Colonel Bowman, who came to Asheville recently from Birmingham, Ala.

The destruction of the house was complete and it was impossible to save any portion of the furnishings.

EXERCISES CLOSE AT WEST ASHEVILLE

Fifty-Six Pupils Receive Certificates For Perfect Attendances Throughout the Term.

The largest crowds of the commencement attended the closing exercises at West Asheville school last night and heard Judge J. C. Pritchard deliver the graduation address. The medal for the recitation contest offered by Dr. J. G. Anderson, was won by Sara Penny who recited "Hagar," and was presented by S. B. Hall.

The declamation contest was won by William Reynolds, who recited "The Unknown Rider." His medal was presented by M. D. Shook, its donor being S. B. Hall. Nine boys participated in the declamation contest and in the other contest eight girls recited.

Diplomas were presented to the graduates, of whom there were five, their names following:

Wade Steelman, Albert Evans, Nell Reynolds, Zula Fairchild and Grace Beacham.

Superintendent W. H. Hipps was present last night and presented attendance certificates to fifty-six pupils, who were neither tardy nor absent during the term. Six of these were given an ovation by the audience for having been neither tardy nor absent for five years.

The school has just completed a year's work that will stand out in the history of the institution. The success that has been attained in scholarship, attendance and other work in the school has been marked and these factors, as much as anything else, were instrumental in carrying the bond election whereby $25,000 was provided for a handsome new building.

Dr. Anderson

New Home of Dr. J. G. Anderson Under Construction

Work was started the past week to make a reality of the above plan for Dr. J. G. Anderson's new Colonial home on Haywood Road and Tampa Avenue in West Asheville. L. L. Merchant Construction Co., is building the structure which will cost $50,000.

DR. ANDERSON IS BUILDING $50,000 HOME

Work Started On Corner of Haywood and Tampa.

A paldtial Colonial home costing $50,000 is now being erected by Dr. J. G. Anderson at the corner of Haywood Road and Tampa avenue in West Asheville. Work was started on the structure the past week by the L. L. Merchant Construction Company.

The new Anderson residence will be of pure Colonial detail throughout the interior as well as in exterior architecture. It will be made of brick and stone. When completed this home will be one of the handsomest and most luxuriously appointed in this section.

Plans for the Anderson home were drawn by Thrower-Breeze & Company, architects and engineers of Asheville and Charlotte.

DR. ANDERSON HAS DIFFICULT JOB TO PROVE HE'S ALIVE

Even after many of his inquirers had listened to his voice over the telephone as he assured them that he was still among the living, Dr. J. G. Anderson, prominent Asheville physician, had quite a difficult job last night in convicing many people that a report that he had dropped dead on the street was untrue.

"Why, I'm not dead I'm quite well, thank you," the doctor was forced to quote to numerous callers over the telephone at his home on Haywood road, West Asheville.

After countless trips to the telephone to give assurance to anxious friends and associates that he was at least enough alive to talk to them, Dr. Anderson used the telephone to send and S O S call to The Citizen, and requested that the paper announce that he is very much alive, but tired of answering his telephone.

Dr. Anderson Buried In Green Hill Cemetery; Died Early Friday

Attended by thousands of people from practically every section of Western North Carolina, funeral services for Dr. James Garrett Anderson, 48, prominent Asheville physician, civic leader, and citizen, who died at Aston Park hospital Friday morning at 8:20 o'clock, were held at the West Asheville Methodist church yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

In the audience which taxed the seating capacity of the church, were leading physicians, business men, public officials, and many others representative of every walk of life, who had gathered to pay a final tribute of respect to the man whom they had known as a friend through the years. Coincidental with the fact that Dr. Anderson passed away in the hospital which was the realization of the closest plans of his youth, the rites were conducted within the church which was erected through the careful planning and energetic efforts of himself and others.

Officiating ministers were the Rev. G. T. Bond, pastor; the Rev. J. S. Hiatt, former pastor and now presiding elder of the Statesville Methodist district, and the Rev. L. W. Colson, Methodist chaplain of the Oteen post chapel, U. S. Veterans' hospital, also a former pastor. Music was furnished by the male quartets of the West Asheville and Central Methodist church choirs, with physicians, attorneys, public officials, and other leading citizens and close friends of the deceased as pallbearers.

Co-Workers Are Pallbearers

Active pallbearers were leading physicians and surgeons of the city, who were associated with Dr. Anderson as members of the Aston Park hospital staff. They were as follows: Dr. Howard L. Sumner, Dr. A. B. Greenwood, Dr. B. E. Morgan, Dr. A. C. McCall, Dr. C. H. Hensley, Dr. H. S. Clarke, Dr. R. E. Fox, and Dr. Paul F. Weist.

Honorary pallbearers included fellow physicians, and other leading citizens as follows: Dr. Ben S. Merriwether, Dr. P. R. Terry, Dr. Joseph Adams, Dr. B. O. Edwards, Dr. Arthur Reeves, Dr. W. B. Murphy, Dr. John MacRae, Dr. H. G. Brookshire, Dr. G. A. Shieder, Dr. O. P. Edwards, Dr. D. M. Buck, J. A. Richbourg, Joseph W. Nichols, Dr. Donald MacRae, Dr. C. C. Orr, Dr. W. E. Baker, Dr. D. M. McIntosh, of Old Fort; Dr. Frank Roberts, and Dr. W. A. Sams, of Marshall; Dr. Willard Robinson, of Mars Hill; Dr. W. B. Robertson, of Burnsville; Dr. David Kimberly, of Hot Springs; Dr. T. W. Sumner, of Fletcher; Dr. Marion Buckner, of Swannanoa; Dr. C. N. Sprinkle, of Weaverville; Dr. H. H. Harrison, Dr. L. W. Ellas, Dr. S. E. Greenwood, of Mills River and Dr. Grady A. Morgan, Gilbert H. Morris, Wallace D. Davis, William Redwood, D. J. Weaver, G. D. Carter, H. B. Posey, Mayor Gallatin Roberts, J. M. James, Charles Byrd, and James S. Howell. Members of the board of stewards and the board of trustees of the West Asheville Methodist church also served as honorary pallbearers. Dr. Anderson was chairman of the board of stewards of the church, and one of its most active members.

Green Hill Service

Members of West Asheville Masonic Lodge, 665, A. F. and A. M., of which the deceased was a member, had charge of a brief service held in Green Hill cemetery, where interment took place. All member stores of the West Asheville Merchants' association were closed during the funeral including the Bank of West Asheville, of which Dr. Anderson was a vice president, director, and one of the organizers.

Dr. Anderson died Friday morning after an illness of several days, following a major abdominal operation which he underwent at the hospital last Sunday afternoon. His widow, his children and a number of other relatives were at the bedside when the end came.

The physician, who in 1922 founded the French Broad hospital, with the late Dr. Arthur T. Pritchard and the late Dr. A. W. Calloway, was president of the Tenth District Medical Society. He was born at Paint Fork, in Madison county, December 6, 1881, and received his education in the public schools, Mars Hill college, Wake Forest college, and the Louisville Medical college. Soon after completing his medical education, he entered active practice as a physician in Asheville. He was one of the most active members of the West Asheville Methodist church and his generosity and active work were highly instrumental in erection of the $150,000 structure.

Dr. Anderson is survived by his widow, Mrs. Lottie Anderson, and five children, J. G. Anderson, Jr., Glenn, Garrett, and Arthur; also his father, D. N. Anderson, and the following brothers and sisters: John B. Anderson, Asheville attorney; Mrs. O. Whit Gaskins, of Asheville; Mrs. R. C. Shelton, Mrs. W. T. Martin, of Raleigh; Oscar and Kenneth Anderson, of Paint Fork; and Mrs. Ellis Robinson, of Ivy. His mother died several months ago.

The congregation of Abernethy United Methodist Church will celebrate the 40th anniversary of the church at 11 a.m. Sunday in the chapel of Groce Funeral Home where the first services were held. The insert is the present church building on Patton Avenue. The anniversary speaker is the Rev. E.H. Nease Jr., the first appointed minister of the church.

Entire Community May Benefit From Organization Of Club

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the eleventh of a series dealing with the federated clubs of Asheville and the individuals who have contributed to them.)

By DOROTHY SNYDER

Have communities ever been tangibly benefitted by the organization of a woman's club? The answer might be found in the history of one of Asheville's federated clubs.

The Community Club, originally known as the West Asheville Community Club, was formed in 1923 with 115 charter members, all residents of West Asheville.

At that time West Asheville had no express delivery, no gas mains, very few telephone lines and no clubhouse. The club worked untiringly for those advantages, all of which the community has enjoyed for many years now.

"A Beautiful City" was the club slogan, and the members worked for the conservation of trees, especially dogwood and holly, and was instrumental in getting a swimming pool for West Asheville.

These are only a few of the projects which have been undertaken by the club since tis organization, and their success of course is due to the unflagging zeal of the members through the years.

Mrs. J. Wall Anderson, who was the club's first secretary, is a charter member of the group. With the exception of Mrs. D. L. Gross, who is at present living in Milwaukee where her husband is stationed with the Navy, Mrs. Anderson is the only charter member still active in the club, which will observe its 30th birthday this year.

During those years, Mrs. Anderson has held practically every office in the club and has headed scores of committees. She has also served as district president of federated clubs, the highest district office and one which entails the responsibility of supervising the work of all federated clubs in the section.

Mrs. Anderson's work in civic projects has not been limited to the Community Club, however. Since coming to Asheville during World War I, she has been active in many organizations. For some time she has been on the board of trustees of Pack Memorial Library, and for the past 10 years has been working with the board to get a library in West Asheville —a library which is now nearing completion.

MRS. J. WALL ANDERSON

For 16 years Mrs. Anderson has served on the board of directors of the Buncombe County Children's Home—a work that she has especially enjoyed. During these years she has devoted a great deal of time to work at the home, and the children, who love her, look forward to her visits. She has missed only two of the annual Christmas parties at the home, and has planned the parties a number of times.

Though she has no children of her own, Mrs Anderson has been keenly interested in child welfare, and for many years was a member of the Vance School Parent-Teachers Association. She was one of a group of women who started a lunchroom at Vance School in the days when the school was first built.

Mrs. Anderson is a member of the Fanny Patton Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, and is at present serving as its vice president. She also is a member of Esther Chapter 12, Order of the Eastern Star, and has served as worthy matron of the chapter.

For thirty years Mrs. Anderson was a member of Trinity Episcopal Church and was a member of the church choir. When St. George Episcopal Church was formed in West Asheville, however, she felt that she was more needed there and is now an active worker in the new church.

Mrs. Anderson, the former Miss Almira Mahan, was born and reared in Baltimore. She and Mr. Anderson, now retired after working with the Railway Express Company for many years, moved to Asheville about 1917. Several years later they built a house in West Asheville and since that time have seen the community grow at a rapid rate.

Mrs. Anderson is a woman who enjoys club work, and she has been willing to serve in any capacity. There is no doubt, however, that the work she has most enjoyed has been in those projects which have contributed to the up building of West Asheville.

WELL STOCKED BRANCH LIBRARY TO OPEN FOR SERVICE MONDAY

Dedication Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock of the new Pack Meforial Library branch on Haywood Road, will mark a milestone in the progress of West Asheville. The library will share with the Fire Department, the new $100,000 building erected by the city. Miss Margaret Ligon, Pack Library supervisor, is enthusiastic about the literary facilities offered to the 20,000 citizens of Asheville living west of the French Broad River for which the structure with capacity for 8,000 volumes is admirably adapted. The library will be opened Monday morning with Mrs. Doan Ogden in charge and Mrs. Edith F. Jones, assistant. Anne Cloninger will be library page. Library hours will be from 9 to 6 o'clock daily.

Sunday atfernoon's dedication exercises, Miss Ligon, announced, will be appropriate to the day and occasion. Miss Annie Westall, chairman of the Library Board, will preside. Rev. Nane Starnes, pastor of the West Asheville Baptist Church, will give the invocation. George H. Wright will make a short talk dealing with development of the public library in Asheville. The Hall Fletcher Junior High School band will play several numbers. The new library building unit will be presented to the citizens of West Asheville by Vice-Mayor Walter I. Abernathy with L. J. Montgomery responding. Miss Ligon will then introduce Mrs. Ogden, the branch librarian, followed by the benediction by Rev. J. H. Brendle, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church.

Plans for the West Asheville branch library were initiated a year or more ago by a committee of 15 of which Mrs. J. Wall Anderson is chairman and L. J. Montgomery, vice-chairman. Others on this committee include Mrs. Edward Coulson, Mrs. Curtis Snipes, Mrs. Keith Bradley, Mrs. C. M. Hills, Jr., Mrs. Austin Thompson, Mrs. George Todd, Mrs. Harry Atkins, Mrs. Dan Scott Mrs. J. W. Snow, Albert Fortune, Harold Hicks, E. B. Roberts, W. E. Michael and Kelly Roberts.

Mrs. Curtis Snipes is publicity chairman. Mrs. Wall Anderson is chairman of the Flowers Committee with Mrs. Coulson and Mrs. Bradley as co-members.

In discussing the new library branch, Miss Ligon said, "We have tried to anticipate the needs of the West Aseville reading public. We have the best basic stock that we could buy with at least 95 per cent new books. We have a small but good reference collection."

Mrs. Ogden, the librarian is a graduate of Western Reserve and Chatauqua School for Librarians, Chatauqua, N. Y. She came to Asheville from Michigan and served for a time on the staff of the U. S. Veterans Hospital, Oteen. During the past 15 months she has been connected with Pack Memorial Library.

Upon entering the library the visitor is immediately impressed with the extended panorama seen through the south windows with Mount Pisgah capping the view. The atmosphere is one of cultural inspiration.

The building of contemporary style, was designed by Six Associates. The shelves and other woodwork are of birch. The room is illuminated by overhead flourescent lighting. Columns are tinted in Swedish red. The floor is of slate gray tile. Windows run the full length of the library on the north and south sides. The building is designed so that the sun oes not enter the reading room except uring part of the winter. An electric charging machine has been installed. A metal book lift from the basement is a labor saving device.

Z. B. Robinson and Son are contractors for the dual purpose building. The sub-contractors are: United Electric Co., lighting; Price Piping Co., heating; V .M. Lyle Painting; and Moser Plumbing Co., plumbing.

A large basement room, as yet unfinished, will be equipped as the Children's Department. The basement has an outside entrance.

The Asheville public library is second in circulation in North Carolina, being outranked only by Charlotte.

Card holders of the main library may use the facilities of the West Asheville branch and the same courtesy will be extended to residents holding West Asheville cards.

N. M. ANDERSON SUCCUMBS TO HEART ATTACK

Private Funeral Services To Be Held Tuesday Afternoon At 3:30.

FOUNDED SCHOOL HERE

Asheville Man Had Nationwide Reputation As Educator.

Ash Times 2/3/36

Newton M. Anderson, nationally known educator, died at his home in Malvern Hills last night at 6 o'clock as a result of a heart attack. Mr. Anderson, who was 79 years old, was the founder and headmaster-emeritus of the Asheville School for Boys.

He had been ill last fall, but had sufficiently recovered to go to his office at the Asheville school, where he handled the alumni work and was editor of "Asheville School Views," the school newspaper.

Mr. Anderson was a pioneer in modern education and had a distinguished career with several educational institutions. He founded the Cleveland Manual Training school and the University School of Cleveland before coming here with C. A. Mitchell, a New Englander, who had been associated wtih him in Cleveland, to found Asheville school.

He is survived by his widow, the former Miss Elizabeth Arney Close; a daughter, Miss Elizabeth Arney Anderson; a sister, Mrs. Susie A. Clark, of Waterbury, Conn.; and two brothers, Frank C. Anderson, of Philadelphia, and George Y. Anderson, of Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Anderson was a brother-in-law of Mrs. W. B. Northup and Mrs. Charles A. Webb.

Plan Private Rites

A private funeral service, for members of the family and intimate friends will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Northup, 66 Evelyn place, Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, with the Rev. George Floyd Rogers, rector of Trinity Episcopal church, in charge. Interment will follow in Riverside cemetery.

The active pallbearers will be: Samuel J. Fisher, Dr. Arthur Ambler, Frank Coxe, Julia A. Woodcock, Jr., J. Grove Seely, and J. Fuller Brown.

It was announced that a memorial service is being planned by alumni of the Asheville school, who, with the vestry of Trinity church, will attend in a body. The service will be held at the the Chapel of the Asheville school, the date to be announced later.

CLAIMED BY DEATH

NEWTON M. ANDERSON

Native of Ohio

Mr. Anderson was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, and entered with the first preparatory class at the University of Ohio when the institution was opened in 1873. At the time of his death he was the only surviving member of the graduating class of 1879.

From the time of his graduation until about six years ago, Mr. Anderson devoted most of his life to the cause of education and lived to see many of his early efforts in pioneering work generally adopted over the country.

After his graduation from the University of Ohio, Mr. Anderson spent one year in post-graduate work at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Leaving there, he became connected with the Bell Telephone company and was sent to Belgium, where he installed the first telephone exchange there.

Urges Manual Training

He returned to this country in 1881 and went to the University of Ohio, where he was instructor in physics. This was the beginning of his long career as an educator. Later, while teaching physics in a Cleveland High school, he became so impressed with the need for manual training classes that he went to the school authorities in an effort to induce them to place this type of instruction in the school curriculum. His efforts were in vain. The school officials thought his ideas were too fancy and too modern, and turned thumbs down on the proposal.

Not daunted by his failure to get official backing, Mr. Anderson rented a loft over a stable and had it fitted up with tools and work benches. Then he invited the boys whom he knew to be interested to enroll in classes after school hours.

Boys Enthusiastic

The suggestion was received wit enthusiasm and the classes grew steadily and the school became so popular that the capacity of the original quarters was taxed beyond what it could conveniently stand. The parents of the boys who were so vitally interested in the work came to his rescue and a new building was obtained. The new plant, which was erected and equipped with funds contributed by friends of the school, became the Cleveland Manual Training school.

Mr. Anderson found it necessary to give all of his time to this work and he remained at the head of the Cleveland Manual Training school until 1890 when the school authorities, reluctantly convinced, took over the work and the Cleveland Technical High school came into being. There are now two large high schools in Cleveland which sprang from the school started by Mr. Anderson.

Lauded By Hayes

Encouraged by the success that this first enterprise had received, Mr. Anderson conceived the idea of starting a country day school for boys. From this decision there resulted the University school, the first of its type, and it was opened in May, 1890, in temporary quarters while the administration building was being erected. When this school was completed it represented the finest in the country at the time.

The chief address at the formal opening was made by Ex-President Rutherford B. Hayes, who paid a high tribute to the work of Mr. Anderson as an educator. The building had been planned especially for the work of the school and ample provision had been made for sports. This resulted in the school's turning out some of the finest preparatory teams in the country of that period.

Pick Site Here

Mr. Anderson remained with this school for ten years. Then in 1900 he became associated with C. A. Mitchell, an educator with pronounced progressive tendencies that made him a fitting partner for Mr. Anderson. Together they hunted over the eastern part of the country for the ideal location for a boys' school which was to be the finest thing of its kind then available. They eventually selected the site where Asheville school is now located and erected the plant that was destined to turn out a great many outstanding men during the years of its operation.

Mr. Anderson and Mr. Mitchell served as headmasters of the school until 1919 when Mr. Anderson purchased the interest of Mr. Mitchell in the institution. He then became headmaster and continued in this position until 1926 when he resigned to give his full time to the development of Malvern Hills on the old Sulphur Springs property which had long been famous in this section.

Serves On County Board

Mr. Anderson, in 1928, entered the race for chairman of the Buncombe county board of commissioners on the Republican ticket and was elected. He served in this capacity for two years.

In June, 1930, Mr. Anderson was present for the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the University school and was a guest of honor for the occasion. A feature of the observance was the unveiling of a portrait of Mr. Anderson at the school. He also went to Cleveland where he visited the two technical high schools which traced their beginning to his little class started in the loft of a stable 55 years ago.

On this same trip he visited the University of Ohio, having at that time the distinction of being the only surviving member of the class of 1879.

Mr. Anderson was a past president of the Asheville Civitan club and a former vice-president of the Asheville Real Estate board. He was a member of Trinity Episcopal church, which he joined when he came to Asheville.

When we search out the story of such teachers, placed as Mr. Anderson was, we see their own attitude toward life reflected in the attitude toward life of those who have been under them. We can read this story in the records of scores and hundreds of the boys who were under Mr. Anderson at Cleveland and at the Asheville School which he helped to found and of which he was long the guiding spirit. Here in this high, clean place he has left his monument; and he lives on in the lives of those who learned from him how to live.

"So we can fit to him the words of the greatest of teachers when he said, for every tree is known by his own fruit and a good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good."

SEVERAL natural factors combined to make Cleveland, Ohio, a great manufacturing and commercial center; but one big man-made factor must be credited to the technical knowledge and the social foresight of Newton M. Anderson.

A little more than 50 years ago, an instructor in physics in the Cleveland Central High School, Mr. Anderson saw the need for manual training. The school authorities regarded the scheme as visionary.

Mr. Anderson was looking into the future. He rented quarters over a stable, obtained tools and work-benches and invited the boys to enroll for instruction. They came in such large numbers that the authorities after a few years confessed their short-sightedness. From that foundation laid by Mr. Anderson grew the two large technical high schools of Cleveland today.

It was this initiative and grasp of a situation that had made Mr. Anderson a valued member of the Bell Telephone field force in the early days of that company. While with the Bell company he built the first telephone exchange in Belgium, at Liege.

Asheville, of course, knew Mr. Anderson best as founder, in co-operation with the late C. A. Mitchell, of the Asheville School for Boys, an institution which has meant so much, and still means so much, to this community.

Mr. Anderson had already established, in the University School at Cleveland, the first school of its kind for boys. He brought to the Asheville School ten years' experience with the University School, with the results that are familiar to everybody who knows and appreciates the Asheville School for Boys.

An educator nationally recognized, one of special gifts in dealing with boys, Mr. Anderson touched the lives of thousands who today will look back on their days under his tutelage with affection and gratitude.

Private Funeral Services Held For Nationally Known Educator.

Newton M. Anderson, nationally known in the field of education, who died at his home here Sunday night, was laid to rest in Riverside cemetery yesterday, following private funeral services at 3:30 o'clock at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Northup, 66 Evelyn place.

The Rev. George Floyd Rogers, rector of Trinity Episcopal church, conducted the rites, which were attended only by immediate members of the family and close friends of Mr. Anderson. Many others, though, paid respect to his memory by sending beautiful floral tributes.

Mr. Anderson, who was 79 years old, was headmaster-emeritus and co-founder of the Asheville School for Boys. He was active in civic and business circles of the city.

George Y. Anderson, of Cleveland, Ohio, a brother of the late Mr. Anderson, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Webb, who were at their winter home in Clearwater, Fla., were among those who came here for the funeral. Mr. Anderson was a brother-in-law of Mrs. Webb.

Pallbearers were Dr. Arthur Ambler, Julian A. Woodcock, Jr., J. Fuller Brown, Frank Coxe, Samuel J. Fisher and J. Grove Seely.

Surviving Mr. Anderson are his widow, the former Miss Elizabeth Arney Close; a daughter, Miss Elizabeth Arney Anderson; a sister, Mrs. Susie A. Clark, of Waterbury, Conn., and two brothers, Frank C. Anderson, of Philadelphia, and George Y. Anderson, of Cleveland. Mr. Anderson was a brother-in-law of Mrs. Northup and Mrs. Webb.

Friends And Alumni Attend Memorial Service At Asheville School.

Many friends—including a number of alumni of Asheville school—assembled in the stone chapel of the school yesterday to pay tribute to the late Newton M. Anderson.

Robert Lathan, editor of The Asheville Citizen, delivered the memorial address, placing particular emphasis on Mr. Anderson's work at Asheville school. David R. Fall, assistant headmaster, was in charge and read the Scripture and tributes written by Howard Bement, headmaster, editors of the two school publications and others. The school choir sang. The Rev. George Floyd Rogers, rector at Trinity Episcopal church, assisted Mr. Fall.

Local alumni of the school attended in a body. Remaining seats in the chapel were filled by friends of Mr. Anderson.

"It is the teacher's sorrow that often the seed which he sows is trodden down, or withers away, or is choked by thorns; it is his joy that much of it falls on good ground and bears fruit an hundredfold," Mr Lathan said in his address.

"Great as is the responsibility of every teacher," said the speaker, "the responsibility of a headmaster of a school like this, where Mr. Anderson did so large a part of his work, is peculiarly great; for he is more than teacher. He stands in loco parentis and owes to those who are in his charge not instruction only, and not the disciplining of all their faculties only, but above all what can be done by teacher and by parent to help mould their characters and shape their lives.

Ash Citizen

Mrs. Newton M. Anderson, 85, widow of Newton M. Anderson, co-founder and former headmaster of the Asheville School, died about 11 a.m. yesterday at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde O. Henke, 100 School Rd., Alapocas, Wilmington, Del. She had resided there since 1951.

Her husband, who died in 1936, was a former headmaster of the University School, Shaker Heights, Cleveland, Ohio, and once served as a Buncombe County Commissioner.

Anderson owned at one time and developed the section now known as Malvern Hills.

A memorial service for Mrs. Anderson will be conducted at 11 a.m. Thursday in the William Spencer Boyd Memorial Chapel at Asheville School.

The family has requested that no flowers be sent.

Dr. Donald C. Wilson, associate minister of Westminister Presbyterian Church and a former student at Asheville School, assisted by David R. Fall, present headmaster, and the Rev. John W. Tuton, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, of Asheville, will officiate. Burial will be in Riverside Cemetery.

Mrs. Anderson was a native of Hancock, Mich. She was an accomplished pianist, having studied both in the United States and Germany.

Prior to her marriage in 1909, Mrs. Anderson taught at the New York College of Music and at Asheville School.

Mrs. Anderson was a member of Trinity Episcopal Church here.

In addition to Mrs. Henke, Mrs. Anderson is survived by a sister, Mrs. Charles A. Webb of Asheville, several nieces and nephews, including Mrs. Ralph E. Lee Sr. and H. Kendall Northup of Asheville, Mrs. Charles G. Blankenship of Weaverville and Mrs. Arney R. Childs and Mrs. Thomas R. Ruff of Columbia, S. C.; three grandchildren, Jane, Joan and David Henke of Wilmington and several great nieces and nephews.

R. L. ANDERSON TELLS GRAPHIC STORY OF FIGHT

Chief Bos'n's Mate Was Bombed On Beach At Tarawa

Chief Bos'n's Mate R. L. (Bill) Anderson, who has spent some 16 years in the U. S. navy, got his biggest thrill out of the landing on Tarawa.

On a visit here to his mother, Mrs. Rosa B. Anderson, 127 Virginia avenue, he related, somewhat reluctantly because he is not given to talk, his experience in that fight.

It was early morning, he said, and he was stationed as a lookout, keeping his eye peeled for mines as his ship, a destroyer, slid through the water approaching the Jap-held island.

"I had been in the navy long enough to know what was happening," he grinned. "I was one scared boy. I wouldn't kid you about that."

He explained that it was part of the destroyer's job to nose in, leading the way for the bigger battle wagons, and of course to do a little pasting of Jap installations also.

Helped Stack Stores

"I got pretty excited while the bombardment was going on," he laughed. "I must have been excited for the first thing I knew I had volunteered to land and help stack stores. I did and we worked as hard as men ever worked getting the stuff straightened up.

"Then the Jap planes came over and we dived in foxholes. It was one of those times that makes it easy to believe that a foxhole is the shallowest depression on the earth's surface and the most exposed. When it was all over the stores were all gone.

"We could hear the engines of those Jap planes coming before they got over us. Then we could see the flame from their exhausts, looking sort of blue against the night sky.

"Altogether the bombing did not last more than about 20 minutes, but it seemed like a couple of lifetimes. It was a good while after that until we got the 'all clear' and crawled out and made our way back to the ship."

R. L. ANDERSON

The interviewer got the impression that this sailor would have preferred a foxhole that could be maneuvered like a destroyer while the bombs were falling. Just waiting to see if a bomb had his number on it without being able to dodge was a rather rugged experience, he said, and intimated that he was glad when he was back aboard his ship, which at least could move when the bombs started dropping.

Watched Tank Fight

Tarawa was mostly a lot of coral reefs, a sandy beach and a few logs and stags remaining from what had been trees.

When he got back on board ship however, he didn't stay, that is not any longer than the next landing operation.

On one occasion he tells how he stood on the deck of his ship and watched a bunch of American tanks slugging it out on shore with a bunch of Jap tanks.

"You would have to see that to believe it," he said. "It was just like seeing a technicolor picture unfolding right in front of your eyes on a screen miles wide. It was really something."

His final thrill came when his ship was attached to the now famous task force 58 in a lot of action that he can't discuss yet.

Mrs. Anderson Dies At 101

Mrs. Rosa Belle Penland Anderson, 101, of 127 Virginia Ave., died Saturday at her home after a long illness.

Mrs. Anderson, the oldest member of the West Asheville Presbyterian Church, was born May 2, 1873, the daughter of George and Eliza Penland, whose family settled in Candler in 1796 on one of the first land grants.

In addition to gardening, Mrs. Anderson's hobbies included cooking, canning, knitting and quilting.

In a newspaper article commemorating her 99th birthday, she attributed her long life to the words in the scriptures, "The Lord Is My Shepherd" and "Love thy Neighbor."

She was married in 1891 to Rufus L. Anderson, who died in 1914.

Surviving are two sons, James A. Anderson of Asheville and George Anderson of Pelham; three daughters, Mrs. Margaret E. Byerly and Mrs. Eula Mae Mull of Asheville and Mrs. Doris Bowker of St. Petersburg, Fla.; a brother, Bron Penland of Enka; 26 grandchildren, 23 great-grandchildren and 12 great great-grandchildren.

MRS. RUFUS ANDERSON

Services will be held at 11 a.m. Tuesday at Groce Funeral Home. The Rev. Jeff Kesterson will officiate. Burial will be in Penland Cemetery in Candler. Pallbearers will be Jack, Jim and Roy Byerly, Jim Anderson, Bob and Tom Felkel and Frank Mull.

George Arthur, Artist Works With Hardwood

Boy Who Learned Art On Vanderbilt Estate Now Has Own Shop

By VIRGINIA TERRELL

George Arthur was a boy about thirteen years old when Miss Eleanor Vance and Miss Charlotte Yale, who had come from Chicago to live in the south, organized a club of boys to study cabinet work and carving, at Biltmore, in connection with the industries that George W. Vanderbilt was establishing on his vast estate.

That was about 1902, and now George Arthur has one of the most unique shops in the state, where cabinet work is done to order, where most beautiful hand carving is not only done commercially, but is taught, and where old furiture is made new.

All of George Arthur's training came through the Biltmore Industries, where he remained from the time he was thirteen until about ten years ago when he became teacher of manual training at the Asheville School. A year ago he opened The Artisan's Shop in West Asheville, in one small building. A few months ago he took over the building next to it, and has three men at work constantly.

One of the most recent additions to his work has been two classes in wood carving. The classes started with two Asheville women who wanted to learn the art, and grew, gradually, with their friends, until two classes had to be formed.

Mr. Arthur continues to do all of the carving that is done for commercial purposes, and it is his work that has been put into St. Mary's Chapel, where perhaps is the most beautiful work in a small church anywhere. The pews were made in his shop, and he did the carving on the rood screen.

From the time he began work in the boy's club, until he was sixteen, cabinet work and carving were done after school hours, but at sixteen he went into the shop that Mr. Vanderbilt had established, as assistant foreman—shortly afterward the foreman left, and although still a boy, Mr. Arthur was put in charge. Sometime later the shop was enlarged, and he still continued at the head of it. When the Industries were sold to Fred Seely he went to Grove Park and for several months continued in charge of the shop.

His brother, Frank Arthur, who also learned carving under the direction of Miss Vance, went with Miss Vance and Miss Yale to Tryon where they opened the Tryon Toy Makers' Shop, and here he does all the carving that is done for the Tryon Shop.

As a matter of keeping it in the family the small son of George Arthur is learning under his father, and has already carved a mantle which has been placed over the fireplace in the West Asheville shop.

When he left the Biltmore Industries at Grove Park, Mr. Arthur became connected with Asheville School, and continued as head of the shop there for several years. Since opening his own shop he has built up a large business of order work, making the designs himself, having the cabinet work done in the shop, and then doing his own carving. He has done several particularly good pieces of reproduction of period furniture, and in the shop are kept several pieces for models and samples.

Among the pieces now in the shop are tables, chests, cigarette boxes, candlesticks, magazine racks, book cases, chairs, cupboards, mirror, trays, and letter openers.

BY MARY JOHNSTON AVERY. 4-7-29

ONE of the most interesting attractions that all Asheville visitors sooner or later go to see is the artisans shop of George Arthur.

This very quaint little shop is in West Asheville and peeps up at highway No. 10 from its resting place on the side of the hill. It faces that majestic parade of mountains over which Pisgah reigns and at its back stretches the French Broad river. The shop itself looks interesting, but one instantly discovers that its owner is the real interest. When a boy of 13 begins his life work, it is no surprise to find him a past master of his art at 41.

KNOWN FAR AND WIDE.

That is why George Arthur and his Artisans Shop is known far and wide. He began wood carving and cabinet making at 13 during that period of ornate design, and has followed it all the way to the present stage of realism which has become the key note of the age.

"I cannot do a job well unless I am interested and I could not work away from my mountains," said this very soft voiced mountain artisan as he styles himself. "Whether the job is a mantel or a wall panel, a sideboard or the design of a table and chairs to match a special sideboard, I just must be interested."

And while he was talking we sliked through this unusual shop where the lost art of cabinet making is being revived. In looking at the many perfect pieces of work you wondered how a hand could be so sure, and eyes not only true to a line of a hair's breadth, but open to the value of cutting depths for light and shade to the one-hundredth part of an inch; and then there must be such a feeling for form—with a something besides—and we fancy it is in that something that lies the art of cabinet making as is done by George Arthur.

A MAGIC TOUCH.

In looking at the work one finds admiration almost overpowered by a certain envy for the man who can work in wood, and so materialize his ideas that by some magic touch he transforms the very heart of the forest and reproduces its life and beauty for the delight of the eye.

Before us was a youthful looking man, rather short, lithe and with sunburned skin, quiet and possessing the poise common to those who work with nature. In looking at him I saw more, and further back of the man, to a small boy of thirteen in the vested choir of All Souls' church, Biltmore, built by the late George Vanderbilt.

"There I started out into the world singing in the choir," said Mr. Arthur. And it is easy to see the youth singing the church anthems with his eyes lifted to the glory verse carved high around the ceiling, "Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me praise His Holy name." It would seem it they had carved itself into the very fiber of the youth, for the most beautiful pieces of the man's art have been done from the praise of God.

"Just how did you start wood carving?" I asked as we admired an exquisite sideboard and then a miniature stamp box.

STRATED AT BILTMORE.

"We started as a boys' club of All Soul's church, Biltmore. Miss Vance and Miss Yale organized this club in 1901 and limited it to twelve of us mountain boys. Then after the clubs was organized the next question was what should the club do. It was Miss Vance who suggested wood carving. In the beginning we boys just made crude wooden toys for church bazaars. For a year we did it for the fun of it, and then, after we had learned to do real work, we were paid so much an hour. It was thus I began my life work, and I have been too busy and too interested to think of anything else."

Then Mr. Arthur remembered something equally as interesting to the industrial world as his wood carving.

"Miss Yale and Miss Vance soon realized the boys were receiving all the attention and the girls were being neglected, so the idea of weaving presented itself. And the homespun weaving and wood carving became the Biltmore Industries—an industry now known all over the world."

WORK ON OLD LOOMS.

He then told how the warp was sent out to the mountain women to weave, how old looms were put in shape, vegetable dyes brought back in use, grandmother's quilt patterns resurrected, and drab lives became colorful through the vision of two women.

"But what did you boys do for models?" I asked.

"Through the interest and support and guidance of the late George Vanderbilt and his wife we had unusual advantages," was the answer. "Purity of design was taught directly from old pieces—Sheraton, Hepplewhite, Chippendale—all in Mrs. Vanderbilt's collection itself, or from books of the Vanderbilts' splendid library."

In one corner of Mr. Arthur's shop was noticed a plain Windsor chair and near it a faithful copy of a beautiful little inlaid Sheraton. In another part of the shop an exquisite fireside bench with the most delicate carving, and near by a perfect copy of a Sheraton sideboard. Then there were picture frames in every variety of size and design, grouped near a saucy woodpecker standing guard over a tiny stamp box, and a wise old owl perched on the end of a paper cutter.

A FORGOTTEN ART.

"There are no more cabinet makers," said George Arthur as he led us in and around his shop, where six or seven men were busy working under his direction and that of his partner, Mr. Swift. "No cabinet makers in the sense of the ones of several generations ago," he corrected himself. "The manufactured furniture has about caused cabinet making to be a forgotten art. Men are not interested in a profession that takes so much time and patience. The age is in too big a hurry and we tire of things too quickly to take over much time in the making."

When our forefathers began their home making in America they brought skilled cabinet makers with them, or a colony or neighborhood would have their own cabinet maker, and from their expert fingers we have our rare old four posters, secretaries, and tables that we are just now learning to fight, bleed and impoverish ourselves to acquire—and it is their art that Mr. Arthur has revived.

An interesting story is told of how Mr. Arthur found models for his work in his early pioneering days. On the terrace of Biltmore House are two great marble lions. George Arthur, aged 14, saw them and he liked them, so he modeled them in clay and then made them in walnut book ends. Here was the work of tool, pencil and chisel. Biltmore house has been Mr. Arthur's big inspiration from its Gothic gargoyles, which evidently exercised a strong appeal over the boy's imagination—all the way to its many sets of rarest period furniture. Biltmore House has been a boom that was freely offered by Mrs. Vanderbilt.

MAN OF MANY SIDES.

Mr. Arthur stayed with the Biltmore industries for 18 years and the last four he was superintendent of it. At that time there were 20 workers and its chief executive had to possess more than the artist's qualifications, but George Arthur is a master of many trades, for besides being a skilled wood carver, for which he won a medal at the Panama-Pacific international exposition in 1915, he is an excellent worker in clay, a practical weaver, a good man at the blacksmith's forge when special hinges and metal brackets are needed, and for the nine years he was head of the wood carving department of the Asheville School for Boys he was their coach for soccer.

This not being quite enough Mr. Arthur is the directing genius of many a home around Asheville. An unsightly brick mantel is transformed into something exquisite by his master touch. A certain panel, screen, table or stool of his design transforms the conventional living room into one of individual distinction.

"Wood carving is not difficult," says Mr. Arthur, and to prove it for two years he has been conducting classes at his Artisans shop. Just about the smartest thing for the smart set of Asheville to do is to join this class and day after day you will find groups of young girls and matrons working hard over an elaborate chair, chest or any of the many fascinating models in the shop.

"This is a piece of Mr. Arthur's work," someone remarked as he admired the new window of a modern jewelry store in Asheville. It is a perfect example of modern realism where the workmanship of the window is so exquisite that it needs only one rare vase, or a delicate silver ornament to make a striking effect. And you can see Mr. Arthur's work in the most unexpected and unusual places. To comprehend the versatility of the artist all you have to do is to go to St. Mary's church and examine the dignity and beauty of the Rood Screen there, and see his work at the Biltmore Oteen bank.

It seems impossible that one man only 41 could have accomplished so much, but we remember this man must be interested to do a job well, and we wonder from whence comes this source of energy. There must be a silent bond between him and nature, or some power of the mounting sap that in the end gives him the fibre of the wood.

The secret of the forest seems to lie deep in this mountaineer's heart.

Scout Leaders Given Silver Beaver Awards

The Scoutmasters shown were given the Silver Beaver awards for outstanding records of service at the annual Scouters convention of Daniel Boone council last night at Central Methodist church. They are, left to right, J. N. Arthur, scoutmaster of Troop No. 3, of West Asheville, and James L. Hauser, scoutmaster of Troop No. 1 of Franklin. Mr. Arthur has been scoutmaster for 10 years of the troop, sponsored by West Asheville Methodist church, and Mr. Hauser has been leader of his troop, sponsored by Franklin Rotary club, for seven years. Mr. Hauser has organized several other troops and has helped in scout work with many troops. Mr. Arthur had had a troop with its quota of 33 boys since he took charge. Both have outstanding records of accomplishments and the most important thing is that both have done consistently good work, it was said.

Officers Are Installed, Awards Presented In Scouters' Convention

W. A. Dobson Of Atlanta Is Heard; Arthur, Hauser Are Given Honors.

W. A. Dobson of Atlanta, executive of region No. 6 of the Boy Scouts of America, made the principal address and Silver Beaver awards were made at the annual Scouters' convention of Daniel Boone council last night at Central Methodist church.

New Officers were installed and plans were made for expansion of the scout program in 1942.

Arthur, Houser Honored

Silver Beaver awards, which are made each year by the Daniel Boone council to scout leaders who have outstanding records of service, went to J. N. Arthur of Asheville and James L. Houser of Franklin.

W. H. Thorne presented the award to Mr. Arthur and Judge Hubert C. Jarvis made the presentation to Mr. Houser RUNS IN THE FAMILY -- In 1931, J. N. Arthur along with Robert Russell organized Boy Scout Troop 3 at Trinity Methodist Church. At the annual Scoutmaster's Court of Honor in City Auditorium tonight five of Arthur's grandsons will receive awards. Arthur, who was presented the Silver Beaver in 1941, served as scoutmaster of the troop for 12 years and is now a member of the troop committee. A son Charles W. Arthur is scoutmaster of the Troop. Here Jerry Starnes, who will receive Eagle rank tonight, checks in the scout handbook to see if grandfather can still tie the square knot. Looking on are Steve Starnes, Star; J. Nathan III, member of Troop 26, Avery's Creek, merit badge; Johnny Starnes, Star,and Charles W. Jr., first class.

TO Mr. J.N."Pap"Arthur

We friends and family of Mr. Arthur are here to-day to say "THANK YOU" for the many and wonderful things you did in the past for Scouting and for Troop 3. I'm sure Mr. Baden-Powell would have been pleased to have known such a fine man got involved and became a leader in the program he started. We know you were one of the founders of Troop 3 1930. and that you were the Scout-master for 13 years, a scout leader for 56 years, That you are a Silver Beaver. The highest award a Scouter can rescieve. To many of us you are much more. Because of you an estimate of more than 750 boys have been in Scouts, in Troop 3. and there has been 52 "EAGLES", and several boys have become Preachers, with many others out-standing citizens in other walks of life. Your leader-ship and good deeds have spread over the years, and still flow like a fresh mountain stream. You have ment so much to so many.

I don't know you Mr. Arthur as well as I would like to, but I do know many members of your family. All fine, Wonderful people, that were tought by you to Love, Honor and be helpful to our fellow-man. Several years ago I heard you talking to a Sunday School Class. You made a statement that I will always remember."Go to the Bible for the answers". In trying to find the right things to say to-day, thats where I found a Psalm that fits this part of your life.

You were a shepard to the boys of Troop 3. You led them through the trails of Love, Truth and Knollage, for the betterment of Scouting. When the trails were hard and hazzardous your strength and guidance was out-standing. You left no-thing to fear. You were there to lead, give under-standing,and to be helpful. Your cup of Goodness over flowed. It will flow for-ever. Thank you Mr. Arthur for helping me be a Scouter and for the many things you did for Troop 3. to make it one of the best in the Country. All Scouting Thanks you, especialy Troop 3.

Historic WNC Boy Scout troop finds success after regrouping

By Angela Jones
STAFF WRITER

ASHEVILLE — One of Buncombe County's oldest Boy Scout troops is back in business and boasting strong membership after reorganizing two years ago.

"I've always thought that the Boy Scouts is one of the finest programs there is for building character and responsibility, and for teaching leadership," said Paul Mann, a former member of the county's historic Boy Scout Troop 3 and the grandfather of a current member.

Two of Mann's sons, Mike and Christopher, finished their time in the troop as Eagle Scouts, the highest rank possible.

Troop 3 was started in 1933 by J. Nathaniel Arthur through what was then the West Asheville Methodist Church.

"Our troop was very active during the war years," said Tom Harrison, who joined the troop in 1940 when he was 12 years old. "We collected all kinds of things — paper, cans, old tires, all sorts of stuff for the war effort."

During the time shortly before the Korean War, the troop was temporarily disbanded because its leaders were drafted. In 1953, the troop was reorganized under Committee Chairman John May, along with Harrison, Bill VanVaulkenburgh, Malcom Gamble, James Hutchinson and several others.

"I guess you could say I was suckered into it," said May. "My son asked me one weekend why there was no Boy Scout troop at the church, so I went and asked the pastor, and he said that he didn't know, but he'd leave it up to me to find out.

"It was a good experience, though, and I'm proud of it. I enjoyed it."

During the 1950s, 60s and 70s, Troop 3 grew. In fact, they had so many members, it was decided to help another troop get started. The new troop was Troop 138, located in Abernathy Methodist church.

In 1982, Troop 3 was disbanded again, this time due to lack of participants.

"We ran out of boys in the church, you see," said Troop 3 Committee member Bob McAfoos. "The boys that were in the troop grew up, and there weren't any little boys coming up behind them, so we went away for a little while until we had some more boys."

In 2000, McAfoos and former members Mann and Dwight Whitlock found more boys who wanted to participate in scouting and reorganized the old troop.

Greg Hutchinson, who had joined Troop 138 as a boy, returned to Troop 3 and currently serves as its Scout Master. His son Nathan is a member of Troop 3.

"It's pretty cool being in Troop 3. Everyone is at the same rank right now, because there's only like seven or eight of us," Nathan Hutchinson said.

During a week at Camp Daniel Boone, the troop worked on and earned nearly 30 merit badges.

"We got a lot done for there not being a lot of people there," Nathan Hutchinson said. "Sometime next month, we're going on a scout trip to the lake, and my dad's friend is going to bring his boat, so we can work on the water skiing and motor boating badges."

ASHEVILLE GETS ANOTHER SCHOOL

The Institution Is To Be Located Near Sulphur Springs.

First of the Buildings To Be Ready By September 1.

THE PRINCIPALS ARE NEWTON MITCHELL ANDERSON AND CHAS. ANDREWS MITCHELL OF CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The final arrangements have been made to plans which will insure to Asheville one of the most important educational institutions in the state.

The two former principals of the University School of Cleveland, O., will establish a school on similar lines a few miles from here in the direction of Sulphur Springs, to be known as "Asheville School." Work on the buildings will begin at once and will be hastened as much as possible, as it is the intention to have the sessions of the school open in the early fall. The two principals are Newton Mitchell Anderson and Charles Andrews Mitchell. They were principals of the University school from 1890 until last year.

The first move in connection with the establishment of the school here was the visit of Mr. Anderson to Asheville last July. Mr. Anderson met E. B. Atkinson of Natt Atkinson's Sons' company's real estate agency, and told him of his plans, and the negotiations for the necessary land have since been conducted through this firm.

Mr. Anderson had previously looked all over the country for a suitable location, and had decided that Asheville was the most preferable. A number of sites near the city were investigated. A location about four miles from here in the direction of Weaverville was very favorably considered for a time, but was finally abandoned in favor of the Sulphur Springs site, as the latter had better railroad and other facilities, and the scenery and the land itself were preferable.

THE SITE.

The site for the main buildings will be on a beautiful eminence about 1000 feet west of Sulphur Springs. The land was purchased from H. Batterham. In addition to this about 240 acres near by was secured from the Asheville Electric company. The buildings will command a magnificent view, and will be surrounded by a grove of oaks. The best landscape artists will be employed to beautify the grounds.

The main buildings will be three in number, and, including verandas, the length of each will 230 feet. The lower part of the buildings will be brick and the upper stories will be constructed of frame construction with cement finish. One of the buildings will be ready for occupancy by September 1.

The buildings will be of pleasing architecture, substantial in material and construction and tasteful in finish. They will be heated by steam, lighted by electricity and equipped with an excellent system of ventilation.

The teachers will be selected with reference to their recognized ability. All the teachers of the upper forms will be college graduates who have had successful experience. The teachers of the lower forms will be women who have had thorough training. The school will not be connected with any particular denomination, though prayers of the Episcopal service will be read at the opening of the school each day. There will be a service Sunday mornings and Bible class Sunday afternoons.

FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN.

The school will be for boys and young men. To be admitted to the lowest grade students must not be less than nine years of age. For the last four forms there will be two courses of study, the classical and the scientific. The classical course will prepare boys to enter any college or university. The scientific course will prepare boys for technical schools, and give a thorough English education to those who go immediately into business.

The tuition fee will cover the living expenses except for clothing, and all school expenses except for books and stationery.

The efforts of Mr. Atkinson have been an important factor in bringing the school to Asheville. Asheville is indebted to him for the part he has taken in the matter, as he has worked energetically for nearly a year to bring the matter to a successful termination.

Mr. Anderson and his family, consisting of his father, mother and sister, are here to reside permanently.

E. B. ATKINSON ALSO GETS INTO THE RUNNING

Announces Candidacy for Nomination for Office of Clerk of Court.

With little more than a month remaining before the democratic primary when candidates of the party will be selected to make the race for election at the November election, the "boys" are coming out into the open with such a degree of cheerfulness and earnestness that would indicate a right lively time when the day of the primary election rolls around. Already there are several candidates out for two or three of the offices, while today another entry was added for the office of clerk of the Superior court; E. B. Atkinson, a resident of West Asheville, making formal announcement that he was before the people for that nomination.

The "coming out" of Mr. Atkinson now places two gentlemen in the race for the office, Marcus Erwin, the present encumbent, having announced a few days ago. Mr. Atkinson is a son of the late Nat. Atkinson, who for years, was prominent in politics in this county and section. He has been a resident of Asheville and this section for many years and, his friends contend, if nominated he would fill the office most creditably. Mr. Atkinson in the course of his formal announcement, found elsewhere in today's paper, says that "it is believed a change in administration will be good for the health of the democratic party."

COMMISSION CLOSES WEST ASHEVILLE CASE

J. G. Merrimon and E. B. Atkinson Are Only Witnesses Against Buckeye Co.

No final action was taken by the members of the corporation commission, which met in this city yesterday to hear the complaints filed by J .G. Merrimon and E. B. Atkinson against the Buckeye Water company of West Asheville. Ihe afternoon session of the commission, whcich was held at the Battery Park hotel, was very brief and only two witnesses appeared, Mr. Merrimon and Mr. Atkinson.

It was stated that the principal grievance put forward by these gentlemen against the water company was because the company failed to supply water last summer.

The members of the commission returned to Raleigh last night and it is expected that they will give out a ruling shortly.

THE OLD ATKINSON HOME on Westwood Place is a West Asheville landmark. Built in 1881 of handmade brick, it was bought shortly afterward by Capt. Natt Atkinson. A few years later his son, E. B. Atkinson, began a long residence in the home. In its earliest days, the house was one of very few in what is now West Asheville and was used for a while as a summer, country home. The home and some five acres are now owned by Dr. and Mrs. C. C. Bennett.

The use of common sense is the all important factor in buying the various pieces of furniture, rugs, drapes, etc. that go into a home for the reason that we plan to live with our selections for a long time. This calls for a fine quality in furnishings that present an orderly appearance throughout the home with each room presenting a pleasant, welcoming picture.

Mr. Atkinson, with the homemaker in mind, has adhered to the policy by offering the "finest in fine furniture" that will prove pleasing to the most discriminate buyer.

Mr. Atkinson was transferred to Asheville from Charlotte about six years ago as representative of General Mills in charge of the Western North Carolina territory, a position he still holds.

He was born in Wadesboro, N. C., received his preparatory education in its city schools; Mars Hill College, Mars Hill; King's Business College, Charlotte; and has had extensive courses in accounting.

His first position was that of accountant with the Butter Cup Ice Cream Company in Hamlet.

He left the above position to become associated with General Mills in Charlotte.

At the beginning of World War 2, Mr. Atkinson took leave of absence from General Mills to do essential civilian work with the Burlington Mills in Greensboro, and during this time he also managed a grocery store in Greensboro.

At the conclusion of World War 2, Mr. Atkinson returned to General Mills as office manager in Charlotte. A short time later he was transferred to Greensboro as territory representative, and from there General Mills sent him to Charlotte as District Supervisor covering four states, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia. And from there he came to West Asheville about six years ago in charge of W.N.C. territory.

Plans Go Forward For President's Visit

By STEVE MORRIS
Times Staff Writer

Preparations continued today for tomorrow's visit to Asheville by President Richard M. Nixon.

The visit in support of the campaign of Luke Atkinson for the 11th District Congressional seat is scheduled to begin at 2 p.m. when the wheels of the presidential jet Air Force One touch down at Asheville Airport, and will end 45 minutes later after a rally at City-County Plaza.

Related story on Page 17.

In the meantime, arrangements were being made for security, seating, press coverage and a thousand other smaller details.

Ron Ledgett, advance man on the presidential staff, said the motorcade route from the airport to the city would not be made public.

Asheville Police Chief J. C. Hall described security arrangements for the visit as tight, and said the entire city police force had been assigned duties in connection with the protection of the President.

Secret Service agent Buck Lyda, who is coordinating the security details, praised local agencies for cooperation in the face of what he called late notification.

He said cooperation from city and county law enforcement officials, the State Highway Patrol and the State Bureau of Investigation had been "excellent."

Gene Anderson, state Republican executive director, is coordinating the work. He said, "Its a tremendous logistical problem to get all these things set up."

He said arrangements are being made for at least 150 members of the national press, besides the local press representatives

City Manager Phin Horton announced that city employes will be given time off during the presidential visit, but said a skeleton staff will remain on duty.

Horton said the city would make special clean-up efforts around the airport ramp and also in the area of City-County Plaza. He said City Hall would be decorated with bunting for the occasion, and that all city officials and department heads will be wearing their blue blazers with City of Asheville crests on the pocket.

Gordon H. Greenwood, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners said there are no plans at present to close the Courthouse, but said, "I certainly would be in favor of any county employe taking time off to go see the President of the United States."

Greenwood and Asheville Mayor Wayne S. Montgomery asked that all citizens fly their U. S. flag during the President's visit.

R. Curtis Ratcliff, clerk of Superior Court, said he will ask that all courts recess Tuesday during the time of the President's visit.

Federal officials in Asheville have not announced whether federal employes will be given time off.

Young people from at least five counties have been active in the preparations. Buck Belmore, vice president of the Young Republican Club at the University of North Carolina at Asheville, is coordinating their activities.

He said he expects thousands of young people of high school and college age to turn out.

City schools will be dismissed at 12:30 p.m. and county schools at 1 p.m. to permit students to attend the ceremony.

Anderson said party functionaries from across the state are being sent special invitations.

It was learned that Miss Connie Lerner of Asheville, the reigning Miss North Carolina, will lead the pledge of allegiance from the platform from which the President will speak.

The Asheville High School band is scheduled to play, and Atkinson will introduce the President. The West Asheville businessman-candidate is also expected to meet Nixon at the airport and ride with him in the motorcade to the City-County plaza.

Abstract:

Luke Atkinson came from Waynesboro, NC, where he worked with General Mills. When he was transferred to Asheville 39 years ago he decided to open a furniture store here.

10 He compares the city over the past years. It was predicted that the new 4-lane cut through the mountain would kill West Asheville. In reality it relieved traffic pressure and business is better than ever.

78 Originally West Asheville was to have been the center of the city, but the surveyor, who was sent down to lay out plans, got drunk and surveyed the wrong side of the river.

91 His West Asheville store serves customers from Burnsville, Canton, Greenvillle, Waynesville and Black Mountain. Downtown draws business from Charlotte, Spartinburg, Murphy and Atlanta. Westgate was one of the first malls. George Coggins, developer of Westgate, said that grass would grow in the streets of West Asheville, but this was not true, and now Westgate has lost out to some of the other malls. Business in West Asheville is better than ever.

Obituary

Luke Atkinson, 98, of Delaware Avenue, Asheville, died Wednesday, November 11, 2009, at Memorial Campus, Mission Hospital.

A native of Wadesboro, he was a son of the late James and Effie Ratliff Atkinson. He was also preceded in death by his first wife, Frances Atkinson, who died in 1952, and by 11 brothers and sisters.

Mr. Atkinson graduated from Lilesville High School, Lilesville, NC, in 1931. He then graduated from Mars Hill College and Kings Business College in Charlotte.

Luke worked at various jobs until WWII, when he became one of the first 2 men to register in his county. He was not admitted to military service at that time due to his job with Burlington Mills, furnishing nylon to the U.S. Government to be used for tow ropes for Army gliders. He later worked for General Mills, who transferred him to Asheville in 1950.

In 1955, he established Luke Atkinson Furniture Store on the corner of Haywood and Brevard Roads in West Asheville, where it is still doing business, managed by his son. The building was constructed in 1917 and is a unique part of historical West Asheville: it marked the end of the line of West Asheville's first trolley car.

He was a former Asheville City Councilman and Vice-mayor, and member and past-president of both the Asheville Rotary Club and the Asheville Merchants Association as well as charter member and past president of the West Asheville Business Association. He served on the Board of Directors of the Better Business Bureau.

He was also a member, former Sunday school teacher, and Deacon Emeritus of Calvary Baptist Church.

Luke is survived by his wife, Mary Beth Starnes Atkinson; daughters, Becky Aydelette, Linda Benton, her husband, Ron, and Sally Atkinson; son, Mark Atkinson and his wife, Gail; seven grandchildren, Jim and Nathan Aydelette, Tanya Bush, Allison Smith, Kristy Scholtz, and Seth and Jonathan Atkinson; and 11 great-grandchildren.

A funeral service for Luke will be held at 2:00 p.m. Sunday at Calvary Baptist Church with the Rev. Drs. Buddy N. Corbin and Tom Sawyer officiating. Interment will follow at Green Hills Cemetery.

His family will receive friends at the church one hour prior to the service.

Memorials may be made to Calvary Baptist Church, 531 Haywood Road, Asheville, NC 28806.

Atkinson, Natt Confederate States Army

(Known in Asheville, N. C., as Captain Natt Atkinson)

John Preston Arthur in his book, History of Western North Carolina, (1730 to 1913) has a sketch on Captain Natt Atkinson at page 453.

Arthur states that Capt. Natt was born on November 15, 1832 in McMinn County, Tennessee, near Charleston. That he was a graduate of Hiwassee College and attended Col. Wilson's private school in Alamance County, N. C. That he married Harriett Newell Baird in Buncombe County, N. C., February 2, 1858 and that there were twelve children. That he was admitted to the Asheville Bar in 1868; purchased the Asheville Citizen in 1870 from Randolph Shotwell who was shot in both legs by Colonel Virgil S. Lusk, U. S. Attorney on the public square in a public brawl.

That Captain Natt was afterwards President of the Asheville, Atlanta and Baltimore Railroad and started the construction of the first street railway in Asheville. That Capt. Natt also served in the General Assembly of North Carolina from Buncombe County.

That during the war, he was a Captain in "Gen. M. Vaughan's Brigade of the Confederate Army and was one of the personal escort of Hon. Jefferson Davis on his flight southward from Richmond via Charlotte in April, 1865."

county, N. Y., and the Albian Academy. He was thoroughly trained in the milling business, under the efficient instruction of his father, with whom he remained in the milling business in Orleans county, N. Y., until 1860, at which time he began merchandising at East Saganaw, Michigan, where he conducted an extensive business for six years. In 1867 he located at Cleveland, Ohio, as representative of the Saganaw Salt Company, which company he represented for five years, in the meantime running a grain commission house and marine elevator in Cleveland. In 1872 he bought an interest in the Cleveland Axle Manufacturing Company, and was manager of the business for fifteen years, owning a controlling interest. In 1887 he moved to Asheville and built the Asheville Ice Works and the Asheville Flouring Mill. His ice factory has a capacity of twenty-five tons per day, and the flour mill has a capacity of seventy-five barrels of flour and 300 bushels of meal per day. This mill is furnished with the latest and most improved machinery for roller flour mills, and is one of the most perfect in all of its parts in the South. In connection with his ice and mill enterprises he is also running a large coal and coke business, handling over 7,000 tons annually. He is also largely interested in the Mingo Junction Steel Works and the Laughlin Nail Works, of Wheeling, West Virginia. The nail works are the most extensive in the Union, and turn out two hundred and eighty thousand kegs of nails annually. Mr. Collins has been actively engaged in large business enterprises from boyhood, and has acquired an experience and knowledge which places him in the front rank of the practical business men in the South. Coupled with this an enterprising spirit and indomitable industry, he is a valuable acquisition to the business circles of any community, and Asheville, is singularly fortunate in securing him as one of its citizens. And in Asheville, and many other localities, rare opportunities are offered capitalists of like ken, enterprise and pluck. Mr. Collins was united in matrimony in 1859, to Miss Harriet E., an accomplished daughter of George Rasenburg, of New York. To this union have been added four children, viz., Caroline A. (wife of Hon. Edward E. Eagan, of Cleveland, Ohio), Willie E., George R. and Helen, all residents of Asheville. Mr. Collins and his entire family are members of the Presbyterian Church, and rank with the most refined, influential and highly esteemed citizens of Asheville.

Hon. NATT ATKINSON, generally known as "Natt" Atkinson, at present writing a prominent dealer in real estate in Asheville, was born November 15th, 1832, and is a son of Colonel John and Rebecca Bonner Atkinson, of McMin county, Tennessee, natives of South Carolina, and of Scoth-Irish and German descent. His father was an extensive and successful planter, and an able and influential legislator in his day, having represented his Senatorial District several years in the State Senate. He was considered one of the safest and most influential members of that honorable body. He died in 1840.

In those days, merit, moral worth and intelligence was the criterion by which men were adjudged qualified to hold high and responsible positions, monetary considerations having little weight in the selection of public servants. Hence, the legislative halls of the State and nation were filled with true patriots and unimpeachable gentlemen.

This year, 1840, seems to have been a sadly fatal one in the history of the Atkinson family, as himself, wife and two daughters died during the same year (and, in fact, within one month) during an epidemic fever then extensively prevalent. "Natt," as he is familiarly called by a host of friends, was educated at Hiwassee College and at the celebrated Dr. Alexander Wilson's School at Milville, Alamance county, N.C. After finishing his studies at school, he engaged in farming, which he continued to follow until 1861, at which time he enlisted in the Confederate army as First Lieutenant in the First Tennessee Cavalry, and continued in command of his company until 1862, when he returned home and raised a company (A) of his own, and joined the 62d Tennessee Regiment of mounted Infantry, as Captain of his company, and as Senior Captain of the Regiment, which he often commanded at Vicksburg and other places. He was assigned duty in the western army, and rendered valuable services at the seige of Vicksburg. He, as commander of his regiment, was subsequently transferred to Virginia with Vaughan's Brigade, under command of Major General Echols, of the Western Virginia army. This and Morgan's were the only two brigades that safely brought all of their men out of Virginia, and met President Davis at Charlotte. They were personally complimented by President Davis, and were as full of zeal for our noble cause as when they first enlisted. They were selected among others as President Davis' escort to the Mississippi, escorting him as far as Washington, Ga., where they were met by Federal troops, and Mr. Davis advised that all the troops be surrendered, dividing all the money he had among his men—$28.50 in silver to each man. But for the wise counsel of their beloved President, these noble veterans of many a battle-field would have died in their tracks before surrendering their great leader. (Mr. Davis, as is well known, attempted to make his way across the Mississippi without troops.) These events occurred about two weeks after General Lee's surrender at Appomattox. Captain Atkinson returned home and resumed the study of law, which he had begun prior to his entering the army, and was admitted to the bar in 1868. He practiced law for several years at Asheville. In 1870 he bought out the Asheville Citizen newspaper, which he edited and published nearly three years.

The Citizen was then we believe the only Democratic newspaper published in the State west of Charlotte.

In 1873 he sold the paper and moved to his farm on the Swannanoa river, eight miles above Asheville, and engaged in the cultivation of fine fruit, having the finest fruit farm in Western North Carolina, consisting of over twenty-three hundred fruit trees. Captain Atkinson practically demonstrated the great possibilities of fruit culture in this State. He exhibited specimens of his fruit at all the State and national expositions, and won the medal at the Philadelphia Centennial, and the Marshal Pinkney Wilder Medal at Baltimore in 1877. This medal was awarded him for the exhibition of one hundred specimens of the finest apples in the United States and Canada, and was said by a Baltimore paper to have been the finest specimens of apples ever exhibited in the world. Captain Atkinson closely studied the cultivation of fruit, and cultivated on a scientific basis, and was amply rewarded by a rich harvest; and to him, more than to any other man, is due the credit of demonstrating the wonderful possibilities of fruit growing as a paying industry in North Carolina. In 1878 Captain Atkinson was elected to represent Buncombe county in the General Assembly. During that session special efforts were made to reduce State expenditures. Captain Atkinson introduced and championed a resolution under the operation of which a reduction of one hundred and eighty thousand dollars was made in State expenditures. As an impressive, ready public speaker, Captain A. has but few superiors in the State. In 1882 he sold his farm and moved to Asheville, and engaged in the real estate business. And the writer believes he is sufficiently modest in the statement that Captain Atkinson, since locating in Asheville, has done more a dozen times over to develop and build up that city than any other man in it. It was mainly through his efforts that the Graded Schools of Asheville were established. And to his persistent efforts is largely due the establishment of the Asheville Sewerage System and the Electric Street Railway. He is President of the Atlanta, Asheville & Baltimore Railroad, to run from Roanoke, Va., via Asheville to Atlanta. He is also president of a belt-line railway, to run around the city of Asheville. Captain Atkinson is one of those aggressive and sagacious business men, who are ever grasping opportunities that others fail to see, and developing resources that others fail to find, and is a blessing to any community. He was married, in February, 1858, to Miss Harriet N., accomplished daughter of Israel and Mary Baird, of Asheville. To them have been born twelve children, viz: Natt B., Edward B., Charles B., Mary R., Frederick B. (deceased), Hugh H., Phillip G., Emma J., Lillie D., Paralee V., Edith and Charlotte B. Captain Atkinson and family are members of the M. E. Church, South.

Should the life of Captain Atkinson be spared a few more years, Western North Carolina, and the whole State as well, will have greater reasons to be proud that he ever made his home within her borders. Such intelligent, persistent energy as he possesses can never fail, and one day all that beautiful mountain country will bless and revere his name as one of its greatest benefactors.

Dr. JAMES ANTHONY BURROUGHS, a very talented and popular young physician of Asheville, was born December 8th, 1857, in Kanawha county, West Virginia, and is a son of James and Sarah Ruckel Burroughs, both natives of Bedford county, Virginia. His father was a highly esteemed merchant and planter, and located in West Virginia about the year 1853 and engaged in a general merchandise business. When the war began he enlisted in the Confederate army, and for gallant and meritorious conduct was soon promoted to the rank of Major, which position he held during the war. Doctor Burroughs attended school in Virginia, and subsequently entered the Medical College of Louisville, Kentucky. From that

TODAY AND YESTERDAY

4/9/39

By JAMES H. CAINE

Ashe. Citizen-Times 4/9/39

There are not many, perhaps, even among old-timers having a penchant for the history of their own state and section, who are aware of the fact that one of Asheville's pioneer citizens, Captain Natt Atkinson, had much to do with, and greatly aided in one of the closing tragedies of the War Between the States, when the Confederate president, the Hon. Jefferson Davis, fled South from Richmond by way of Charlotte, an event of which today, April 9, is the 74th anniversary.

The accidental discovery of this fact, bringing the day, the tragedy and one of its principal characters together, furnishes an opportunity to here revive the memory of another outstanding citizen of Asheville, who spent the greater part of his life furthering the interests of his community. And the surviving few who knew the captain and worked with him in days when shaping the future destinies of a struggling village was no sinecure, heartily agree in this estimate.

The son of Col. John and Rebecca Bonner Atkinson, Natt Atkinson was born in McMinn county, Tenn., November 15, 1832, and as a boy moved with his parents into North Carolina. He was one of twelve children, but that fact did not prevent him from getting as good an education as the times afforded. He attended Colonel Wilson's private school and Hiawassee college in Alamance county; as a young man he cast his lot in Buncombe, where in 1858 he married Harriet Elizabeth Baird, daughter of Israel and Mary Baird, entering one of the county's outstanding and oldest families.

* * * *

But young Atkinson was not to enjoy married life undisturbed, for the War Between the States called him, and many other young bridegrooms of those days, to fight for the Confederacy and all that it represented. He joined the First Tennessee cavalry as first lieutenant, but a year later raised a company of his own and served with the Army of the Potomac under Lee until the end of the war. He was present at the mournful scenes of Appomattox, and, as stated in a previous paragraph, Captain Atkinson's devotion to his former chief prompted him to remain with President Davis, following him and aiding him on his flight South until the Confederate president was captured at Irwinsville, Ga. Long years afterwards, whenever he could be induced to talk about the matter at all, Captain Atkinson would be greatly moved when relating the tragic events of a day he could never forget. "I begged his (Davis') Yankee captors to take me too," he once told a close friend, "it made my blood boil to see them putting chains on my old commander-in-chief. I never had any use for Yankees after that".

Incidentally, it may interest local readers to know that Captain Atkinson's son, E. B. Atkinson, who, as one of Asheville's old-timers is still 'going strong' in the real estate business, was born while his father was fighting with General Lee in Virginia. He, too, is inclined to get "hot under the collar" when speaking of his father's experiences at the capture of the Confederate president.

* * * *

Returning home to take up pursuits less dangerous than war, perhaps, but none too peaceful, Captain Atkinson was admitted to the Buncombe county bar in 1868, practicing here until 1873. In the interim, and loving excitement, he got plenty of it when he bought The Asheville Citizen, the only Democratic newspaper in the state west of Charlotte in 1870. He was a man of intrepid courage, and he needed all of it in days when newspapers were staunch party organs, and the duello was an accepted medium for the settlement of political disputes. Three years after acquiring it he sold The Citizen and returned to farming on the Swannanoa river, eight miles above Asheville, where he remained until 1882.

But in between changing scenes, the restless spirit and consuming energy of the former soldier found time to enter the political arena. He was elected to the state legislature in 1879, where he championed measures looking to the cutting of state expenditures. So well did he work that he succeeded in pushing through an enactment which saved North Carolina $180,000.

Back home again, and to keep busy, Captain Atkinson became president of the projected Atlanta, Asheville and Baltimore railway; and later began the actual construction of the first street railway in Asheville. He was also identified with the promotion and construction of other railways, and even found time to start the graded school system of Asheville on its way to future perfection.

* * * *

But, strangely enough, it was amid the quiet scenes of pastoral life that Captain Natt Atkinson achieved his greatest fame —as an orchardist. It is a matter of record, and not of imagination, that he planted and brought to successful cultivation 2,300 apple trees on the Swannanoa farm, and won first prizes at exhibitions in various sections of the country. At Baltimore one of the leading newspapers of that city declared that Mr. Atkinson had exhibited the finest apples ever grown in the world! It was practically the same story at the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition and the following year at New York; the Atkinson apples swept all before them.

Capt. Natt Atkinson was not an old man when he died at Salisbury in 1894. He was only 62 years old, but he had worked 100 years.

FRUIT GROWING,

As a fruit-growing section Western North Carolina enjoys peculiar advantages. Apples, peaches', pears and apricots thrive well, and find a congenial home among these mountains. As for apples, there is probably no part of the country where they flourish so well as in this section. The Centennial medal at Philadelphia awarded for fine apples was taken by Capt. Natt Atkinson, of this place, who was engaged in fruit growing at that time near Asheville; and in the following year, at the American Pomological Society's meeting, in the city of Baltimore, the same gentleman was awarded the Wilder medal for one hundred varieties of the finest apples.

Hear the News From West Asheville--Election Coming.

WEST ASHEVILLE, N. C., March 30, 1891.—A large meeting of the citizens of this progressive new town was held at Col. J. M. Jarrett's store, on Saturday. Col. F. Reynolds was called to the chair and N. Plamondon to act as secretary. Capt. Natt Atkinson explained the object of the meeting, and stated that he owned a charter to build a street railway from Asheville to the Sulphur Springs hotel. His plan is as follows: That the town of West Asheville vote a subscription of $30,000 to build a street railway through the main avenue of the town as above named, to be paid in thirty year 6 per cent. bonds on the condition that the town is to have a first mortgage lien on the road to secure the town against the interest and principal of said bond. Further, that the town bind the stockholders of the company to be responsible for the interest and principal of said bonds that the town issue in payment of their stock.

On motion a petition was drawn and enough signed to justify the town commissioners to order an election in May next.

Capt. Atkinson made a motion that the town issue $25,000 for improving the streets, which was seconded by B. G. Carter and all present.

An election will be held in May to elect a mayor and five town commissioners to serve for the next term.

WEST ASHEVILLE BONDS.

Capt. Atkinson's Reply to Mr. Carrier's Card.

EDITOR THE CITIZEN:—I have read with surprise, and I may add with regret, the card of Mr. E. G. Carrier touching the West Asheville bonds to aid a street railway.—Such arrogance and self-importance I have never before seen proclaimed in this county. Listen to his words: "You may state that I am opposed to it. You may safely say that West Asheville will not vote for it." This may be the imperial way they "stamp" things out where Mr. Carrier comes from, but in old North Carolina it is "news" for a man to thus proclaim himself a town or to announce that the people of a town belong to him and will not vote except as he dictates. Heretofore our people have been allowed to do as they please, but it may be that "a change has come over the spirit of their dreams" and in West Asheville Mr. Carrier must give out the "word" before they can act.

A few facts will probably aid the public to understand how the matter stands. Last winter in the midst of the mud and difficulties besetting travel, the board of aldermen and people of West Asheville concluded that something must be done so that they could come and go like other folks—and after much consultation it was determined by the authorities of the town to amend their charter, so as to enable them to improve their streets, and aid in the construction of a street railway. In accordance with their wishes, I prepared the amendments and they were forwarded to Raleigh and passed without opposition. At that time Mr. Carrier was in Florida, and it is likely if he had been here he would not have allowed it to be done, judging from his present assumption of authority. The truth is, Mr. Carrier has a railway project of his own on the opposite side of the town he thinks the one contemplated on the main street will seriously interfere with. His present plan is to draw everything over in the direction of his own railway, so as to enable him to get rid of his second rate property before he sells off his front on the present Sulphur Springs road, which is his most valuable.

The question is, will the people on the main road allow Mr. Carrier to turn everything over there to his individual benefit and to their own injury, for the present and future as well. More than forty of the voters of the town petitioned the board to submit this proposition to aid this "scheme," as he terms it, and it is sure fully double that number would have done likewise had the petition been presented to them, and it is certain they will vote for it unless it is understood that Mr. Carrier will not allow them to do so. Mr. Carrier's plan will turn all the travel, trade and business over on his railway line unless the people on the main road take care of their own affairs. I shall be content for them to decide the matter for themselves, and Mr. C. will doubtless have to let things take this course, however much he may be disposed to adopt the dog in the manger policy. If he will build the road on our side of the town he shall have the preference, but if he does not, some one else will, and he can rely on that. Natt Atkinson.

BI-METALLIC CONVENTION.

Capt. Atkinson Appointed a Delegate—His Views.

Capt. Natt Atkinson has received his commission from Governor Carr as a delegate to the Pan American Bi-Metallic convention to be held in St. Louis on the third of October. In a talk on the subject today Capt. Atkinson said to THE CITIZEN:

"I favor the organization of Bi-Metallic leagues in every township in the United States, with the object of making a fight in 1894 for the free coinage of silver. All other issues (national) should be shoved aside till this question is settled. If silver is to live we must make this fight—and make it now. Its only abiding place and hope is in the United States and if we will make one grand short, united and solid, by organization a glorious victory awaits us—and silver will be restored throughout the world. If the great weight and power of this government is put behind and around silver it will be re-established and enthroned not only here but the world over."

It possible Capt. Atkinson will attend the convention and start for the end indicated by his remarks.

J. M. Leach, of Waynesville, is also a delegate to this convention.

BETTER COUNTY ROADS

BUNCOMBE TAKES ANOTHER STEP THAT WAY.

Meeting In The Court House Addressed By Col. Roy Stone Of The Agricultural Department—The Railroad Question.

The double meeting held by citizens of Buncombe for the purpose of considering the railroad and county road questions was called to order shortly after 12 o'clock today in the court house by J. E. Rankin, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners. Will Aiken was made secretary. There was a good attendance of the people of city and county.

The railroad meeting was the first to take action, by the adoption of a motion made by Capt. Natt Atkinson, to the effect that the chairman should appoint a committee to communicate with the authorities of Transylvania county and with persons who would undertake building of the proposed railroad from Brevard to Asheville. This committee is to be composed of Chairman Rankin, three committeemen from Asheville township and one from each township outside the city.

At the conclusion of this business the question of bettering the roads of Buncombe county was considered, the County Commissioners as a body taking part in the c nference. Chairman Rankin introduced Col. Roy Stone, special agent and engineer of the Bureau of Road Inquiry, a branch of the Department of Agriculture at Washington. Col. Stone made an address that went right into the details of the momentous question of building county roads, and relating instances showing in various States how great a benefit had accrued from the adoption of measures for road improvement. The address was plain, practical and instructive.

Questions on particular points were asked by Col. Frank Coxe, W. S Cushman, W. D. Houghteling, W. G. Corpening and others and Col. Stone gave the benefit of his information upon the subject. At the close of the talk Col. Stone gave out copies of road literature published by the Agricultural department.

Geo. S. Powell offered the following, Which was adopted:

"Resolved, That we have heard with pleasure and benefit Gen. S e e's remarks on good roads; that one of the great needs of Buncombe county is better roads, and as a step in that direction be it

"Resolved, That the Board of County Commissioners be, and are hereby requested to appoint a committee of citizens for the purpose of investigating the question of better roads for Buncombe county. Said committee to report their investigations with recommendations to the Board of County Commissioners."

Upon the adoption of this the meeting adjourned.

NATT. ATKINSON DEAD

Natt Atkinson died of convulsions in his room on South Main street at 5:30 a. m. yesterday. Drs. Whittington and McBrayer were summoned just before he died, but were unable to help him. Nothing definite is known of the funeral arrangements as yet, as the deceased's brother, E. B. Atkinson, is in New York; but it is supposed that the funeral will be held today or tomorrow. The body was taken to the undertaking rooms of Brown, Blair & Co., and there awaits instructions.

CAPT. ATKINSON IS DEAD

HE DIED AT SALISBURY THIS MORNING.

His End Was Painless—He Had Every Attention and Happily Died Among Friends—The Remains Arrive Here Tomorrow.

The community was startled this morning by the news coming by telegraph from Salisbury, that Capt. Natt Atkinson, so well known in this community, had died there last night. The news spread rapidly, and soon there were many inquiries at THE CITIZEN office for confirmation of the report. THE CITIZEN wired the Salisbury Herald for details, and received the following this afternoon:

His Last Hours.

SALISBURY, N. C., Aug. 25.—[Special]—Capt. Natt Atkinson died here this morning at 7:30 o'clock at the home of Hon. Lee S. Overman. Death was caused by heart failure and was painless and peaceful.

Capt. Atkinson arrived at Salisbury Thursday night en route to Morehead for rest and recreation. Before reaching here he telegraphed Mr. Overman to meet him on business at the depot. Upon the arrival of the train Capt. Atkinson complained of feeling badly, and Mr. Overman insisted upon his remaining over here a day and night to rest.

The invitation was accepted and Capt. Atkinson was driven to the residence of Mr. Overman.

Shortly after his arrival at the house Capt. Atkinson was taken suddenly ill and, at his request, Dr. H. T. Trantham was called in about 10 o'clock and prescribed for him. After the departure of the physician the Captain was comparatively quiet until between 11 and 12 o'clock when he had another attack.

Dr. Trantham was again called in, and remained until daylight yesterday morning.

Capt. Atkinson appeared much better yesterday and about 6 o'clock in the afternoon was sitting on Mr. Overman's porch telling the latter's little daughter one of uncle Remus' "brer-fox" stories. He ate a light supper between 7 and 8 and was in good spirits.

About 10:30 last night Mr. C. A. Overman called at Capt. Atkinson's room and inquired after his health. He was told that the physician had dismissed the case and that he felt all right.

The rooms of Mr. Overman and Capt. Atkinson were on opposite sides of the hall and each was left open so that assistance could be rendered if necessary.

About 6 o'clock this morning Mr. Overman heard groaning in Capt. Atkinson's room and going there found his brother Lee at his (Capt. Atkinson's) bedside The Captain was suffering considerably and asked for Dr. Trantham, who was sent for and arrived about 7 o'clock. When the physician came the Messrs. Overman went to their rooms to complete their toilet.

Just as Mr. C. A. Overman had dressed Dr. Franklin came hurriedly to his room and announced that he thought Capt. Atkinson was dying. Both returned immediately, and in about five minutes death ensued.

The family of Capt. Atkinson were immediately apprised of his death, and his body was taken charge of by Undertaker R. M. Davis and prepared for burial.

The arrangements for the funeral and removal of the body will not be made until the family arrive.

Mrs. Lee S. Overman, who is a niece of Capt. Atkinson by marriage, was with him constantly yesterday and showed him every attention. The physician says that had he continued his journey Thursday night, he would have died on the cars.

His Last Years In Asheville.

For the last few years Capt. Atkinson had lived in West Asheville, but his figure was a familiar one in the city, and was known by all. His office on Court Square was the objective point of many visitors from day to day, as well as of citizens with whom he had business. He was the head of and the prime mover in many enterprises, and few committees were complete that did not include Capt. Natt Atkinson.

He leaves a widow and a large family, most of them grown to manhood and womanhood, as well as troops of friends. The time of the funeral is 4 p. m. Monday. The remains will arrive in the city tomorrow afternoon, on the 4 o'clock train, accompanied by members of his family, who left today for Salisbury.

The following biography of Capt. Atkinson is from "Western North Carolina," kindly loaned THE CITIZEN by T. H. Cobb, esq.

Life Of Capt. Atkinson.

Hon. Natt Atkinson, generally known as "Natt" Atkinson, at present writing a prominent dealer in real estate in Asheville, was born November 15, 1832, and is a son of Col. John and Rebecca Bonner Atkinson of McMin county, Tenn., natives of South Carolina, and of Scotch-Irish and German descent. His father was an extensive and successful planter, and an able and influential legislator in his day, having represented his Senatorial district several years in the State Senate. He was considered one of the safest and most influential members of that honorable body. He died in 1840. "Natt," as he is familiarly called by a host of friends, was educated at Hiawassee college and at the celebrated Dr. Alexander Wilson's school at Milville, Alamance county, N. C. After finishing his studies at school, he engaged in farming, which he continued to follow until 1861, at which time he enlisted in the Confederate army as first lieutenant in First Tennessee cavalry, and continued in command of his company until 1862, when he returned home and raised a company (A) of his own, and joined the 62d Tennessee regiment of mounted infantry, as captain of his company, and as senior captain of the regiment, which he often commanded at Vicksburg and other places. He was assigned out in the western army, and rendered valuable services at the seige of Vicksburg. He as commander of his regiment, was subsequently transferred to Virginia with Vaughan's brigade, under command of Major General Echols of the Western Virginia army. This and Morgan's were the only two brigades that safely brought all of their men out of Virginia, and met President Davis at Charlotte. They were personally complimented by President Davis, and were as full of zeal for our noble cause as when they first enlisted. They were selected among others as President Davis escort to Mississippi, escorting him as far as Washington, Ga., where they were met by Federal troops, and Mr. Davis advised that all the troops be surrendered, dividing all the money he had among his men—$28 50 to each man. But for the wise counsel of their beloved President, those noble veterans of many a battle-field would have died in their tracks before surrendering their great leader. (Mr. Davis, as is well known, attempted to make his way across the Mississippi without troops.) These events occurred about two weeks after General Lee's surrender at Appomattox. Captain Atkinson returned home and resumed the study of law, which he had begun prior to his entering the army, and was admitted to the bar in 1868. He practiced law for several years at Asheville. In 1870 he bought out THE ASHEVILLE CITIZEN newspaper, which he edited and published nearly three years.

THE CITIZEN was then, we believe, the only Democratic newspaper published in the State west of Charlotte.

In 1878 he sold the paper and moved to his farm on the Swannanoa river, eight miles above Asheville, and engaged in the cultivation of fine fruit, having the finest fruit farm in Western North Carolina, consisting of over 2300 fruit trees. Captain Atkinson practically demonstrated the great possibilities of fruit culture in this State. He exhibited specimens of his fruit at all the State and national expositions, and won the medal at the Philadelphia Centennial, and the Marshal Pinkney Wilder medal at Baltimore in 1877. This medal was awarded him for the exhibition of 100 specimens of the finest apples in the United States and Canada, and was said by a Baltimore paper to have been the finest specimens of apples ever exhibited in the world. Captain Atkinson closely studied the cultivation of fruit, and cultivated on a scientific basis, and was amply rewarded by a rich harvest; and to him, more than any other man, is due the credit of demonstrating the wonderful possibilities of fruit growing as a paying industry in North Carolina.

In 1878 Captain Atkinson was elected to represent Buncombe county in the General Assembly. During that session special efforts were made to reduce State expenditures. Captain Atkinson introduced and championed a resolution under the operation of which a reduction of $180,000 was made in State expenditures. As an impressive, ready public speaker, Captain A. has but few superiors in the State.

In 1882 he sold his farm and moved to Asheville, and engaged in the real estate business. And the writer believes he is sufficiently modest in the statement that Captain Atkinson, since locating in Asheville, has done more a dozen times over to develop and build up that city than any other man in it. It was mainly through his efforts that the Graded schools of Asheville were established. And to his persistent efforts is largely due the establishment of the Asheville sewage system and the electric street railway. Captain Atkinson is one of those aggressive and sagacious business men, who are ever grasping opportunities that others fail to see, and developing resources that others fail to find, and is a blessing to any community. He was married in February, 1858, to Miss Harriet N., accomplished daughter of Israel and Mary Baird of Asheville. To them have been born 12 children, viz: Natt B., Edward B., Charles B., Mary B., Frederick B., deceased, Hugh H., Phillip G., Emma T., Lillie D., Paralee V., Edith and Charlotte B. Captain Atkinson and family are members of the M. E. church, South.

His Later Years.

Of late years, and especially for the last eighteen months, Capt. Atkinson's health has not been good. He has continued, however, so far as he was able—perhaps more so than his health would warrant—to take an active interest in his own as well as in public matters. He visited THE CITIZEN office only two or three days ago to have a good word said, if possible, for a friend in whose behalf he had unselfishly interested himself. He seemed then to be in about his usual health, and no one would have suspected that his end was so near.

Judge Pritchard Purchases Hazel Hill Property at $5000

Judge J. C. Pritchard has purchased through the J. M. Campbell real estate agency a valuable piece of property overlooking the French Broad river and known as "Hazel Hill." The property is situated on the Asheville side of the French Broad and between the railroad trestle and Smith's bridge. It contains 20 acres of land and a large brick house. The consideration was $5000. The property belonged to A. B. Castleman of Washington.

It is said that the roperty contains one of the largest and most valuable rock quarries in the state. The stone is granite and is the quality used principally by railroad companies as ballast.

The property acquired by Judge Pritchard was for many years owned by the late Natt Atkinson. The house was built by Mr. Atkinson and the brick composing the structure was made by hand from clay in that vicinity. The land was sold by Mr. Atkinson while Asheville was on a great boom several years ago for $30,000.

Killed In Airplane Crash

PHILLIP HENRY ATKINSON

When his plane stalled while taking a turn at an altitude of 200 feet, Phillip H. Atkinson, popular young Asheville man, was killed at Brooks Field, San Antonio, Texas, yesterday morning shortly after 11 o'clock.

Asheville Flier Is Killed When Airplane Crashes

PULLED FROM WRECKAGE
(Special To The Citizen)

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Dec. 5.—Pulled dead from wreckage of an airplane in which he plunged 200 feet at Brooksfield today, the body of Cadet Phillip H. Atkinson, 24, was held at an undertaking establishment tonight pending advices from relatives. Army records showed that the cadet's father was E. B. Atkinson, 82 Westwood Place, Asheville, N. C.

Young Atkinson's death was the fourteenth fatality among flyers in and from San Antonio within three weeks.

Atkinson, who was taking the basic flying course, had just taken off at 11 o'clock this morning for his fourth solo flight in a Dehavilland plane when he attempted in a stiff wind to make a turn. The plane stalled and went into a tailspin. Owing to the low altitude Atkinson could neither jump nor bring the craft under control.

The plane fell in wreckage at the edge of the Brooksfield Service club. Rushed to the hospital, the cadet was pronounced dead.

Although gasoline was thrown over the wreckage by the force of the crash the plane almost by a miracle did not catch fire. The body of the pilot was not mangled.

The plane struck near the edge of the field, narrowly missing the porch of the Brooks Field Service club on which several officers were seated.

P. H. Atkinson Meets Instant Death At San Antonio, Texas

Phillip Henry Atkinson, son of E. B. and Annie Miller Atkinson of Westwood Place, was instantly killed early yesterday when the plane which he was flying at Brooks Field, San Antonio, Texas, went into a tail-spin at a low altitude and crashed.

Mr. Atkinson was on his fourth solo flight in an Army DeHaviland plane and during the practice flying attempted a turn in the face of a stiff wind. The plane, according to observers, stalled and slipped into a tail-spin, crashed before the pilot had a chance to right it or bail out with his parachute.

First news of the accident was received here shortly after noon yesterday by E. B. Atkinson, prominent Asheville business man, father of the deceased. It was in the form a telegram from Commander Oliddale of Brooks Field, and gave no details of the crash.

Active In Athletics

The deceased made an enviable athletic record in North Carolina. He was captain and tackle of the Asheville High school football which captured the State champion in 1923. Prior to his playing on the Asheville team, he had played in 1920 on the Porter Military academy football team at Charleston, S. C. After graduating in the spring of 1923 from the Asheville High school, Mr. Atkinson matriculated at the University of North Carolina and succeeded that fall in winning an end position on the freshman team there. The following two years he was a substitute end and tackle on the varsity team at the University, where he also was prominent in fraternity circles, holding the Kappa Sigma chapter presidency in 1922. Captain Atkinson achieved the distinction of leading the first Asheville team over the North Carolina title. Mr. Atkinson also was a good marksman and participated in a number of matches in which the Asheville Gun Club entered.

After completing two years academic work at the University of North Carolina Mr. Atkinson took up the study of law. For some time however he had been intensely interested in the progress of aviation. Finally he decided to take the course in flying and then return to his study of law, in which he was making good progress. He went through the preliminary tests with a large group and was one of three selected to take the course, having been found especially fitted, physically and mentally for flying.

He entered the training school at Brooks Field, San Antonio, about five months ago after passing preliminary tests with high honors. He was allowed to make his first solo flight after an unusually short period of training and appeared to show great aptitude for flying.

The deceased is survived by his father, E. B. Atkinson, one sister, Mrs. Walter J. Damtoft; and four brothers, Edward N., Jack, Frank and Everett Atkinson, all of Asheville.

The remains will be brought back to Asheville and will probably arrive here Saturday. Funeral arrangements are being held in abeyance pending the arrival of the body and will be announced later.

Club's 50th Anniversary

The Community Club of Asheville observed its 50th anniversary at its recent meeting in West Asheville Community Center with 10 past presidents attending. Shown are, (L-R): Mrs. Leo Bagwell, president; Mrs. Harry Atkins, a past president and program chairman; Mrs. W. K. Dalton, past president and historian; and Mrs. D. I. Gross, charter member. Other past presidents attending included: Mrs. Curtis W. Baldwin, Mrs. J. A. Goforth, Mrs. H. B. Almon, Mrs. J. C. Grice, Mrs. L. F. Locke, Mrs. V. A. Forsyth. Mrs. Ernest Briggs of Burnsville, president of District II, North Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs, spoke and Mrs. Dalton gave the 50 year history of the club. Mrs. Atkins was program chairman and hostesses were club officers. Trophies, pictures, year books and newspaper articles were on display. The club was organized April 20, 1923, with 115 charter members and Mrs. Charles B. Anderson, its first president. It was federated in 1927. In 1964 its clubhouse was torn down to make way for a new highway, I-26, and later the property was sold to Aston Park Hospital for a new location of the hospital. The main project of the club is to furnish a room for the new hospital. Over its 50 year history, the club has worked for the betterment of the City of Asheville and will continue this effort, according to the president. (Staff Photo by Dick Mauldin)

BY AN ANCIENT ART known as "Marquetry", William Bader, of 856 Haywood Road, turns out landscapes and designs of surpassing beauty with inlaid woods, lacquered and polished to mirror smoothness. The picture was made in his shop as he inspected some blocks of veneer wood just cut to pattern by a precision bandsaw. Samples of his work nearing the finished stage are shown in the background. (Citizen-Times photo).

Haywood Road Man Is Expert At Marquetry

William Bader, 856 Haywood Road, is an artist who paints his pictures with wood, an ancient art called "Marquetry".

He has a shop rigged in the basement of his home, with a jigsaw, a couple of sanders, a veneer press, a drill press, a table saw and other gadgets.

"Marquetry is an old art" he said in discussing his work. In recent years interest has been stepped up through the use of machinery which makes it possible to speed up production."

As an example, he pointed out that instead of cutting a single piece of veneer wood one twenty-eighth of an inch thick according to a drawn pattern, it is possible now, even with the equipment he has, to cut up to 14 layers at one time. The pattern making has been greatly speeded up through the use of a perforating machine which makes it possible to punch out intricate patterns and then pounce the design directly on more than one packet of veneer wood. For this urpose the wood is held tightly together by small slim nails.

The pieces of different types of wood, each a different shade or color, must fit together in a sort of jigsaw puzzle to make the picture. The fit must be high perfect and after the surface is sanded and lacquered it takes on an amazing polish and appears as smooth as a single piece of wood.

In fashioning his pictures he usually makes no attempt to obtain colors by staining the wood, but contents himself with the rich tones and overtones furnished by the natural wood. His collection of veneer woods, by the way, is really something. Naturally since he goes in for all shades from pale ivory or white to walnut brown or ebony, the list includes a lot of fancy stuff.

He learned his art in Germany and came to this country in 1923. He finds a ready sale for most of his pictures. Other products include panels and trays of various kinds and small boxes with the ornament in the lid.

Enoch Ball And The Joyfulaires

If you picked up a copy of an Asheville TV Guide in 1953, you might have seen a picture of the Joyfulaires Quartet.

This photograph along with the caption below appeared on the back cover of an Asheville TV Guide during 1953 and 1954.

Beginning April 1st the Joyfulaires Quartet will appear on WLOS-TV, Channel 13, each Friday evening 7:45-8;00.
Members of the Quartet are 1st Tenor Jack Henderson, 2nd Tenor Junior Ball, Baritone Ed Randall, Bass Carl Frady; Pianist Elbert Plemmons.
Guest Quartets will continue to appear on Quartet Parade, Tuesdays - 7:30-8:00 on WLOS-TV, Channel 13.
The Joyfulaires are heard each Sunday 2:05 - 2:30 over WLOS-Radio.
All Quartet Parade programs are emceed by Jack Stamberger.

Enoch Ball, who sang second tenor for the group and resides in West Asheville, said it was a great honor to be a part of a quartet chosen to produce the first live-studio production on Channel 13, WLOS Television.

This special privilege of recognition opened the doors to many churches and concerts around Western North Carolina for the Joyfulaires to sing to all their fans, as bookings grew to an all-time high.

Along with Enoch, or Junior Ball, singing second tenor, there was Jack Henderson who provided first tenor, Ed Randall with baritone, Carl Frady who sang bass, and Al Plemmons who added a touch of class when playing the piano.

Other members of the group who came with the Joyfulaires at different times included Don Duckett, Harry Shotwell, Dennis Parris, Harley Green, Otis Thompson and C.E. (Gene) Britt.

Enoch, who organized the Joyfulaires was an ordained minister of the Methodist faith.

His father, who was almost a Methodist minister, was involved in the Horney Heights Revival on land directly across from Malvern Hill Baptist Church.

During this time, a recorded number of 140 people were baptized. Enoch Ball Sr. was also a chaplain in the Salvation Army.

Enoch Jr. sang more than 25 years on WWNC Radio after some experience with the Carolina Quartet, and he currently serves as pastor of Sardis United Methodist Church.

The Everett Ball career plan: Work until you 'give out'

JOHN BOYLE
Columnist
JBoyle@citizen-times.com

The next time you're tempted to complain about how hard you're working, think of Everett Ball.

At age 87, the man just won't slow down. While Ball's Service Center isn't as busy as it once was, Ball still works just about every day, towing cars and doing minor mechanical repairs.

"I'll work till I give out — and then I'll quit," said Ball.

Melissa McCulloch, a local Fed Ex driver who often stops by Ball's shop, suggested I do a story on him. She loves hearing him talk about the old days, when Smoky Park Highway was a three-lane road and the area was full of houses, not just big box retailers and car dealers.

"Today there were two vehicles up on lifts at the same time," she told me Friday. "He's the hardest working person on my route."

Ball has been on Smoky Park Highway since 1938 — heck, he's had the same business phone number since 1938 — and he's not looking to sell.

"I've talked to a lot of real estate people who want to buy," Ball said with a smile Friday.

Between his house just above the station and the business itself, he and his wife Helen are sitting on about two acres of prime real estate on one of the area's busiest roads.

Nobody would like to see him retire more than Helen, who showed up around lunchtime Friday to check on her stubborn man when he didn't answer the phone (he was busy talking to a newspaper columnist — oops).

"I fuss at him, but it don't do no good," she said with a laugh.

I mentioned to her how some people retire and end up bored out of their minds, lamenting the decision to quit work.

"That's what he's afraid of," Helen Ball said.

If he's not out on a tow job or helping a customer, Ball is always puttering around the property, cleaning up or trimming grass. When I stopped by Friday he was putting the hedge clippers away.

Ironically, he got turned down for armed forces services in World War II because of infantile paralysis in his right leg, which still causes him to wear a brace.

He used to sell gasoline, but he got out of that a few years back when he was going to need new tanks.

"It cost me $32,000 to get started in this business, and it cost me $42,000 to stop selling gas," Ball said, referring to the cost of digging up the old tanks. "It would've been $350,000 to put new ones and new pumps back in."

At one point, Ball had seven employees, but for the past 10 years, he's been going it alone. His two mechanics left to start their own businesses.

He sold his big rollback tow truck and a 1971 Ford he used on occasion, but he still operates a smaller rollback, answering calls on local roads but avoiding the interstates.

Everett and Helen have a son who lives in Milwaukee and a daughter who lives locally, but neither is interested in the business, which has been at its present location since 1958.

Not that Everett would give up the reins anyway. His health is good, he says, except for some side effects from medication his doctor put him on.

"I blame it all on my doctor," he said of the aches he got. "He's trying to lower my cholesterol, and it about killed me. I tried about six different kinds. As long as I don't take that stuff, I feel pretty good."

Born and raised in Asheville, Ball was one of 14 children born to Enoch and Irene Ball. Just six survive today.

They raised hogs and cows and kept chickens, which Ball says tided them over during the Great Drepression. His father died at 77, but his mother lived to 99, an age Ball hopes to reach — right at Ball's Service Center.

"I got plans to quit when I get my money out of this place, or when I'm in Pisgah View Memorial Park," he said.

Although he's approaching 90, Everett Ball has no plans of quitting the business he established on Smoky Park Highway in 1938. "I just don't want to sit around and do nothing," Ball says. "I like to stay busy."

Great Speed Required In Making Newspaper Pictures, Says Ball

Most people have little idea of the speed required in newspaper photography, says E. M. Ball, staff photographer for The Asheville Citizen and The Asheville Times.

Assignments received in the morning must be quickly covered, the negatives developed, prints made and furnished the engravers in a matter of a couple of hours, if the picture is to get in the newspaper that afternoon. Likewise, pictures made during the afternoon for use the next morning, must be handled quickly.

Mr. Ball has developed the technique of finishing prints to a point where he can deliver a wet print within 12 minutes after he comes in the door of his shop, with an undeveloped negative.

Quick Trip

The quickest trip he ever made was several years ago, when a store was blown up at Mars Hill. One hour and 29 minutes from the time he left his office at 1 1-2 Biltmore avenue, the developed picture was in the engraving department at the newspaper. Taking into consideration the distance traveled, Mr. Ball believes this time could not be bettered.

Another time when speed was one of the main factors came about a year ago when seven men were buried under a slide at a quarry near Fletcher. Soon after receiving reports that the men had been buried under tons of boulders and dirt, Mr. Ball and newspapermen rushed to the scene, made a number of pictures, and had them in the engraving department in time to be used in the next morning's newspaper. Reports of the disaster were not received until mid-afternoon. The weather was near zero.

Mr. Ball says he has to be somewhat of a contortionist to get the pictures required at times. For instance, he has climbed telephone poles, built platforms in trees, and scaled roofs of buildings in order to get a shot from the right angle. He also has used airplanes.

Dress Problem

It is a question to know how to dress for newspaper assignments, Mr. Ball said. It has been his experience that assignments of an entirely different character usually follow one another.

For instance, he has found that every time he has been called to a dairy to photograph a bull, invariably he is sent on a society assignment, which, naturally, requires something different in the form of dress. He was unable to explain why or how this happened, simply stating that "no joking, this is true."

Danger also enters the work of a newspaper photographer, he said in [illegible] when he was knocked down while making a flashlight picture in Patton avenue about [illegible] o'clock in the evening. Just as he was ready to "shoot," a car bore down on him. He was in a hospital for two weeks and at home for a month with a fractured skull, bruised legs and abrasions about his body.

"And," said Mr. Ball in discussing the incident, "all the pieces of the camera haven't yet been found."

Probably more dangerous was the assignment he received to photograph members of a mob attempting to break into a jail. That was the only time he was afraid.

Members of the mob were trying to remove a negro from the jail and Mr. Ball and a reporter were rushed to the scene. When they arrived the crowd had dispersed.

Glad To See Mob Gone

"I was surely glad and relieved when we arrived and the crowd had gone," he said. "I can still see the look on the faces as I shot a flashlight photo (if I had done that), them knowing that every one would have been incriminated if their face showed in the photo and the immediate thought flashing to their brain to just shoot the photographer and end the evidence. I feel sure that this is just what would happen in such a case. I planned to make the photo from the inside of the jail if possible, and then just remain in safekeeping and hide the camera."

"The saddest occasions are when people bring in photos of their loved ones who have recently died or been killed by accident," the photographer asserted. "Many times they break down in sorrow and it is minutes usually before they can collect themselves to a point sufficient to let us know what to do about the picture."

His more frequent assignments include securing photographs of automobile wrecks. One of his prized shots in this category is of a truck hanging by the back of the chassis to the Asheville - West Asheville bridge.

To young ladies who want to know how to get their pictures in the paper Mr. Ball has some sound advice.

"At frequent intervals girls come to my studio and ask how they can get their pictures in the paper," he said. "I tell them all the same thing — kill someone, steal a horse or get married. Most of them use the latter method."

EWART M. BALL, PHOTOGRAPHER, IS DEAD AT 42

Widely Known Asheville Resident Dies After Long Illness

Ewart M. Ball, well-known Asheville photographer, died in a hospital here early yesterday afternoon following an illness of several months. He was 42 years old.

Mr. Ball, a native of Madison county, had been in the photography business here for about 15 years. In addition to owning and operating the Plateau studio, he was staff photographer for The Citizen and The Times.

Mr. Ball served in the United States forces during the World war as a member of Company K of the Third Infantry. He was stationed in Texas where he helped train recruits, and later was sent to the Philippine Islands, serving in a similar capacity there for 34 months.

Opened Studio

He went to Charleston after the war, and later mov. . Florence, S. C. He became interested in photography while in the army, following it as a hobby, and opened a studio in Georgetown, S. C., a few years before coming to Asheville.

Survivors include his widow, Mrs Docia Baker Ball, also a native of Madison county; his mother, Mrs. Mie Marler, of Madison county; two sons, Ewart M. Ball, Jr., and Irvin Ball; a daughter, Miss Laura Ball; a brother, Robart Ball, of Madison county; a sister, Mrs. Cyrie Hall, of Logan avenue, West Asheville, and three step-brothers, Caney, Pender and Everett Marler, of Madison county.

He was a member of the Asheville Optimist club, of which he was vice-president; West Asheville lodge No. 665, A. F. and A. M.; Scottish Rite Masons, Odd Fellows and the Baptist church. He was also active in the North Carolina Photographers' association.

Active in Boys' Work

Mr. Ball was prominent in boys' work of the Optimist club, and until he became ill several months ago went to the Buncombe county training school for boys one night a week to teach woodworking classes. He was a leader in the Boy Scout troop which the Optimists sponsor at the school, and represented his club last year on the Civic Club union. He resided at 145 Dorchester avenue, West Asheville.

Of an exceptionally friendly disposition and cheerful personality, Mr. Ball enjoyed a wide acquaintanceship. His work as photographer for the newspapers brought him in contact with persons all over Asheville and Western North Carolina.

Mr. Ball became ill of a stomach disorder in February, and his condition gradually grew worse.

Complete funeral arrangements had not been made last night, but members of the family said the funeral will be conducted at the First Baptist church at some hour tomorrow afternoon with burial in Green Hill cemetery. Dunn-Chase funeral home is in charge of arrangements.

EWART M. BALL

Ewart Ball, Photographer For C-T, Dies

Ewart McKinley Ball, 47, Asheville Citizen-Times photographer and newsman for 20 years, died of a heart attack Thursday. He was stricken in the photo. department of the newspaper and died in a hospital about an hour later.

He had carried on the local news photography tradition established by his father, E. M. Ball Sr., who died in 1937. The elder Ball was the photographer for the Asheville Times before the consolidation of the newspapers in 1930, and then for the Citizen and the Times until his death.

Ewart joined the newspaper staff in 1937, and later took over the operation of Plateau Studios on Pack Square for four years. In 1943, he returned to the Citizen as a police reporter for a period of four years, and then was editor of the Farmers Federation News until 1951, when he again returned to the Citizen-Times photo staff.

In his younger years, he also worked in Washington, D. C., and in Detroit.

Ball was born in Eagle Pass, Texas, and reared in Asheville. He learned the photographic trade from his father, and was also influenced by association with Georga Masa, Ignatius Brock, and Elliott Lyman Fisher.

Closely connected with police work, even during times he was not with the newspaper, Ball was credited with the only good pictures of the fatal Highland Hospital fire in the late 1940's, which he came from home to make while he was with the Federation.

He also was noted for mechanical skill, and was responsible for most of the newspaper's camera and Wirephoto equipment maintenence for several years.

As a member of the Asheville newspapers' photographic staff, he was widely known throughout the state. He was president of the Carolinas Press Photographers' Association in 1955, and was active at all levels of the Association's program.

He was a prizewinner in photo competition during the annual Southern Short Courses in News Photography, which he helped establish, and had made hundreds of pictures in helping to publicize "Unto These Hills," the Cherokee Indian drama. In 1954, he won first prize in a professional competition to select the best picture of the drama.

He was a member of West Asheville Methodist Church, and was governor of Asheville Moose Lodge 781 in 1950.

He lived at 60 Balm Grove Ave., West Asheville.

He is survived by the widow, Mrs. Clara McDevitt Ball, whom he married in 1942; a son, E. M. Ball III, of Asheville; his mother, Mrs. Docia J. Ball of West Asheville; a sister, Mrs Laura McCormick of Detroit, and a brother, Ervin L. Ball of Asheville.

Arrangements will be announced by Grace Funeral Home.

Asheville Citizen June 24, 1966

A great many of the old photographs in this book were taken by members of three generations of the Ball family, all of whom have their roots in the Western North Carolina region.

E.M. Ball, Sr., was born March 19, 1894 in Madison County, grew up in that area and as a young man joined the army where he served in the Philippines and during World War I was stationed in Eagle Pass, Texas. Mr. Ball started taking photographs as a hobby during the war, but soon became seriously interested in the work as a profession.

Returning from the war, he ran a studio for a while in Georgetown, South Carolina, further developing his skills.

In 1922, Ball felt the longing to return home to Asheville. He had married the former Docia Baker and they were to have three children, Ewart, Jr., Ervin and a daughter Laura Jeanette. Ball bought the Plateau Studio from Japanese photographer George Masa and it is very possible that some of the photographs were taken by this brilliant artisan.

Ball and two co-workers John Frisbee and Wayne Banks combined their skills in the operation of the studio located at 1½ Biltmore Avenue. Ball worked on a contract, shooting news photographs for The Asheville Citizen and The Asheville Times at a time when the papers employed no fulltime photographers. His work on occasion could be quite dangerous; at one point in his career he was run over by a car in trying to secure a photograph and had to spend two weeks in the hospital. At another time his life was threatened when he shot pictures of a mob trying to break into the city jail.

Ball, under constant pressure to meet newspaper deadlines, developed a new process whereby he could deliver a "wet" print in 12 minutes from the time he arrived at the studio with a news shot.

Ball also specialized in industrial-commercial work and received favorable comment from many of the country's largest industrial firms in New York, Chicago, Cincinnati and other large cities.

E.M. Ball, Sr. died at the age of 43 in August of 1937.

Ewart McKinley Ball, Jr. was destined to follow in his father's footsteps. For a while, young Ewart made photographs for the newspapers while still in high school. At the same time he was endeavoring to help his mother carry on the studio work.

Ewart, Jr., born November 22, 1918, was to spend almost all his life in photographic work. During World War II, unable to serve actively overseas due to an early physical injury, Ewart moved to Washington where he worked in a government photographic laboratory.

After the war Ewart returned to Asheville where he met and married Clara McDevitt of Walnut, North Carolina. They had one son, Ewart McKinley, III.

Ewart, Jr. was a writer as well as a photographer and served for a number of years as editor of the Farmers Federation News Magazine.

The most part of his professional life, however, was spent with The Asheville Citizen-Times as a professional news photographer. He was an active member of the Carolinas Press Photographers Association and worked constantly to upgrade photography as a profession. Many national awards were made to him for his work. Ewart, Jr. was also interested in young people who wished to become involved in the photographic profession and spent a great deal of time in working with them and demonstrating proper techniques to aspiring young photographers.

Ewart, Jr. died at the age of 47 in 1966. At the time of his death of a heart attack, he was working at what he loved best, in the studios of The Asheville Citzen-Times.

Ewart M. Ball, III has carried on the photgraphic tradition of this family. He worked for a while with his own studio in Biltmore Village, later returning to the position of staff photographer of The Asheville Citizen-Times.

Asheville has been fortunate over the years to have many fine photographers. Some of them have become nationally known. But seldom has a city had the good fortune to have preserved intact, the work of three generations of premier artisans such as the Ball family.

It was through the generous donation of the Ball Collection by Ewart, III to the Southern Highlands Research Center that we are able to present this early pictorial history. There are, of course, other important pictures from other sources, which contribute greatly to this book and they will be mentioned elsewhere.

It is impossible at this time to determine exactly which pictures were taken by which member of the Ball family, so they are designated as "The Ball Collection" in our credit lines.

We are grateful to Ewart, III and to the Southern Highlands Research Center for their permission to use these photographs.

Ewart is married to the former Rebecca Peed and they have one son, Ewart McKinley Ball, IV.

Asheville Brothers Missing In War

Described by friends as "the highest type of American boy", Charles William Ballew, 18, left, and James Robert, 21, right, were reported by U. S. Navy officials as "missing following action." Charles, a fireman second class, had enlisted a year ago to be on the same ship with his brother, Bobby, a fireman second class. In commenting on the characteristics of the boys, every friend contacted today mentioned their devotion to their mother and their enjoyment of their home.

Asheville Casualties In War No. 2 Mount To 3; Nelon Is Missing

Two Ballew Brothers Were Others Reported 'Missing After Action'.

Asheville's possible casualties in World War No. 2 mounted to three today, as word was received here that David Edward Nelon, 21, is reported by the navy department to be "missing following action."

He is the only son of Mrs. Mae Nelon, of 152 Barnard avenue.

The name of the Nelon boy is added to those of James Robert Ballew, 20, and Charles William Ballew, 18, the sons of Mr. and Mrs. William Wiley Ballew, of 4 Hickory Terrace, West Asheville, who were reported "missing" yesterday.

All were understood to be stationed on a ship on patrol duty in the North Atlantic.

Telegrams Received

Mrs. Nelon received the following telegraphic official notification:

"The navy department regrets to inform you that your son, David Edward Nelon, electrician's mate third class, is missing following action in the performance of his duty in the service of his country.

"The department appreciates your great anxiety and will furnish you further information promptly when received.

"To prevent possible aid to our enemies, please do not divulge the name of his ship or station."

The message to Mrs. Ballew was identical, except for the names of her sons and their ratings. James Robert was a fireman first class, and Charles William, a fireman second class. The messages were signed by Rear Admiral Randall Jacobs, chief of the bureau of naval investigation. Mrs. Nelon received the telegram about her son late Sunday night, and Mrs. Ballew was notified about 8.30 o'clock yesterday morning.

Both mothers were prostrate.

War Brought Home

The messages brought the war home to Asheville. While several Western North Carolina men have been killed in action since the beginning of the war, these were the first Asheville men reported missing in combat.

Billy McGinnis, a native of Chimney Rock who had worked in Asheville for a while, a week ago was reported killed in a naval engagement. His father, G. M. McGinnis, is an Asheville barber.

Young Mr. Nelon enlisted in the navy through the recruiting station here about three years ago. He attended Grace high school year, and then went to Piedmont, S. C., where he was graduated from high school. His mother last night was too grief-stricken to talk with anyone but intimate friends. Her son and the elder Ballew youth were close friends, it was learned.

DAVID EDWARD NELON

The only son of Mrs. Mae Nelon of 151 Barnard avenue, young Nelon is reported by the navy department as "missing following action." He was understood to be stationed on a ship on patrol duty in the North Atlantic.

James Robert Ballew had been in the navy for the past two years. His brother, anxious to be with him, enlisted March 13, 1941, and was assigned to the same ship. Both boys had been Boy Scouts and were members of the West Asheville Presbyterian church and of the Sunday school. The elder was graduated from Lee Edwards high school, but Charles William left school before graduation to join the navy and be with his brother.

Mr. Ballew, father of the boys, was expected to arrive here today from Norfolk, since a telephone message was finally put through to the place where he is boarding. Mr. Ballew left here about two weeks ago to work in the shipyards. His family planned to join him there. He is a veteran of World war No. 1.

Mrs. Ballew was somewhat calmer today, but she still maintains the two boys will show up somewhere. She will not believe they are lost. The boys' sister, Miss Frances Ballew, an employe of F. W. Woolworth company, also holds hope that maybe the family will receive good news later. Harry Lee, 14, the Ballews' other child, said today he is not worrying about his brothers and he also hopes to join the navy as a chaplain.

Mrs. Ballew said today Robert was 20 years old on February 14 and William was 18 on January 2.

FUNERAL RITES FOR 2 BROTHERS SET FOR SUNDAY

Services Will Be Held For Ballew Boys 'Missing Following Action'.

Funeral services will be conducted Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at West Asheville Presbyterian church for two of the Asheville boys who have been reported by the United States navy as "missing following action."

The boys, James Robert Ballew, 20, and Charles William Ballew, 18, sons of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Ballew of 4 Hickory Terrace, were two of the first three Asheville combat casaulties in World war II. The third was David Edward Nelon, 21, of 152 Barnard avenue who also has been reported "missing following action."

Officiating at the services will be the Rev. J. Clyde Plexico, pastor of the boys. Assisting will be the Rev. Paul N. Gresham and Dr. W. E. Finley.

Recruits supplied by the navy recruiting office here will serve as active pallbearers. Honorary pallbearers will be members of the Boys' Bible class of the church, of which the brothers were members.

A guard of honor will be formed by a uniformed detail of Sons of the Legion. Members of the woman's auxiliary of the American Legion will attend the services in a body. The sounding of taps by a bugler will conclude the services.

The boys are survived by their parents, a sister, Miss Frances Ballew, and a brother, Harry Lee Ballew.

James Robert Ballew had been in the navy for the past two years. His brother enlisted on March 13.

Final Rites Are Held For 2 Ballews, Lost In Action

The last photograph of James Robert Ballew and Charles William Ballew, taken just a short time before they were lost in the service of their country, was placed on the altar of the West Asheville Presbyterian church yesterday afternoon as they were, in last rites, committed to their God. Their bodies were somewhere in the cold waters of the Atlantic ocean.

The boys, sons of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Ballew, of 4 Hickory terrace, were two of Asheville's first three victims of World War No. 2.

They went down with the U. S. destroyer Jacob Jones when that ship was sent to the bottom by two the Atlantic. David Edward Nelon, 21, son of Mrs. Mae Nelon of 152 Barnard avenue, lost his life in the sinking.

Despite the chilly, drenching rainfall which fell all during the services, scores of sympathetic friends crowded into the church to hear the minister describe the boys as "soldiers of America and soldiers of Christ."

Long before the services began the church was well-filled and extra chairs were provided, but all who could stand at the rear crowded into the church and the overflow filled the vestibule, with others standing on the steps to the balcony, which also was filled. Many

About the altar were cut flowers d palms. Two American flags ere advanced by members of the ons of the Legion drum and bugle rps of Kiffin Rockwell post, who ood at attention during the entire rvice. Uniformed present and st members of the naval service ood beside them with members of iffin Rockwell post sitting in ont of them.

A quartet of young women sang The Sweet Bye and Bye" and s they concluded the touching rain the Rev. P. N. Gresham of enilworth Presbyterian church pened the Presbyterian ritual of e service for the dead with the ords. "Cast thy burden upon the ord and He shall sustain thee.."

Prayer Is Offered

The reading of the 23rd Psalm as followed by the words:

"We thank Thee for teaching us at we are pilgrims upon the earth d that Thy house is our home. specially do we pray for Thy children in this time of bereavement nd sorrow. Do for them more han we can ask and more than e can think. May Thy wondrous eace descend upon all our hearts, e pray in the name of our Savior nd our Redeemer. Amen."

"City Four Square" was sung by e quartet then Mr. Gresham egan his ministration to the fam-ly

"There are two things for all of s first, to do the will of God, and econd, to suffer the will of God. n earth we all shall have tribulaion, but the Bible gives us many elpful thoughts. There are two ooks especially which are helpful o us—Peter and Job.

"In First Peter, we are told the race of God is sufficient in tribulaion. Submissive suffering may win others to God's way and may enarge our sphere of service. Some eople accomplish more by their death than they would by their ives even though they live 100 ears. Suffering purifies.

"Job in heaven today thanks God hat he had such sore trials and ribulations on earth," Mr. Gresham ontinued.

Seem Difficult

"Our afflictions seem hard and eavy, but our afflictions compared ith Christ's seem small," he added, and he stressed the pre-eminent omfort to be found in the Bible, eading from II Corinthians, Chapter 1, 17-28: "For our light affliction which is but for a moment, orketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;

"While we look not at the things hich are seen, but at the things hich are not seen: for the things hich are seen are temporal; but he things which are not seen are ternal."

"Nothing compares with Eternity, ur lives are just a moment," Mr. resham said. "Find comfort in od," he added. "He is the source f all comfort. He will comfort ou and you will lead others to ind glorious comfort."

The eulogy was offered by the ev. J. Clyde Plexico, pastor of the hurch, after reading a poem of a other who had given her son to e armed services of the nation.

"For the first time World War II as come to our city and to our urch," he said.

"These boys believed in Christ. hey were members of this church. e know that as we draw close to e Lord, we draw close to these ys. They are not here in body, t in spirit."

Many in the congregation who d been affected deeply by the tire service, openly wiped their es and found it difficult to conol their emotions.

Other Lists

"Only a few days later another t (of dead) was added. Even hile we are in this service another list may be added," Mr. Plexico said.

"I have said from this pulpit many times in the past three years that America has not repented. I warn you, today, friends, that unless the people of America repent we are just beginning to see what will happen.

"People who love God must suffer so others who do not love Him may be brought to Him. We cannot explain many things that happen, but back of it all is God. If we will cling unto God all things will work out for the good of those that love God.

"Robert and Charles both believed in God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost. Last Saturday morning, God came and took them away. They are not dead; they are alive with Christ."

Following another soft hymn and a prayer, the finality of the sounding of "taps" by the bugler drew forth the heart-breaking sound of uncontrollable weeping. The sympathetic tear welled in many eyes as the congregation filed slowly and silently from the church.

The boys are survived by their parents; a sister, Miss Frances Ballew, and a brother, Harry Lee Ballew.

Ballews Get Posthumous Awards

Mrs. W. W. Ballew of 4 Hickory terrace, West Asheville, today received two Purple Heart awards for her sons, James Robert Ballew, fireman first class of the U. S. navy, and Charles William Ballew, fireman second class of the U. S. navy, who gave their lives for their country when the U. S. S. Jacob Jones went down in February of last year. Mrs. Ballew is shown above with the Purple Hearts. The boys were the first of Asheville to give their lives in the war. Mrs. Ballew received two large United States flags from the Navy department last week. W. W. Ballew, father of the boys, is engaged in work at the naval base at Norfolk, Va. A young brother, Harry Lee Ballew, student at Lee Edwards high school, wants to be a chaplain in the navy. Miss Frances Ballew, a sister, recently returned to be with her mother from Norfolk, where she was employed at the naval base.

1,000 Persons Attend Ballew Brothers' Rites

A. Citizen - 3/9/42

The beautiful notes of "Taps"—signaling the end—filled the overcrowded auditorium of West Asheville Presbyterian church. Uncontrolled sobbing could be heard above the soft music. On many a face trickled tears that overfull eyes could not hold. The crowd of nearly a thousand persons slowly left the church. Thus ended funeral services for two of Asheville's first World War II dead.

James Robert Ballew, 20, and Charles William Ballew, 18, sons of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Ballew of 4 Hickory terrace, went down on the Jacob Jones, a U. S. destroyer, early the morning of February 28 in the waters of the cold Atlantic, victims along with many of their shipmates of two torpedoes fired from a lurking submarine. The third Asheville victim of the same attack was David Edward Nelon, 21, son of Mrs. Mae Nelon of 152 Barnard avenue.

In dying aboard the Jacob Jones they duplicated the death of the first Asheville person to die in World War I—also aboard the destroyer Jacob Jones. He was Harry R. Hood, a gunner and his destroyer also was sent to the bottom in the Atlantic.

The church was filled to overflowing some time before the service began yesterday, and although many extra chairs were provided some hundred or so were unable to get in the auditorium. Many crowded about the entrance as a heavy rain beat down from a gray sky.

Shortly after members of the family were seated in pews at the left front of the church, members of the Sons of the Legion drum and bugle corps of Kiffin Rockwell post advanced the colors. They stood at attention, the colors at either side of the altar. Flanking them were present and past members of the naval service, in uniform. In front of them sat members of Kiffin Rockwell post. Around the pulpit were beautiful offerings of varicolored cut flowers.

As the last strains of "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," sung by four young women, were lost in the distance, the Rev. Paul N. Gresham of Kenilworth Presbyterian church began reading the service for the dead from the Presbyterian ritual.

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord and He shall sustain thee . . ." he said, and there was mist in many an eye as he began reading from the 23rd Psalm:

"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want.

"He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters.

"He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff comfort me.

"Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

"Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever."

Prays For Boys

"Especially do we pray for Thy children in this time of bereavement and sorrow," he continued. "Do for them more than we can ask and more than we can think . . . May Thy wondrous peace descend upon all our hearts, we pray in the name of our Savior and our redeemer. Amen."

"There are two things for all of us—first, to do the will of God, and then to suffer the will of God . . .

"The Bible gives us some helpful thoughts. In the first Peter we are told the grace of God is sufficient in tribulation . . . Some people accomplish more by their death than they would by their lives even though they lived 100 years . . .

"The book of Job tells us his suffering made him a great blessing for all future generations."

He read from II Corinthians, 17-18: 'For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;

"While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

"Nothing compares with eternity," Mr. Gresham said. "Our lives are just a moment . . .

"They were soldiers of America and soldiers of Christ."

The Rev. J. Clyde Plexico, pastor of the church, offered the eulogy after reading a poem of a mother who had given her son to the armed services of the nation.

"For the first time World War II has come to our city and to our church," Mr. Plexico began.

"These boys believed in Christ. They were both members of this church. We know that as we draw close to the Lord, we draw close to these boys. They are not here in body, but in spirit . . ."

Handkerchiefs surreptitiously were applied to many eyes, here and there a throat was cleared.

"Only a few days another list (of dead) was added," he continued. "Even while we are in this service another list may be added . . .

"I have said from this pulpit many times in the past three years that America has not repented. I warn you today, friends, that unless the people of America repent we are just beginning to see what will happen . . .

"People who love God must suffer so others who do not love Him may be brought to Him . . .

"We can not explain many things that happen, but back of it all is God . . . If we will cling unto God all things will work out for the good of those that love God . . .

"Robert and Charles both believed in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost . . . Last Saturday morning God came and took them away . . . They are not dead, they are alive with Christ."

Another soft hymn, a prayer, and "Taps." Robert and Charles Ballew, their bodies somewhere in the waters of the Atlantic, had been committed to the keeping of their God.

Monument Is Dedicated To First War Dead

Ashe-Times 3/30/42

Wesley Brown, commander of Kiffin Rockwell post of the American Legion, yesterday afternoon dedicated a monument to two of Asheville's first dead of World War II, James Robert and Charles William Ballew, at Bent Creek Baptist church cemetery as silent tribute was paid by a hundred or more persons. Standing behind a V for Victory floral tribute in red, white and blue flowers, Commander Brown told of the high example set by the youths during their lives, relating how they had been together throughout their youth and school and when their country needed them they served together, and were together when duty called on them for the supreme sacrifice. "We must dedicate ourselves to the sacred ideals here represented," Mr. Brown said, "and to the memory of those who offer their lives that justice and freedom and democracy may survive and become the ideals of all peoples of the world." The two boys, sons of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Ballew of 4 Hickory terrace, were lost when the destroyer Jacob Jones was torpedoed in the Atlantic, February 28. The monument to their memory was erected recently under the direction of Mrs. Ballew. Shown in the picture, from left to right, are: Clarence DeYoung, quartermaster sergeant of the senior American Legion drum corps; the Rev. Gordon Keeler, chaplain of the American Legion post, who took part in the dedication; Mr. Brown; Louie Luther, Joe Digges, Garrison Hall, James Bolt and Eugene Johnson, all members of the Sons of the Legion.

Trees planted In Honor of Ballew's

Two Silver Cypress trees were planted Tuesday afternoon on the grounds of Eugene Rankin School as a living memorial to Robert and Charles Ballew, sons of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Ballew, 4 Hickory Terrace, who were reported missing after the U. S. S. Jacob Jones was torpedoed. The trees were given to the school by Mrs. Ballew in memory of her sons who completed the scholastic course at Eugene Rankin.

The dedicatory talk was made by Leon Connor, principal of Lee H. Edwards high school and former principal of Eugene Rankin school. The devotionals were conducted by Lt. E. G. Prasse, chaplain at the Naval Convalescent hospital, who was present with a detachment of men from the unit. Rev. Clyde Plexico made a prayer and the trees were accepted by Mr. Pierce P. Henderson, principal of the school.

Mrs. M. B. Coffey presented Mrs. Ballew with a copy of on original poem written especially for the occasion and Mrs. Frank Bell, president of the Eugene Rankin Parent-Teacher association, presided at the ceremony.

The program was concluded by the grades, singing "Anchors Aweigh."

Mrs. W. W. Ballew Sponsor Of Ship

W. Ash. News — 11-3-44

Mrs. W. W. Ballew of 4 Hickory terrace, was named as sponsor for the U. S. S. Cahuilla, which was launched at Charleston, S. C., yesterday. Two sons of Mrs. Ballew, Charles W. Ballew, fireman, second class, USN, and James Robert Ballew, fireman first class, were killed in action in 1942.

Miss Frances Ballew, daughter of Mrs. Ballew, served as maid of honor. Mr. Ballew, an employe at the naval air station in Norfolk, Va., was present. Several Asheville persons were invited for the launching ceremony, which was held at 9:30 o'clock in the morning. The Rev. J. Clyde Plexico, pastor of the West Asheville Presbyterian church, of which the Ballews are members, offered the invocation.

The Cauhilla is a powerful seagoing tug, built by the Charleston Shipbuilding and Drydock company.

Invitations to attend the ceremony were extended to friends and relatives of the family and civic leaders in Asheville. Those invited were: Mayor and Mrs. Lyons Lee, Mr. and Mrs. D. Hiden Ramsey, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Hair, Mrs. Robert Lee Smith, Gerald Cowan, Mrs. Julian Cooke of Marshall, Mrs. Mary Ballew, Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. JAMES ROBERT BALLEW

CHARLES W. BALLEW

HONORED BY LEGION—The memory of James Robert and Charles W. Ballew of West Asheville, sailors, believed to have been the first casualties of World War II from Asheville when they went down with the torpedoed Jacob Jones off the Atlantic coast, was honored by the Asheville American Legion post last night. The unit, previously known as Kiffin Rockwell post, changed its name to Rockwell-Ballew post.

A loss still stunning after 53 years

Charles 1942 Bob

A German torpedo slammed into an old U.S. Navy destroyer on a cold spring morning in 1942, and World War II came to a mountain town a thousand miles away with shocking finality.

Aboard that destroyer were James Robert Ballew, 20, and Charles William Ballew, 18, brothers serving on the U.S. Jacob Jones. The ship was on anti-submarine patrol in the North Atlantic when a German U-boat found it first.

The Jones, a venerable "four stacker" built for service in World War I, quickly sank in the icy water. Only nine of her crewmen escaped. The Ballew brothers were not among them.

They died as they had lived, brothers together, and their deaths carried an emotional impact for Asheville that has lasted for more than 50 years.

They had been members of a tightly-knit West Asheville family. Their parents were William and Nora Ballew. They had one sister, Frances, and a younger brother, Harry.

They had grown up during the Depression. "We never really wanted for anything important," Frances said. "We always had enough to eat. But there wasn't much money to spend on things that weren't essential."

They attended Rankin and Hall-Fletcher Schools and Lee Edwards High School.

James Robert joined the Navy in 1940. Charles William followed him in 1941.

Pictures of them taken before they died show two smiling, handsome young men looking out at the world with pride and optimism. They were, typically, the kids next door, the young men who by the millions fought and won World War II.

Their youth and the fact that they died together made their story even more poignant, and it was covered in depth by the news media.

For 50 years Mrs. Ballew, keeping alive the memory of her lost sons, worked tirelessly with veterans, with veterans' organizations and with the Oteen Veterans' Administration Hospital.

It was a labor of love that her daughter, Frances Ballew, continues to this day.

Mrs. W. W. Ballew To Head Rockwell-Ballew Auxiliary

Officers were installed at a meeting the Rockwell-Ballew Unit of the American Legion Auxiliary last night in the Courthouse.

Mrs. Joe C. Duncan, past unit president and department chairman of trophies and awards on the State board, installed the new officers as follows:

Mrs. W. W. Ballew, president, Mrs. Grace Scruggs, first vice-president; Mrs. J. B. Porter, second vice-president; Mrs. R. T. Shotwell, treasurer; Mrs. C. M. Morgan, recording secretary; Mrs. Margaret Craven, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Duncan, sergeant-at-arms; Mrs. Karl Cogan, historian, and Mrs. F. J. Bauman, chaplain.

Mrs. Cogan was presented with a past-president's pin by Mrs. Duncan, and was also given a wedding gift by the unit.

The name of the Kiffin Rockwell Post was changed to Rockwell-Ballew Post in honor of the new president's two sons, who were the first Asheville casualties in World War II.

Annual reports were given by:

Mrs. Edna Miller on community service; Mrs. R. E. Noland, rehabilitation; Mrs. Ballew, child welfare; and Mrs. J. L. Hall, correspondence. Mrs. Fred Bauman gave the monthly report of the volunteer service workers.

The monthly dance at the Veterans Administration Hospital, Swannanoa Division, will be held tonight, with Mrs. Stella Davis and Mrs. Hall serving as hostesses. It was announced that a graduation exercise will be held for all volunteer hospital workers September 24 at 8 p. m. in the Swannanoa Nurses Club.

New Officers Named By Gold Star Mothers

Members of the Buncombe County Chapter, American Gold Star Mothers, Friday night observed their organization's fifth birthday in a busy meeting in the Courthouse.

They cut a cake commemorating the anniversary, inducted Mrs. Ella Moody and Mrs. Mary E. Kelly into membership, and named for 1952:

Mrs. Edna Miller, president; Mrs. C. T. Moore, first vice president; Mrs. Clyde Carscaddon, second vice president; Mrs. A. C. Choate, secretary; Mrs. Mae Nelon, treasurer; Mrs. G. W. Baldwin, chaplain; Mrs. P. H. White, sergeant-at-arms, and Mrs. Henry McFee, historian.

Mrs. Miller succeeded Mrs. McFee.

The observance of the chapter's birthday followed the business meeting.

During the social hour, music was presented by Mrs. Martha Furman and a reading was given by Mrs. Joe Ducan.

The refreshment table was covered with a beautiful white linen cloth centered with a silver bowl containing yellow crysanthemums and a large white cake bearing a raised gold star in its center.

The American Gold Star Mothers colors, gold and white, were emphasized in the decorations which graced the room for the occasion.

Pastor's faith in U.S. boosted by New York trips

WEST ASHEVILLE — Sue Wright Barron has been helping people her entire life.

"My father was a minister, and we just did things for other people," said Barron, who is a volunteer chaplain with the Asheville Police Department as well as the minister of youth and education at Calvary Baptist Church.

"I find my greatest joy there, not in materialistic things," Barron said. "I have no money in the bank; I've never been a moneymaker. That's just the way it's always been."

So it was no surprise to the people who know Barron that she went to New York with a group of other pastors in the aftermath of Sept. 11 to help however they could — and all at their own expense. That first trip in February, she helped people seeking assistance with housing, work equipment and food after the attacks, served as a "listening counselor" and sometimes as an unofficial chaplain.

A month later she returned to New York on her own, this time helping distribute the funds she had helped people apply for earlier.

"The experiences I had there changed my attitude and outlook on life," Barron said. "I experienced firsthand the integrity of the agencies handling the funds as well as that of the people who lost so much of their lives."

Barron said she returned from her two weeks in New York — which were both horrific and uplifting — with an even greater appreciation for America, while at the same time becoming "more cynical about the battle between political parties."

"Why can't we be one nation? Why do we have to continue this battle between parties when it's the people that matter?" she said.

William Wilke, the West Asheville community resource officer with the APD, said Barron has been an inspiration to police officers here as well as the victims in New York.

"Let me tell you, all the chaplains are invaluable," Wilke said. "Sue is so cheerful, and always willing to help an volunteer in any way that she can. She's always there, and I just can't say enough good things about her."

Barron, who will be ordained as a minister in September, said she plans to return to New York for several days later this year to work with an after-school program at a church in Hell's Kitchen supported by Calvary Baptist.

In the meantime, she continues her volunteer work at the APD and takes every opportunity to talk about what happened last September.

"We must constantly make people aware of what happened," she said. "We can't forget this."

FAITHFUL NEGRO SERVANT IS DEAD

Henry Bason, for a half century a faithful servant for Colonel Robert Bingham and the Bingham Military school, died at Blue Ridge hospital for colored persons yesterday faternoon.

Bason was known as "Booze" to the students, cadets, alumni and friends of the school. He was one of the unique characters of this section. He was 76 years old and died after an illness of about a week.

Booze became connected with Bingham school when it was established in Mebane in 1880. When the institution was moved to Asheville in 1891 Booze came with it.

No Bingham admirer or student was more loyal to the school than Booze with his keen memory of past experiences, victories and defeats of the various athletic teams. He was always on the side line with "Hold 'em Bingham."

Funeral services will be held at Bingham Heights Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock.

WHITE AND BLACK TO HONOR 'BOOZE'

White and colored will pay their last respects today to Henry "Booze" Bason, faithful negro, whose life of long service is interwoven in the traditions and memories of Bingham Military school.

For nearly half a century "Booze" helped educate the hundreds of cadets who came to the famous military school. He was a character with whom every Bingham alumni, many residents of this city and friends of the institution are familiar with.

Rev. Dr. Robert F. Campbell, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, will preach the funeral service this afternoon at 5 o'clock at the home of Mrs. Grinnan on Bingham Heights. Burial will be made at Riverside Cemetery.

Bason died Friday afternoon at the Blue Ridge hospital for colored persons. Yesterday his body was taken to the home of Colonel S. R. McKee on Bingham Heights. Upon the arrival today of Mrs. Grinnan from Louisville, Ky., the body will be taken to her home for the funeral.

Members of the 1923 Bingham football team will serve as pallbearers. Booze was the son of a slave. For the greater part of his span of 76 years, he served the Bingham family and the school.

Taps were blown for Booze last night.

NIGHT-BLOOMING CEREUS

GARDEN NOTES

French Broad River Garden Club

ACCORDING to the great plant authority, L. H. Bailey, the "Night-blooming Cereus", as it is commonly called, belongs to the cactus family and is placed in the Selenicereus group. This particular group comprises sixteen different species: night-blooming, clambering, trailing or climbing cacti. It feeds to a certain extent on air and reaches to the tops of trees in its native haunts extending from the southern United States through Mexico to Argentina. The variety shown above is probably Cereus Pteranthus. It has large, very fragrant, waxy white flowers that open at night. It is native to Mexico.

The photographs of the opening blossoms were taken on Saturday night, August 3, between the hours of 9:00 and 11:30 with the exception of the one showing Mr. and Mrs. Bean standing beside the potted plant. That photo was made the day after the plant had bloomed.

Mrs. Bean rooted the plant from a single leaf five years ago. It has blossomed each year for the past four years and has had some 37 blossoms and buds in all. Mrs. Bean has it potted in a mixture of woods soil mixed with old, well sifted, stable manure carefully worked into the whole. She gives a feeding of Vigoro about once every two months in winter—one teaspoon to a quart of water—and keeps the plant outside all summer, in full sunlight, watering it from time to time to supply plenty of moisture during the blooming period. Every spring she re-pots the plant in fresh soil and sifts a little well-rotted, dry, stable manure over the surface soil so that the fertilizing element can trickle down to the roots each time it is watered. This same treatment is given in the fall.

The "bush" is now about 30 inches tall with a good spread. It began blooming in May of this year with two blossoms and has had sixteen blooms to the present time this summer. In dry, hot weather the buds sometimes fall off. Like all other cacti, the Night-blooming Cereus needs a liberal supply of water during the growing period. It is advisable not to over-water plants of this type in winter, as this is the dormant period, but they soon suffer if allowed to get too dry and should never be placed near a hot radiator.

Citizen Carrier Has Good Record; Wants Contest Award

Frank C. Bell is Asheville's biggest newspaperman.

Three inches more than six feet tall and weighing 260 pounds, he is a conspicuous figure at conferences of The Asheville Citizen's carrier force, and has the muscular ability to carry a large load of papers. He has been carrying papers for The Citizen about a year, and has not lost any weight, instead reports are that he has been gaining slightly.

Mr. Bell has a large portion of the West Asheville section and is a hard worker. Since taking over his present route, there have been several increases in patrons and his reports have been very favorably received in the circulation department.

His deliveries have been regular. Mr. Bell has not been late in reporting for his papers at The Citizen office a single time, and has delivered all his papers every morning. His accounts for papers are all settled on time and usually before the required date for such settlements.

Personality Profile: John Bell

By Reid Chapman

To visit John Bell's shop-cum-museum is to sit at his feet for a moment. In that moment he offers lessons on relationships, work, and life in general. And he'll drop a string of names on a listener—not to impress, but to communicate where he comes from. As he puts it, "This ain't all about me."

John Bell was born in 1939 in the old Mission Hospital. He lived on Mitchell Avenue in West Asheville for the next 25 years. He credits his childhood friend Sid Parker with pointing out that he grew up in an "Ozzie and Harriet family." During the Second World War, he made the rounds of the neighborhood with his father, an air raid warden, checking to make sure all the lights were out. He had the freedom to ride his scooter to the A & P grocery store. His was a neighborhood in which "lots of people had influences on kids." He cited George Prosser, a relocated Englishman, with teaching him "how to go out to the woods and see something other than trees." In those days, he says, "You didn't worry about people stealing." The worst thing he could think to say about his childhood home was walking out on a Sunday morning and passing Lavonne's, the drive-in that is now Franklin's Outdoor Sports, and seeing the white gravel thrown out in Haywood Road the previous evening by cars peeling out of the lot.

John's lifelong love of racing began in 1953 with his first soap box derby raced along South French Broad Avenue. His interest in cars goes back even farther. His childhood is filled with the lore of automotive travel. In 1926, his father and three other West Asheville boys drove a $15 Model T Ford across the United States.

When Bell graduated from Lee Edwards High School in 1957, his dad issued a warning: "You're not going to sit around all summer. Either go to college or join the service." John reflected that "I'd had about enough of school at that point," so he joined the Army. He quickly learned the difference between the geniality of West Asheville and the reality of the larger world: "I didn't know about the rest of the things going on until 1957." He spent the next three years in France.

In 1962, a few years after John returned from the service, his father bought Main Auto Parts on Craven Street behind the stockyard. Bell proudly walks any interested parties through the shop, showing off photographs and artifacts documenting the history of the business. The building was built in 1947, replacing a smaller one. At that time the company bought old cars and other scrap metal. He shows off the award given the business by the War Department during the Korean War for contributing scrap metal to the war effort. "830 tons ain't a big deal till you realize they're doing it by hand." At that point in time cars were scrapped and hauled down to the rail line over a half mile away. "I was 21 years old when I first walked through that door. It's hard to look at this stuff and realize 40 years of your life has gone by."

Bell began closely following racing during this time, often working in the shops of racers Banjo Mathews and Roy Trantham. He also went to the races down at the Speedway "'bout all the time." He took particular interest in a young Randy Bethea, encouraging his attraction to racing. Bethea went on to become the first and only Black NASCAR driver to win a Busch series pole. In 1963, Bell met Patricia Allen at a car show. He reports that she said, "If you need anybody to polish your trophies, give me a call." They were married two years later. Shortly thereafter, with a wife, a house, a business, and two girls to raise, "there was no time for racing." Bell took to working on "show" cars, taking them to Charlotte and Greensboro.

He has an obvious pride in his family, taking the opportunity to describe the achievements of his daughters, Leslie and Shannon. He commented on the recent pleasure of getting to watch his grandson take his first step. This experience was made all the greater knowing that his father had watched his daughter Shannon take her first step. Such traditions are important to John Bell. Later, while looking over Bell's soap box race car, I asked if that same grandson would have the opportunity to race it. Bell replied that it would be better for his grandson to build his own. "That thing about making it easier for your kid than you is a myth. They'll take it for granted."

John's life took an interesting turn three years ago, when he began to draw social security. He looked at that first check and realized it would just about fund a racing hobby. He took to running local dirt tracks. He proudly comments, "I've got the only federally funded car in the circuit." He doesn't miss the irony of this transformation either. "The guys who were racing when I started fixing cars are now burnt out on racing and are working on cars now that I'm racing." And he's had a good bit of success as well. In the past three years he has won three heat races and one feature race. His friend John McRealth got him back into racing. Although they both have cars, they work often as a team. In one recent race McRealth "tore his car up, and I gave him mine." McRealth went on to win the race, and Bell went on to earn an award for sportsmanship. As Bell reflected to his friend, "John, that sportsmanship award might mean more to me than a first place." This fits right in with another of Bell's philosophies: "You only get out of life what you give away."

Local Boys Return From Long Journey

Four West Asheville Boys Make 8,000 Mile Tour in $15.00 Ford

After covering parts of twenty-three states part of Canada and Old Mexico, covering more than eight thousand miles in a semi - rejuvenated Ford car, Carrol Miller, Henry Shook, Dewey Gordon and Raymond Bell, acompanied by their German police dog "Tot" returned to Asheville last week and have been busy greeting and bein greeted by old friends and telling trovelogues.

Leaving here shortly after the close of school this spring the quartette first went to Detroit where they pooled their financial resources and purchased a fifteen dollar Ford. The license plate on the car represented an investment of $12.50 which made the machanical and automotiva equipment complete stand them in the sum of $2.50.

Regardless of the cost, however it seems that the car was equal to the test through which it was destined to go as the boys reported that they had little difficulty during the entire trip and that their "buggy" "cadillaced" over hill and through valley without a whimper.

Garnering a can of yellow paint, the "Four Fordmen" painted the little car up in a coat of bright canary and decorated it with the names of their girl friends back home, punctuated here and there with witty quotations and departed from Detroit for points in Canada.

After visiting points of interest in Canada the "Carolina Special," with its refinue returned to the United States and headed for Kansas where the boys spent some time working in the wheat harvest and then continued on West to the Pacific coast.

Over the old Santa Fe Trail, the Lincoln Highway and the Victory Highway, the "Uncovered Wagon" as the car was also effectively named carried the young men over the plains, deserts and the Rocky Mountains to to California.

From California the party motored over the "Old Southern Route" to Mexico where they visited Juarez and other points of interest, returned to Texas and back to Western North Carolina through Louisiana, Mississippi and other Southern states.

Each of the boys have many interesting tales to tell of their various adventures including catching prairie dogs and jack rabbits in Kansas and other Western states. One of them tells of a Western jack rabbit which they captured which measured forty inches from the tip of his ears to the end of his hind legs. He says these rabbits are "slightly larger" than the native rabbits of the Smoky Mountains.

On one occassion while the boys were working in the wheat fields in Kansas they say they spent one Sunday pouring 750 gallons of water in a prairie dog hole but they say that they have not yet seen this particular animal since the time he made his dive into his hole.

One large desert hawk was captured alive which measured about thirty-six inches across wing tip to wing tip and the boys planned to bring the bird home with them as an additional mascot but unfortunately, he died and they abandoned him above the clouds in the Rock Mountains.

Besides enjoying the grandue of the Rockies, the party enjoyed a swim in the Great Salt Lake of Utah, crossed the Utah desert saw the Royal Gonge, went through Monarch Pass, which is 11,260 ft. above sea level, viewed the sand hills of California and visited many historic spots in the West and on the Pacific coast.

Much attention was attracted along the route and the boys had the opoprtunity to some wonderful boosting for Western North Carolina and Asheville. They met a few motor parties from North Carolina and had the pleasure of answering many questions about the Land of the Sky. Everyone seemed greatly interested they say.

During the entire trip the party enjoyed good weather and was caught in a rain only once. They had no top on their car. After leaving California on the return trip they had no trouble whatever not even a puncture, they say.

Although they greatly enjoyed the experience and are of the unanimous opinion that its educational value was great, each of the boys expressed himself as being glad to be home again some of them will return to school here this fall while others plan to go away to school.

THE NEWS PERSONALITY OF THE WEEK

RAYMON B. BELL

Typical of the many men here who are doing effective home front service, going about their civilian defense duties without fanfare or ado, is Raymon B. Bell, air raid warden for district No. 22, West Asheville.

He is one of those who ever remains on the alert for an ALERT and keeps his organization ever ready for the yellow, blue and red flash.

Between "air raids" a good air raid warden sees to it that his district personnel is qualified with all up-to-the-minute training available. And Raymon is quite proud of the fact that practically every one of his 49 district members have completed the required course. The only exceptions are those who have recently been recruited to take the place of those who have left the city, but they will soon be full-fledged civilian soldiers, Raymon has not doubt.

Of a quiet, calm and well-composed nature, Raymon is tempermentally fitted for a district leader, especially if the city should ever be besieged by actual fire from the sky; and is equipped with the patience and habit of thoroughness which assure faithful attention to organizational details.

Indeed, district No 22 is one of the reasons why Asheville's air raid system is one of the best in the state. You don't have to take this column's word for it: just ask Air Raid Chief Julian Stepp.

Raymon has another Asheville defense post. Recently he was named a member of the maintenance committee for the Office of Defense Transportation here.

A native of Asheville, Raymon is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. John A. Bell. His father, as many recall, was a veteran street car and bus operator here.

Raymon attended Ashland avenue grammar school, Newton academy, Hall Fletcher High school, and Asheville Senior high, after which he studied at Biltmore Junior College and the University of Tennessee.

At Hall Fletcher Raymon was

a member of the student council and at Tennessee was one of the Theta Chi Alpha fraternity.

While attending grammar school Raymon worked in the mechanical department of the Sawyer and the Bell Motor companies. After leaving college, he operated a Standard Oil service station for three years and then went back to Bell Motor company where he remained for four years. Then he became connected with Oscar Brown Motor company, where he worked in the parts and service department for about a year. From there he joined the mechanical department of the Skyland Motor company where he worked for about six months.

With this background of training, he became associated with International Harvester company here in 1940, first serving as salesman. For the past year and a half he has been parts manager for the company.

Raymon never had the rambling urge perhaps but once, and he gave the impulse the works.

Shortly after finishing high school in the spring of 1929 he in company with three other West Asheville boys, Carrol Miller, Henry Shook and Dewey Gordon, and their German police dog, "Tot," set out on a Gulliver jaunt that took them 8,000 miles and covered 23 states, and parts of Canada and old Mexico.

They first went to Detroit where they pooled their financial resources and purchased a fifteen dollar Ford. Garnering a can of yellow paint, the "Four Fordsmen" dressed the little car up in a coat of bright canary and decorated it with the names of their girl friends back home, punctured here and there with witty quotations, and headed toward Canada.

After visiting Canadian points of interest, this "Carolina Special" with its retinue returned to the United States and headed for Kansas where the boys spent some time working in the wheat fields, and then continued on west to the Pacific coast.

Over the old Sante Fe Trail, the Lincoln Highway and the Victory Highway, the "Uncovered Wagon" as the car was also effectively named, carried the young men over plains, deserts and Rocky Mountains to California.

From California the party "cadillaced" over the "Old Southern Route" to Mexico where they visited Juarez and other points of interest, returned to Texas and back to Western North Carolina through Louisiana, Mississippi and other southern states.

Raymon won't say whether he met a senorita down in Old Mexico or not, but we have our own idea about the matter.

But even if he did he has had ample reason to forget all about that, because in 1937 Raymon married a brown-eyed Brown belle from out Weaverville way—Miss Frances Brown, whom he met through a sister who had married Frances' brother.

Raymon and Frances, who reside at 64 Mitchell avenue, West Asheville, have two young sons, John Grover, age 4, and William Anson, who is one and half years old. And the way Raymon greets those kids and they him when he comes home after work makes the older daddies want to start playing papa all over again.

Besides Mrs. Robert Brown—who was cupid's liaison in bringing Raymon and Frances together—Raymon has one other sister, Mrs. George P. Buckner.

Raymon is president of the Cosmic club to which office he was elevated last January. A member of the organization since 1937, he is a former secretary of the club, being named to that office to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William L. Morgan. Then Raymon was on the board of directors for one year before being named to the presidency.

Conscientious, sincere and mild in speech, Raymon is not given to much talk, but when he does speak they listen. His club fellows say he is a good president. Our wager is that he will be elected for another six-months term when election time rolls around in June.

Raymon Bell is a hard-working, civic-minded, happily-married and home-loving young man who may be called to the armed services before this thing is over but who in the meantime is doing his bit at home—a typical American.

Rites To Be Held Monday For Dr. C. C. Bennett, 71

Services for Dr. C. C. Bennett, 71, of 82 Westwood Pl., Asheville dentist for 45 years, will be held at 2 p. m. Monday in First Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Bennett, dental member of the Asheville Board of Health for some 30 years, died Saturday morning in an Asheville hospital after an illness of several weeks.

A native of the Cataloochee section of Haywood County, he was a graduate of Emory University's School of Dentistry, where he was valedictorian of his class.

Officiating at the Monday service will be the Rev. A. Allen Gardner Jr., pastor of First Presbyterian Church.

Details of burial arrangements will be announced later.

Active pallbearers will be Glenn R. Snipes, Paul W. Markwood, Albin Knight, Claude L. Hayden, William M. Morgan and Dr. H. W. Stevens.

Honorary pallbearers will be John Geizentanner, James Geizentanner, Guy Ward, Arthur York, Perry Alexander, Dunbar Holder, Cecil Hoskins, Baxter Taylor, June McKenzie, Hilliard Green, Ottis Green, Jimmie Hagan, George Lobb, Charles Wallace, E. C. Burleson, I. C. Crawford, Frank Brown, Ed Lyda, Mort Kahn Sr.

L. Leonard, Honiss A. Tull, Jim Dowtin, Dr. George G. Gilbert, Dr. Patrick F. Clark, Bill Krickhan, members of the Buncombe County Dental Society, the Buncombe County Health Department, the Asheville Checker Club and the John A. Nichols Masonic Lodge.

Dr. Bennett came to Asheville when he was 16, worked for a year and then entered Mars Hill College, where he was an honor student.

He also attended the Old Weaver College and soon afterward went to Western Carolina College in Cullowhee where he later served on the board of trustees.

Dr. Bennett was a member of First Baptist Church, the Country Club of Asheville, the Buncombe County Dental Society and the North Carolina Dental Society. He was also a member of the John A. Nichols Masonic Lodge.

Several years ago Dr. Bennett and Frank Donoho of Weaverville, who was greenskeeper at the Country Club of Asheville golf course, invented a greens cultivator that received wide acclaim.

Dr. Bennett's chief hobbies were golf and checkers. He had served as president of the Asheville Checker Club.

Much of Dr. Bennett's time was given to the care of children's teeth. He also was co-inventor of a medicine for infected gums that has been widely used.

For many years he had maintained offices in the Flatiron Building.

Another project in which Dr. Bennett had put much time and money was a private fishing lake with cottages in the Avery's Creek section.

Surviving are the widow, Mrs. Lillian Bennett; three sons, the Rev. Harold Bennett of Nashville, Tenn., Richard Bennett of Jacksonville, Fla., and Ralph Bennett of Sandusky, Ohio; three stepsons, Walter N., Joseph C. and Frank W. Bennett of Asheville; two sisters, Mrs. Lela Clark and Mrs. June L. Parks of Asheville; two brothers, J. W. Bennett of Fort Worth, Texas, and G. R. Bennett of Asheville, and 13 grandchildren.

Arrangements are under direction of Lewis Funeral Home.

THE OLD ATKINSON HOME on Westwood Place is a West Asheville landmark. Built in 1881 of handmade brick, it was bought shortly afterward by Capt. Natt Atkinson. A few years later his son, E. B. Atkinson, began a long residence in the home. In its earliest days, the house was one of very few in what is now West Asheville and was used for a while as a summer, country home. The home and some five acres are now owned by Dr. and Mrs. C. C. Bennett.

Retired Asheville Police Capt. John Best, who has been service officer for VFW Post 891 since 1953, volunteers his time to help veterans and their dependents file disability claims and work through the maze of the Veterans Administration.

Best knows way around VA bureaucracy

By Barbara Blake

John Best is 85 years old, but he's still the man to see if you're a veteran living in Western North Carolina.

He knows, to lay it out straight, everything there is to know about veterans benefits, claims-filing, disability regulations and, most importantly, the mysterious ins and outs of the behemoth known as the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Best, who retired as a captain with the Asheville Police Department in 1978 after 31 years, has been the service officer for Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 891 since 1953.

During the years he was a full-time police officer, he would go to the VFW Post at night and on weekends to help his fellow veterans process their disability claims and plan strategies to take on the Veterans Administration bureaucrats in Washington if they balked at doing the right thing.

In 44 years, he has assisted more than 5,000 veterans and dependants in obtaining favorable action on VA claims.

And he has never received a dime for his services.

"I never give up on 'em – and that's what the VA wants you to do," Best said earlier this week, pecking with two fingers on an ancient Smith-Corona typewriter in the VFW Post headquarters on Leicester Highway.

"I got one guy $57,000 in back pay, but it took 12 years. He was a POW (in the Pacific Theater during World War II), and it took them (the VA) forever to do anything for him," Best said. "There was a guy with leprosy who had been in Vietnam, and they only gave him 50 percent (disability). But I got him 100 percent, this was back in '85."

Best, who was in the U.S. Army for "12 years, eight months and seven days," served in Africa, Sicily and Italy. Two years after his discharge at the war's end, he began his police career – a career that commanded respect from all who knew him.

"When I came to work at the police department in 1974, I was assigned to work on Capt. Best's squad," said Asheville Police Chief Will Annarino. "I came out of college as a naive young rookie, and I've thought a number of times through the years how important it was for me, in establishing my own standards and work ethic, to have someone like Capt. Best, who was absolutely above reproach.

"The man had the highest moral and ethical standards of anyone I had ever seen," Annarino said. "He demanded a lot from the people that worked for him, and I think that set the course of how I've tried to operate as a police officer through the years – that it's not what you say, but how you act and what you do."

While ethics and integrity were his hallmarks at the APD, determination and knowledge have led to his reputation as the master of VA affairs in Western North Carolina.

"If you need it done, he's the man," said Stephen Clark, a U.S. Navy veteran waiting for Best to help him with a claim at the VFW headquarters on Leicester Highway.

"He's the only man at the VFW who knows how to do this; he gets the ball rolling, knows who to see, where to send things," Clark said. "I honestly don't know who would do it if he wasn't here. He's done it for so many years, and so many people depend on him."

Best has no plans to "retire" from the non-paying job he's held for more than half his life.

"There's a couple of guys who could do this if they wanted to," Best said modestly. "But I'm not planning to go anywhere. I go for an annual check-up every year, and the last time I went, the doctor took my blood pressure because he didn't believe it the first time."

MILLER—BINGHAM.

Young Asheviller Weds a Blue Grass Belle at Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 22.—[Special.]—One of the most brilliant weddings that has taken place in this city for some time was that of Miss Eleanor Everhart Miller of this city and Capt. Robert Worth Bingham of Asheville, which was solemnized at 8:30 o'clock Wednesday night at Calvary church on Fourth avenue, between York and Breckenridge streets. The Rev. Dr. Minnegrode performed the ceremony.

The attendants were Miss Pauline Woodruff of Knoxville, Tenn., Misses Mattie Cowling, Lucy Young, Clarisse Hewitt, Amelia Cowling, Carrie Fitz Patty Ellison of this city. Messrs. W. W. Davis of Atlanta, Ga., Charles Bridges, Eckstein Norton, Will McGonnigle of this city, J. Chambers, Thomas Bailey Lee of Asheville, and Thos. L. Stilt of Wabash, Ind.

The church was handsomely decorated with white flowers of various kinds, white being the wedding color. The bride wore a gown of white brocaded satin, trimmed in point d'angleterre. She carried a bouquet of sweet peas. All the bridesmaids wore gowns of white Paris muslin and also carried bouquets of sweet peas.

After the ceremony at the church a handsome reception was given to the young couple at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Samuel Adams Miller, 1126 Fourth avenue.

The bride is a brunette of unusual beauty with most winning manners and attractive personality. She is one of Louisville's most charming young women, and is a great favorite both here and elsewhere.

The newly married couple left late Wednesday night for the Chicago Beach hotel, where they will spend their honeymoon, after which they will return to Asheville, where they will make their future home.

The bridegroom is the son of Maj. Robert Bingham of Asheville, a handsome and popular young man and numbering his friends here by hundreds. The bride has a large admiring acquaintanceship in the city, where she has been a visitor.

THE BINGHAM-M'KEE NUPTIALS

BRILLIANT SCENE AT THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Miss Mary Kerr Bingham of Asheville Wedded to Dr. Solomon Reid McKee of Bowling Green, Ky., Rev. Dr. Campbell Officiating.

Beautiful decorations and exquisite music greeted the brilliant audience assembled last evening to witness the marriage of Miss Mary Kerr Bingham, the accomplished daughter of Major Robert Bingham of this city, to Dr. Solomon Reid McKee of Bowling Green, Ky.

From 8 to 8:50 the Imperial Trio discoursed sweet music to the delighted ears of the large and fashionable assemblage. The bridal party entered the doors to the right, to the music of Mendelssohn's wedding march.

The ushers were J. C. Reid of Nova Scotia, Dr. C. Alphonso Smith of the University of Louisiana, Robert Worth Bingham of Louisville, Ky., J. S. McAlister of Worthville, N. C., De Berniere Whitaker and Thos. Bailey Lee of Asheville. The bridesmaids were Misses Mary McAlister of Asheboro, N. C., Ethel Bagby of Raleigh, Maud Craig of Atlanta, Ellen Penniman, Laura Carter and Frances Carter of Asheville. Immediately preceding the bride, who entered on the arm of her father, were the little flower girls, Misses Virginia Worth and Josephine Boylan and Miss Elizabeth Pasco of Florida. S. W. McKee, a brother of the bridegroom, was best man, and the bride was met by the bridegroom at the altar.

The bride was attired in a gown of ivory satin trimmed with duchess and point lace. She carried a bouquet of white roses and ferns. The maid of honor wore a pale green mousseline de soie and carried a shower of white carnations. The bridesmaids wore exquisite gowns of white Paris muslin with tulle waist, and carried pink carnations. As dainty as a dream were the little flower girls with white frocks and holding pink rosebuds in their little hands.

The beautiful ceremony, in perfect harmony and taste with the brilliant scene, was performed by Rev. Dr. R. F. Campbell of the First Presbyterian church. In reverse order to entrance the party left the church, the strains of Lohengrin floating on the air.

After the ceremony the bridal party was given a brilliant reception by Major and Mrs. Bingham at Bingham Heights, the home of the bride's parents.

Dr. McKee is professor of chemistry in Ogden college, Ky.

Among the many present at the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Penniman, Mrs. Chas. A. Moore, Dr. and Mrs. Chas. E. Hilliard, Dr. and Mrs. Chas. COL. ROBERT BINGHAM AT THE UNIVERSITY

HIS ADDRESS TO THE Y. M. C. A. SUNDAY—TALK ON EXPANSION MONDAY.

Chapel Hill, N. C., Feb. 21.—By invitation of the president of the university and the Y. M. C. A., Col. Robert Bingham, superintendent of the Bingham school, Asheville, spent Saturday and Sunday at the university speaking to the Y. M. C. A. on Sunday night and to the whole university on Monday. The Binghamites, 15 in number, now at the university tendered him a banquet Saturday night, which was a delightful occasion. His whole visit was one of pleasure and profit to the institution. Bingham school and the university are the oldest continuous educational forces in the state, and it is not too much to say that Bingham school has been to the south in the field of preparatory education what Rugby school was to England.

Colonel Bingham spoke to the Y. M. C. A. on the return of the prodigal. It was a speech of genuine power and unique individual charm. The strong, rugged, forceful personality of the speaker is back of everything he says. There are no catch phrases or formulas in his speech. He sees to the bottom of things and goes straight to the essential point. There were passages of unusual strength in his appeal to young men to so order themselves as to be able to live lives of usefulness and power.

On Monday at the last morning hour the entire university assembled to hear Colonel Bingham discuss the general problem of expansion and the part the English speaking man is to play in the world. The speech was one of power, showing careful study of the characteristics of the English race, its love of liberty, its masterfulness, its justice and it steadfastness.

Colonel Bingham is a pronounced advocate of expansion, indeed, he deems it inevitable, and he is a staunch adherent of English traditions. By his directness and simplicity and sincerity of speech and opinion Colonel Bingham gave a splendid illustration of the powers of such qualities to captivate and attract thoughtful critical young men. If there is anything he knows well it is a boy. He knows how to win his love and admiration and at the same time to control his impulses and direct his course toward scholarship and right living One could not but feel in listening to Colonel Bingham that he had no age but the prime of life that he had a genius for keeping in touch with the movements of the modern world and with the aspirations of young men, and that the great school which has been conducted for over a century by men of his blood is destined for many years to feel the vigorous touch of his own energy and constructive ability.

It has been claimed that the old breed of school masters of the type of Thomas Arnold and Edward Thwing, David Caldwell and the elder Horner and the elder Graves had passed away, but Colonel Bingham, the Nestor of preparatory education in North Carolina, is a living refutation of that claim. The university, his alma mater, will always be proud to welcome him to her walls.

COL. BINGHAM'S TRIBUTE TO TAR HEEL MANHOOD

(Special to The Citizen.)

Raleigh, N. C., Feb. 14.—The educational conference was in session until midnight. Governor Aycock presided. A full interchange of views was had as to the best plan of campaign. The principal of local option in rural districts is to be pushed vigorously. A well known capitalist whose name is withheld has promised C. D. McIver to erect a thousand dollar rural school house, and others will follow the example.

President McIver in a stirring address, set forth the plans for the campaign of education. The conference adopted an address to the people of the state. An executive committee was appointed, consisiting of Gevernor Aycock, Superintendent Toon and President McIver, and a committee was appointed to furnish the press with matter each week. A letter is to be written to each preacher requesting him to preach at least annually one sermon on public education.

Colonel Robert Bingham presided at the night conference and made a powerful speech for the public schools. His tribute to North Carolina manhood was eloquent and touching.

Colonel Bingham Makes Address On Compulsory Education

Colonel Bingham spoke before a representative audience of the Central Labor Union last night on compulsory school attendance. The speaker emphasized the dignity of labor and the importance of industrial education in this day of industrial progress. Colonel Bingham enumerated the many sterling qualities of the Southern white man and especially the so-called "mountain whites" of Western North Carolina, as shown on the battlefield. "It is to be hoped," the speaker said, "that this race will never again be tried by the test of war, but often the test of peace is more severe than the test of war. We need to equip ourselves by means of education for the battle of life. The laboring man must be educated to win a livelihood in this day.

"Ignorance is darkness and folly and crime, and the father who keeps his child from an education is in a sense criminal or not a sane man.

"This is a government by the people, but the people must have intelligence if they are to govern. We cannot have intelligent government without an educated citizenship. At this point the state steps in and says all must be educated as a means of protection. The state has a right to demand this in the same way and for the same reason that it may demand a man's money, his service, his knowledge and even his life in order to safeguard the state and to promote its welfare."

In speaking for the additional tax to be raised for the compulsory education of children, Colonel Bingham stated that it was so insignificant that one man in the city could bear it and not be overburdened.

"This movement for compulsory school attendance must start in the cities just as the graded school education started in the cities. Gradually it will spread to the counties and finally to the whole state and to the South.

"The Southern white man has a broad field but many problems confronting him and he must face the future and what it has in store for us by educating our children, all of our children.

"Compulsory education is becoming general throughout the world. The Southern States are still behind in this matter and they must arouse themselves to their great responsibility and meet it. The man who does not give his child the best education possible is an enemy to his race and his nation, and it is our duty as citizens to protect the state against the ignorance of such men. "Cursed be he," saith the Lord, "that doeth his duty negligently."

Colonel Bingham closed his address in a short review of the race question.

President Creasman introduced Dr. Paul Paquin, who spoke for a few minutes on the importance of compulsory education as relating especially to the laboring classes. He said that it was bound to come and that he believed the measure would soon be a law in this state as it is in other states throughout the country.

Professor R. J. Tighe made a short talk, explaining the necessity of a compulsory school law, and he was followed by Mr. O. R. Jarrett, who suggested a scheme to form an endless chain of voters to support the measure and vote for the candidates who would enact the law.

Col. Bingham Lifts Veil of Half

At the commencement exercises held at Chapel Hill on Tuesday, Col. Robert Bingham of Asheville was the principal speaker. Colonel Bingham's address was of additional interest by reason of the fact that he is one of the very few survivors of the class of '57. He lifted the veil of fifty years, recalling with much pathos on the many changes which half a century has wrought.—During some passages of his speech the colonel was obliged to pause, by reason of deep emotion, and the silence which pervaded the hall was deep and impressive. It seemed as if a voice out of the spirit world was calling to the young generation. Colonel Bingham's address was undoubtedly the best ever delivered at commencement exercises in the history of the university. He was introduced by Colonel T. S. Kenan, as follows:

"Col. Robert Bingham, the youngest survivor of the class of 1857, has been chosen to represent the class today. The school which the Binghams, from grandfather to grandson, have administered since 1793, is the oldest one in the south, and is the only school in the United States which has been conducted by the same family so as to reach three centuries, the waning years of the eighteenth century, through the waxing and waning years of the nineteenth century and continuing in its greatest vigor and expansion in the waxing years of the twentieth century.

The continuous connection of the Binghams with this university is longer than that of any other family in the United States with any other university in the United States, except that of the Adamses with Harvard. It began with the grandfather of the present headmaster, who was professor of ancient languages in the university in 1800. It continued with his son, William James Bingham, the school's second headmaster, who graduated with first distinction in 1825 and declined to accept a professorship in the university because he considered the school his vocation. It continued with William Bingham, who graduated in 1855 with the first distinction, and died in 1873. Robert Bingham, its fourth headmaster, graduated with first distinction in 1857, and has administered the school as its fourth headmaster since 1873, having declined a professorship in the university because, like his father, he considered the school his vocation.

When the war between the sections broke out, he went to the front and surrendered with General Lee's 1,192 armed men at Appomattox Court House, but he employed as his substitute in the school his father's nephew, William Bingham Lynch, a first honor graduate of the class of 1861, afterwards his partner for 20 years, and now enjoying the highest reputation as an educator, a scholar and a man in the state of Florida. After the war ended, Robert Bingham resumed his place in the school, his partnership and his share of the school's income, after paying his substitute, having been kept intact for him by his father and brother during his whole absence.

His son, Robert, who was in the university in 1889-90-91, taught in the school for four years, and is ready to leave the law and become its fifth headmaster when there is need. His son Robert, the third of the name, and of the fifth generation from the school's founder, is already in strenuous training as the school's sixth headmaster, is to enter the university about 1915, and the three Robert Binghams, father, son and grandson, are with us here today. It is most fitting, therefore, that Robert Bingham should represent the class of 1857 at the fiftieth anniversary of our graduation."

Colonel Bingham Speaks.

Colonel Bingham, who on rising, was received with loud applause, said:

"It would be interesting and instructive on an occasion like this to deal in reminiscences; but with things more vital to say, I shall confine myself to but one reminiscence, which I refer to because it contrasts the educational conditions of today and of 50 years ago very sharply.

"In 1853, when the class of 1857 matriculated, there was not a single university west or south of the University of North Carolina. Now there are about 30 universities, and universities so-called, in the state of Tennessee, more than 20 in the state of Texas and, according to the statistics of the late Prof. Baskerville of Vanderbilt university, there are more universities and universities so-called in the southern states than in all the rest of the English speaking world.

"Up to 1875, 80 years after its foundation, this university had never created a president for itself, and in 1853, when we matriculated, not a single one of the full professors was an alumnus of the university, and only one was of southern birth. All the others were northern men from northern colleges, except one, and he was an Englishman and was commonly known as Old Bull, Old Johnny and Old Johnny Bull. In 1853 the university had only about 200 North Carolina students; Davidson only 100 in all; Wake Forest about the same number, and Trinity was founded only in 1853. Now this university has 680 North Carolina students, and our denominational colleges aggregate more than 1,000 North Carolina students, an increase of about 300 per cent. for the university and of more than 500 per cent for the denominational colleges, and the state's A. and M. college, presided over by an alumnus and ex-president of the university, an impossible conception in 1853, has about 500 North Carolina students.

Imported Teachers.

"In 1853 very few, if any, men of North Carolina training were sought as teachers anywhere, and we ourselves imported northern men from northern colleges as presidents and professors in our university and in our institutions of learning, both for our young men and our young women just as well. When a North Carolinian was called for in 1833 to succeed President Caldwell, a New Englander from Yale, the politicians determined to shelve their most dangerous rival for the United States senate by making him president of the university. He was a man of great natural gifts and had risen more rapidly than any other politician had ever done in the state before, or than any one has ever done since, though he had but little training of any school and no training at all of any college, and the United States senate, his greatest ambition, seemed easily within his grasp. But a combination of the other less successful politicians against him sent one of his rivals to the senate and made him president of the university.

But of late universities and colleges conferring degrees in 21 states of the union and in three foreign countries have come to North Carolina for presidents and professors. This university has created three presidents for itself, one for the University of Texas, one for Tulane and one for the University of Virginia. This university has furnished 157 presidents and professors to universities and colleges; Davidson, since its foundation in 1837, has furnished 80; Wake Forest, since its foundation in 1838, has furnished 104; Trinity, since its foundation in 1853, has furnished 75, and these North Carolina bred presidents and professors, 416 in all and enough not recorded to carry the number to 450, have carried our North Carolina standard of culture to Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Wisconsin and across the seas to Brazil, China and Japan.

"How few of the class of 1857 are present today! How few of the absent ones are still in the land of life! How many have gone the way of all the earth! Of the 75 men with the dew of youth upon them, who took their diplomas here 50 years ago, only 20 remain; all the others have passed over to the silent majority, and now,

" 'Their place in all the pomp that fills
The circuit of the summer hills,
Is that their graves are green;
For The moss-clad marbles rest
On the friends who loved the best
And were loved in their bloom;
And the names we loved to hear
Have been carved for many a year
On the tomb.'

And, alas! no friendly marble marks the nameless graves of some who fell in battle. Of more than one it may be said:

"We buried him darkly at the dead of night,

COL. ROBT. BINGHAM.

COL. BINGHAM GIVEN WARM GREETINGS

Veterans at Reunion Rejoiced to Seed Aged Officer Whose School Is Famous.

The friends of Colonel Robert Bingham, the venerable and loved educator of the famous Bingham School, have thoroughly enjoyed meeting Colonel Bingham at the several functions tendered the veterans during their stay in Asheville.

Colonel Bingham was a brave Confederate soldier, having served during the entire four years. He was, at the time the war closed, Captain of Company G, 44th Regiment.

He attended the organ recital at Grove Park Inn on Tuesday afternoon and again last night attended the ball at the Battery Park Hotel. He entered into the spirit of the festivities and greeted many of his old comrades who were delighted to again see their old friend.

Colonel Bingham recently celebrated his 84th birthday, he having been born on the 5th day of September, 1838. On the occasion of his bithday he received from an admiring friend the following tribute in the form of a poem, which fully expresses the admiration and love in which Colonel Bingham is held by those who have known him for many years:

To COL. ROBERT BINGHAM

In strength and pride of youth,
He answered first the call of arms
Through bloody fray and weary
He bore a part.

When war's alarms no more were heard,
He boldly took his stand
With those who sought to build again
A war-torn land, seeking no personal gain;
Content Fame's accolade should be.
He was a Soldier, one who followed
Lee.

Now with the passing years have come
Pain, age and weakness, the inevitable foes
No man may conquer and no strength oppose.
Serene he sits, love-guarded, fearing naught,
As one who has met unflinchingly
What Life brought and kept unstained
His faith and loyalty,—
A Soldier still, as when he followed
Lee.

Col. Robert Bingham Felicitated By School-Mate, Former Students And Friends On 85th Birthday

WILLIAM R. WEBB EULOGIZES HIS FORMER TEACHER

Distinguished Men Present for Informal Celebration at Bingham School.

MANY FLOWERS AND TELEGRAMS

M. C. S. Noble, Haywood Parker and Others Praise Educator.

With relatives, former classmates, students and close friends gathered around him, Colonel Robert Bingham beloved educator and ex-Confederate soldier, fittingly celebrated the 85th year since his birth at Bingham School last night. Featuring the addresses, in which glowing tributes were paid the venerable leader, was that of William Robert Webb, former United States Senator from Tennessee, who told of the great services rendered to the State of North Carolina and to the South by Colonel Bingham in his several decades of teaching.

Distinguished men from Asheville and elsewhere, all intimately associated with Colonel Bingham in the course of an unusually rich life, attended the birthday celebration and all expressed their love and affection for their old teacher and friend.

Buffet supper was served the guests on the porch of the residence of the head-master of Bingham School. Colonel Bingham, though somewhat infirm of body, was able to greet all his guests personally and many remarked upon his retentive memory. At his 85th year, Colonel Bingham is in full possession of his mental faculties.

All during the day yesterday, telegrams and flowers came in addressed to Colonel Bingham. The messages expressed many happy returns of the day, and the flowers expressed the love that his friends and former students bear him. The floral gifts and telegrams came from many places throughout the country, wherever there was a former Binghamite or friend.

An admirer of Colonel Bingham, hearing of the proposed 85th birthday celebration, sent the following lines, dedicated to him, to be read to the Colonel on the date of his birth. It is entitled "To Colonel Bingham."

"Grown Old—I know there's one
On whom time cannot trace these words—
Simply a wisdom large and crowning grace
Of kindness, from a hearth long lent
To every thought and act of love;
And to a mind to custom bent to thoughts
Whose goodness, justice, truth soar far above
And yet seem not too high for mortal hands to reach.
Grown Old—not while a life like this can teach.
Only Eternity itself measures the goal:
For years can never touch the soul
Of one grown only nobler,
Not grown old."

The informal birthday exercises, held in the reception room, were of an impressive nature. As the guests walked into the room where the birthday cake was, Colonel Bingham greeted each one at the door. In the line was old Uncle Henry Basin, a colored servant that has been with Colonel Bingham and his family for over 50 years. Uncle Basin is ten years younger than Colonel Bingham. He was recipient of many handshakes and felicitations from his old friends, the former Binghamites.

The informal birthday exercises were opened by invocation pronounced by Rev. John H. Tillinghast, of Columbia, S. C., a former class-mate of Colonel Bingham at Oaks, in Orange County, back in the years from 1849 to 1853. They were also together at the University of North Carolina from 1851 to 1867. Mr. Tillinghast was also Chaplain in the 44th North Carolina Infantry, in the War Between the States. This was Colonel Bingham's old regiment. Mr. Tillinghast and Colonel Bingham are also first cousins. These two men have seen much of life together and last night Mr. Tillinghast paid tribute in no uncertain terms of his beloved friend. He brought out the fact that he was the oldest Binghamite present, having been a student under Colonel Bingham's father, and is three years older than Colonel Bingham himself.

The main address of the evening was by former Senator Webb, head of the famous Webb School of Bellbuckle, Tenn. Dr. Webb, an uncle of Chas. A. Webb, of Asheville, who was present last night, was given the honorary degree of doctor of laws at the University of North Carolina a year or two ago. He is possibly the most distinguished man ever taught by Colonel Bingham. He was one of Colonel Bingham's first students. Mr. Webb was born in 1842 in Person County, N. C. He attended Bingham School during 1855-1860. He entered the University of North Carolina in 1860, one of the first four men Colonel Bingham prepared for the University. Of these, three of them were "first honor men" of their class. This is distinctive when it is considered that only one other man of the University class was "first honor man."

In introducing his former student last evening, Colonel Bingham stated that Mr Webb was the first teacher to be directly called from the teachers' rostrum to the United States Senate. Mr. Webb was appointed to the Senate in 1913 to fill out an unexpired term, on account of the death of Robert L. Taylor.

Mr. Webb declared that the greatest honor that ever came to him was to be allowed to attend the 85th birthday celebration of Colonel Bingham and to express his appreciation and love for him as a man and as an educator. Dr. Webb expressed his admiration for the educational methods of Colonel Bingham and told of the disciplinary features of his system. Colonel Bingham, it is stated, was a strict disciplinarian, but always mixed punishment with mercy and good will.

Mr Webb also called attention to Colonel Bingham's stress on teaching Latin and Greek and the other classical studies in preference to "commercial" teaching. Mr. Webb expressed his approval of this and told of the efficient methods employed by Colonel Bingham in handling boys.

M. C. S. Noble, former Bingham student, and former instructor and commandant of cadets at the School, but for years Dean of the School of Education at the University of North Carolina, spoke of the days when he was a student under Colonel Bingham and said that many of North Carolina's foremost sons got their training from the former superintendent of the Bingham School. Professor Noble declared that it is his belief that when the history of this State is written in the future Colonel Bingham's name will shine as one of North Carolina's great sons. He also paid his respects to teaching methods as employed today and compared them to the methods as used by Colonel Bingham, with the comparison in favor of the latter. Professor Noble is a firm believer in the classics and so expressed himself.

Other speakers of the evening were Dr. Pinkney Herbert, who, although he declared himself as not being fortunate enough to have been a Binghamite, expressed himself as a great admirer of Colonel Bingham and his school; Judge Thomas McDow, of Columbia, S. C., who said that Colonel Bingham was the finest of North Carolina manhood; Dr. Millender, who spoke as Colonel Bingham's physician for the past 30 years and as an old Bingham student, declaring that Colonel Bingham yet had 15 years or more of life left to him and said that he was in very good condition; and Major Barlow, U. S. A., Commandant, who expressed himself as being greatly impressed with what he has learned of Colonel Bingham in the few months he has been connected with the school.

Haywood Parker, of Asheville, brought out an interesting fact concerning the educational career of Colonel Bingham. He said that in the years following the War Between the States, when the South was poor and there were few public schools, Colonel Bingham furnished free tuition to at least one-third of the students of his school.

Colonel Bingham was born at Hillsboro, N. C., in 1838. His preparatory education was received at Bingham School, conducted by his father. He attended this school from 1849 to 1853, and then entered the University of North Carolina. He received both the A. B. and M. A. degrees. In 1890 he was given the honorary degree of doctor of laws by his alma mater. He was a captain in the Confederate Army and was with General Lee at the surrender at Appomattox. He was later a colonel in the North Carolina National Guard. Since the year 1873 he was superintendent of the Bingham School until some three years ago when he retired. He is now superintendent emeritus. He was at one time president of the North Carolina Historical and Literary Society, and is the author of many articles on diversified subjects.

In the years during Colonel Bingham's activity in the interests of Bingham School, "its success and the character of its managers, as well as of its student body, has a rank second to none among American preparatory schools." In 1891 the school was moved from Orange County to the present location on Bingham Heights.

When Colonel Bingham retired as active head of the school three years ago, his often expressed desire to see what his successors would do was fulfilled. Milton Bailey, of Bakersville, a student of Colonel Bingham in 1891, when the school first opened on the Asheville Plateau, last night openly congratulated Colonel Bingham on the efficiency of those now in charge of the school. Colonel S. R. McKie, son-in-law of Colonel Bingham, is the present superintendent. Captain Bingham McKie, representing the fifth generation of Bingham teachers, being a grand-son of Colonel Bingham, is teaching modern languages.

Among the friends and alumni attending the birthday testimonial were the following: W. R. Webb, Chas. A. Webb, Rev. John H. Tillinghast, Major Barlow, Prof. M. C. S. Noble, Dr. Pinkney Herbert, Judge Nelson Phillips, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Texas, a former Bingham student; Thomas McDow, A. H. McCormick, Rae McCormick, Dr. M. C. Millender, Dr. Charles Millender, Judge Frank Carter, Clarence Sawyer, J. K. Cowan, Haywood Parker, Louis M. Bourne, William Johnston, Col. Robert Johnston, Joe Studer, Harold Johnston, Edwin L. Ray, Julian Woodcock, Cameron Waddell, Dr. P. H. Orr, T. J. Wooldridge, Judge J. Frazier Glenn, J. S. Adams, Lions Lee, Gilliland Stikeleather, Girdwood Cochran, Spears Reynolds, Allen T. Morrison, Clarence Ryman, Ralph Arbogast, Carlton Carter, Dr. Eugene Cocke, Tim Cocke, Carl Felmet, Albert Bunn, Stephen Adams, Francis Bourne, Frank Heilig, William Williamson, Allen Williamson, William Kimberly, D'Arcey William, Selwyn Bryant, Bynum Orr, G. MacFarlane, Jr., G. MacFarlane, the third, both of Clarksville, Tenn.; Col. L. L. Lee, W. E. Burrick, L. R. Hoffman, T. Milton Bailey, James M. Coleman, C. V. Reynolds, Captain John A. Ferry, U. S. A., former commandant; Allen D. Williamson and others.

Several local members of the Alumni Association, including J. Thomas Ferguson, John Lange, G. Merrimon, Spears Reynolds, Sanford Brown, Theodore Morrison and Chas. E. Waddell sent best wishes, through unable to attend.

Present last night were Colonel Bingham's two daughters, Mrs. S. R. McKie and Mrs. R. F. Grinnon, both of Asheville; his son, Judge Robert Bingham, of Louisville, Ky.; and six grandchildren, as follows: R. W. Bingham, Jr., Henrietta Bingham and Barry Bingham; all of Louisville, and Bingham McKie, Martha McKie and Sadie Temple McKie, all of Asheville.

COL. BINGHAM IS DEAD AFTER USEFUL CAREER

Educator Succumbs To Long Illness At Advanced Age

WAS HEADMASTER MILITARY SCHOOL

Will Hold Funeral Of Beloved Citizen This Afternoon

Col Robert Bingham is dead.

Weakened by a long illness, he had been in a critical condition for several days and members of his family were at his bedside when he died yesterday afternoon at 4:10 o'clock. The end came peacefully and almost imperceptibly as he dropped off to sleep.

Two daughters, Mrs. S. Reid McKee and Mrs. Robert Temple Grinnan, of Asheville and one son, Judge Robert W. Bingham, of Louisville, Ky., were at his bedside as were five grandchildren, Robert W. Bingham, Jr., Barry Bingham, Bingham McKee, Miss Martha McKee and Miss Sadie Temple McKee. One granddaughter, Miss Henrietta Bingham is in London.

Headed School

For many years headmaster of Bingham Military school, both in Asheville and at Mebane, N. C., Colonel Bingham was one of the foremost educators of the South, a man who championed the cause of learning in the days following the Civil War and did much to bring about the educational awakening below the Mason Dixon line.

Throughout the United States and in many foreign countries alumni of the school who came in contact with Colonel Bingham during his long years of active service in educating for citizenship, remember him affectionately as "Old Bob," a pet name that clung to him as generation after generation of boys came to know him and to love him.

Colonel Bingham was a distinguished soldier, serving with the rank of captain throughout the Civil War and in later years he won recognition as an able writer and a fearless speaker in behalf of the causes to which he dedicated his life. His greatest achievements were in the field of education, and besides devoting most of his time to the task of educating the young men of his beloved South, Colonel Bingham was a leader in the educational movement in the state, a pioneer on the question of industrial training, a factor in the establishment of the State Woman's College at Greensboro and the father of the first compulsory school law in the South.

The funeral services will be conducted this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock at the First Presbyterian church where Colonel Bingham was for a great many years an elder, by the pastor Rev. Dr. R. F. Campbell. Interment will be in Riverside cemetery.

Confederate veterans of the county will gather at the church and march in a body, followed by the Bingham cadets and then by the casket and members of the family and friends. Only members of the family will go to the cemetery for the interment.

Pioneer Educator Dies

COLONEL R. BINGHAM

The following will serve as active pallbearers: Dr. W. P. Herbert, W. L. Brooker, Charles E. Waddell, Graham MacFarlane, Ruffner Campbell, Theodore Marrison, Thomas S. Rollins, R. R. Williams, and William Coleman.

Honorary pallbearers will be: Louis M. Bourne, Judge Frank Carter, James S. Coleman, Capt. J. M. Coleman, Gen. Theodore Davidson, Capt. R. V. Edwards, Capt. J. H. Ford, Capt. O. O. Hartsig, Capt. W. C. Haynes, Major L. R. Hoffman, Capt. H. C. Lawson, A. J. Lyman, Dr. M. C. Millender, Dr. C. R. Minor, Judge J. D. Murphy, J. H. McConnell, Haywood Parker, J. E. Rankin, Dr. C. V. Reynolds, Major H. R. Smith, Capt. H. C. Stout, Cameron Waddell, Charles A. Webb, J. M. Westall, Dr. Jere Cocke, William B. Williamson, and Dr. F. Webb Griffith.

Colonel Bingham was the third generation of Binghams to head the famous school. The school was founded by his grandfather at Mebane, N. C., in 1793.

He was born in Hillsboro, Orange County, N. C., September 5, 1838. He was the son of William James Bingham and Eliza A. Norwood Bingham. His forebears were English and Scotch. His paternal grandfather, Rev. William Bingham was born in County Down, Ireland, and came to America after graduating from the University of Glasgow.

Colonel Bingham was prepared for school by his father. He was one of the four first honor men in the class of 1857 at the University of North Carolina. He immediately joined his father and brother in the management of the school. He was then 19 years old.

During the four years of the war between the states he was active in the conflict. After the war he returned to school work and a military department was co-ordinated with the school's activities. In 1882 the government began detailing officers from the United States Army as commandants of the school's cadet corps.

The school was subesquently removed from Mebane to Asheville and known as Bingham School of Asheville.

Friend Of Education

Colonel Bingham was for years a staunchest friend of the cause of public education that North Carolina had. He was regarded as the father of compulsory education in the South, and it was through his effective influence that Asheville became the first city in the South to adopt it.

Though headmaster of a private school Colonel Bingham championed the cause of education for the masses of both sexes and colors. During the period of reconstruction following the war between the states he stood out almost alone against the prevailing attitude of laissez faire in regard to education.

When the state began to recover from the impact of the war and to realize that education was a paramount necessity the people awoke to the fact that the constitution of 1867 limited taxation to such a degree that the public schools could be kept open only three months a year. In order to overcome this frightful condition the legislature authorized a local option tax for public schools. By this means each community could raise funds according to its ability.

The opposition to this tax was keen and bitter. But in the face of it Colonel Bingham took the stump and spoke up and down the state. His friends tried to dissuade him, but he felt that he was right. School leaders foday who look back upon the progress of education made in North Carolina credit his zeal and fearlessness with laying the seeds which subsequently germinated into a great school system.

Supports Blair Bill

His speech "The New South" delivered first before the superintendents' department of the National Educational Association in Washington in 1884 in support of the Blair bill, then pending before congress, and later before the association meeting itself in Madison, Wisconsin, is still remembered as one of the most eloquent pleas for education ever made in this country.

Another educational advance fathered by Colonel Bingham in the state was industrial training. Up to 1886 there was no such a thing as industrial training in the state. Colonel Bingham took the question up with the Grand Master of Masons and ex-officio head of the Masonic Orphanage of Oxford. He urged that industrial training be introduced into the orphanage. The next legislature appropriated funds in accordance with his suggestion, but not without considerable opposition.

A few years later a move was set on foot in Raleigh for the creation of a state "College of Agricultural and Mechanical Arts." This move was largely the outgrowth of the activities of Colonel Bingham in behalf of industrial training.

Normal School Training for Women was another progressive step in education that had its beginning in the activities of Colonel Bingham. In 1886 Colonel Bingham addressed a teacher's meeting at Black Mountain and moved that they call upon the state legislature to create a normal school for women. The next legislature appointed Charles D. McIver and Edward A. Alderman to go about the state carrying on educational work of this character. In two years time they had created such sentiment that a reluctant legislature was forced to make an appropriation for a State Normal and Industrial College for Women. After President McIver had organized the school he invited Colonel Bingham to address the 600 girls and tell them of the germ of the idea for the school in his proposal at Black Mountain in 1886.

Compulsory Education

But the greatest battle that Colonel Bingham ever commenced for the cause of education in this state was the fight for compulsory education. He knew, as all intelligent men knew, that illiteracy was one of the crying causes that held the South in her state of economic want and destitution after the war. He knew that there was only one way to attack ignorance and that was by taking the control of children out of the hands of ignorant parents and placing it in the hands of the state. But, public sentiment was against him. He had done valiant service in helping to force into existence local option taxation for city school, and later for county school, taxation for the State Industrial School of Men, and for the State Industrial School for Women, but the fight for compulsory education was more difficult.

The cry against it was that it not only increased taxation but it also interfered, many claimed, with the inherent right of parents to control their children. Religious prejudices were stirred against it and the scripture quoted to prove the point of the opponents. However, the plain people of Asheville gave the Colonel strong backing and a local option compulsory educational law was forced through the legislature. No provision, however, was made for school buildings and teachers. With the help of the labor element in Asheville, with whom Colonel Bingham was popular, compulsory education was passed in Asheville and $30,000 appropriated to meet the expenses. Thus Asheville became the first city in the South to adopt compulsory education.

One of the most important things Colonel Bingham did for the South was the publication of the facts concerning the relationship of Robert E. Lee and Jefferson Davis to secession. In a notable article, called "Some Sectional Misunderstandings" published in [illegible] September 1904, Colonel Bingham published for the first time [illegible] proof that these two great Southern leaders had been taught from "Rawle's View of the Constitution" [illegible] that if it should be [illegible] allegiance would [illegible] to [illegible]

THE BINGHAMS

While Wolfe was setting the standard for skillful writing about the family boarding house, the epitome of social standards and mores in the community was represented by the Bingham School and the famous family that operated it for four generations. It also had a profound effect on public education.

The cadets were a part of social life in Asheville through a variety of activities ranging from churches to parades and other public events to tea dances. The young ladies were invited to events at the school and in turn the cadets were participants in social functions all over town.

The Bingham name itself was a badge of distinction. During August of 1918, the headmaster's son, Robert Worth Bingham, purchased the Louisville Courier-Journal and thereby established another dynasty that would be the subject of journalistic scrutiny and speculation for decades to come. It was called the "royal family" of Kentucky.

A pillar of North Carolina education, the Bingham Military School was founded in 1873 when a group of Wilmington men, traveling in Scotland, had looked into the university while visiting Glasgow. They were favorably impressed, and with so much enthusiasm that they wanted to engage the services of a faculty member to come to America and establish a school for their sons.

The young man selected was carefully chosen for his character and ability. He was the Rev. William Bingham. He arrived at Wilmington, Delaware, for reasons now obscure, but was finally able to reach North Carolina after a long and arduous journey. While the Scotch-Irish came down the Great Wagon Road, the Scots themselves came in numbers to the Cape Fear River and thence up its waters to the place where they founded Campbelltown, renamed for the Marquis de Lafayette following his visit there.

This school was established in Wilmington along Scottish lines and principles but shortly thereafter was moved out into the countryside of the county. For reasons similar to those which impelled the founders of the University of North Carolina to select Orange County as a site for the first state university, the school was moved there, at Mebane near Chapel Hill. Activity in Asheville in the late Eighties attracted wide attention and a decision was reached to move the school to the social and physical climate of the Land of the Sky.

The 250-acre site was one of the finest in the city, a majestic bluff overlooking the French Broad, adjacent to the estate Richmond Pearson was in process of creating. Across the river, the Montford community was just getting started. On the bank, a rustic park had been established for recreational purposes of a casual nature. And plans had been considered to extend the street car line to a new terminus there at Pearson's Bridge.

The academy commenced relocated operations effective with the 1889-90 term. Standards were based on uncompromising Presbyterian principles that gained it a wide reputation for integrity and merit. Its graduates held high commissions and fought at the front in every war in which the United States participated. America's leading diplomat during the First World War, Walter Hines Page, was a "Bingham boy." He served throughout, 1913 to 1918, as United States ambassador to the Court of St. James's and played the key diplomatic role in Allied opposition to the Kaiser Wilhelm.

Born at Mebane, Robert W. Bingham was an instructor on the faculty of the school in Asheville. His political career took him to Kentucky and from there to the top. By the end of the epoch, he was regarded as one of the foremost social, political, and diplomatic personalities in America, and this led to his appointment in the same role as his predecessor. An Independent Democrat, he was not appointed to high office under the Hoover administration but when Mr. Roosevelt took office, he was ready to appoint him as secretary of state.

An Anglophile, Bingham was regarded by many as an ideal choice for the top diplomatic assignment in London. Immediately thereafter, Roosevelt chose him for that position and instead named Cordell Hull as secretary of state. He remained there until his death, becoming a part of British social life. Honored by the monarch, granted honorary degrees by Oxford and Cambridge. With war clouds then darkening on the horizon, he found himself in a similar position to that of his earliest predecessor and he sought to follow honorably in his footsteps.

Along the way, Bingham married into several of the most wealthy and prominent families in America, notably Kenan, Flagler and Morgan. His marriage on May 20, 1896 to Eleanor E. Miller of Louisville ended with her death during a controversial automobile accident in 1913. On November 15, 1916, he married the former Mary Lily Kenan, widow of Henry M. Flagler, father of modern day Florida. A former partner of J. P. Morgan and John D. Rockefeller. She died just eight months later, leaving him an extensive fortune.

The Binghams of Asheville remained on Bingham Heights. His father was in command of the school, instrumental in establishment of compulsory public education. A distinguished captain of Confederate infantry during the war, Col. Robert Bingham was deeply concerned over the plight of education in the Tar Heel state, once described as that "vale of humility between two mountains of conceit." As a result of extreme poverty, the public school system was virtually non-existent. Those who could afford it were educated by private tutors or small academies. Except in a few large towns, the rest generally had to fend for themselves.

Bingham led an intellectual and moral crusade for improvement which led to many reforms, including compulsory education, a system of normal schools for the establishment of minimum standards, a woman's college at Greensboro, and an agricultural and mechanical school at Raleigh which evolved into North Carolina State University. The educational renaissance at the turn of the century under Governor Aycock followed Bingham's repeated exhortations in a classic vein.

Colonel Bingham served as head of the school from 1873 until becoming headmaster emeritus in 1920, when his son-in-law became commandant. A firm influence for right causes and principles to the last, Bingham passed away quietly on May 8, 1927. Funeral services were conducted by Dr. Campbell the following day. As in 1914 when word was received of the death of George Vanderbilt and earlier that of George Pack, flags of city and suburbs were flown at half staff. Some saw it as a symbol of possible social change as well.

Throughout travels of Colonel Bingham's illustrious son, the Binghams of Asheville remained on Bingham Heights and he was a frequent visitor to the city, where he maintained many ties. In spring of the year following, Col. S. R. McKee, speaking for the administration, announced plans for construction of a major new building that fall. Later there was another announcement, the school would be closed during construction. It never reopened. The road of progress was being closed down with barriers and detour signs, the economic bridge about to be washed out, and it went down with the rest. After four generations starting with the ambassador's great-grandfather, the school was out of business.

Unlike his staunch Presbyterian forebears, Robert W. Bingham became a devout Episcopalian and an active participant in the Anglican Communion of Britain and America. The family in Asheville included his sisters, Mrs. S. Reid McKee and Mrs. Robert Temple Grinnan, affectionately known in the community as Sadie, and the McKee children, Robert B. McKee, Miss Martha McKee and Miss Sadie Temple McKee.

In later years, remaining members lived in one or two of the almost deserted old buildings standing on the bluff. An old fashioned family carrying on where this distinguished and venerable institution had been a vital factor in the life of the city. A social influence since it was founded in the year Louis XVI lost his head during the French Revolution.

As the corps came into rigid formation for its closing review along the old courtyard, tears fell from some who watched those ranks with many emotions.

Endnotes

1. On August 20, 1924, he married Aleen (Muldoon) Hilliard of Louisville in London. She survived him.
2. He received degrees from the University of North Carolina, the School of Law there, the University of Louisville, the University of Michigan, and honorary degrees both in America and Britain. (He was graduated from the family school in 1888.)
3. Mary Lily was the sister of Wm. Rand Kenan, Jr. Under terms of a hotly contested will, the famous Kenan fellowships, scholarships, and professorships were established at the University of North Carolina and the Kenan and Morehead families became the university's leading benefactors. Bequests were suggested by Mr. Bingham.
4. Some accounts describe Colonel Bingham as father of compulsory education in the South.
5. .5. Bingham and Hull were born (1871) a few weeks apart, the latter in Overton County, Tennessee, south of Louisville.
6. In August of 1918, he bought a two-thirds interest in the Courier-Journal and the afternoon Times. Remaining shares were acquired the following year. It became one of the most important regional newspapers in the country. He also established WHAS, the first radio station in Kentucky.
7. Bingham was succeeded in London by Jos. P. Kennedy, founder of a different dynasty.

Discipline Was No Problem At Bingham School

By Billy Arthur

When it was time for punishment, the famed school master offered students a choice of "Dr. Black or Dr. Brown."

Today's opponents of corporal punishment in the schools would certainly have targeted Col. Robert Bingham, once called "North Carolina's greatest schoolmaster." As joint or head principal of mobile Bingham School from 1860 to 1927, he not only inflicted bodily punishment with leather strops but also encouraged students to "fight out" their enmity and confined disobedient ones to cramped solitary guard houses.

Students took their punishment good-naturedly, because that was the tradition and code of the historic school, founded in Wilmington in 1793 by the colonel's grandfather, then moved to Pittsboro, the Oaks and Mebane in Orange County and finally to Asheville in 1890.

Many students reported they never knew of any classmate who ever bore the "national figure in education" any ill will. M.C.S. Noble, longtime dean of the UNC School of Education who had been a Bingham student, called him "just and fair." The solid foundation on which the strict discipline rested was Col. Bingham's constant effort to build up in the boys their inborn sense of right and honor."

The 10 Guard Houses

Everyone who got more than a certain number of demerits within a week was imprisoned in a guard house all day on Monday, which was the weekly holiday, instead of Saturday as at most schools.

The ten guard houses were about four feet wide by five feet long with a cowcatcher extension at one end to accommodate the feet if one chose to lie down. Entering just after breakfast, the student received his midday meal on a tray and was released just in time for supper.

Often there were more culprits than guard houses; so, for some there was the alternative punishment -- a vigorous beating with a leather strop by the colonel himself. But no boy was ever beaten against his will. He was always permitted to do his turn in the guard house when one became available on a Monday.

Another student, Chapel Hill Weekly editor Louis Graves, said he had seen more than a half dozen boys at a time crowding around the colonel on Mondays, each insisting he preferred a thrashing to confinement. "It hurt and it hurt bad," Graves said from experience, "but when it was all over the slate had been wiped clean."

No Disgrace

There was no secrecy about the whipping. Nobody cared if other boys came into the room. "It was a tradition that no disgrace was attached to the lickin' -- it was simply a price that was paid for excessive neglect of the rules -- for idleness, for lack of cleanliness of room or person and so on," Graves said.

The candidates would come in after breakfast, and the colonel would take down two thick strops -- one black and one brown -- about two inches wide. Very ceremoniously, he would ask the boy to choose "either Dr. Black or Dr. Brown." Also the boy chose whether he would be licked on the hands, legs, "the sitter," or equally distributed. Both Graves and Noble said the boys took it almost without flinching, then went happily off to Asheville for the holiday.

Though the rules forbade fighting, if enmity between two boys reached a boiling point, Col. Bingham sanctioned a fight -- in the presence of him and the student body -- but only after he had failed to get the boys to settle their differences without one. The whole school gathered between the dormitories with Col. Bingham as referee. Each boy had his partisans who cheered when blows were landed.

The colonel was completely in charge. There were no fixed rules. If the fighters clinched too long, he separated them; if they evidenced fatigue, he called for rest. When they became exhausted or had had enough, they went to their rooms, "washed up, applied salve and lotion, and -- no longer snarling -- were in column when the battalion marched to the mess hall," Graves recalled.

Smoking

Not in accord with Col. Bingham's strict policies was his toleration of smoking when it did not interfere with classroom or military duties. However, because of danger of fire, a student would be expelled forthwith for "smoking in the bunk."

Col. Bingham's stated educational creed was to "make men of boys . . . Our men stand at the top everywhere they go. We have taught 5,000 boys. Ninety-five percent have made good, five percent went to the dogs . . . and ten percent of those had already gone to the dogs . . . before we got them," he said in 1920.

Graves said Bingham "demanded and compelled close attention to classroom duties. He believed in a simple curriculum and in thoroughness. He sought to develop in boys a devotion to truth, honor and courage. Long before the honor system was much talked about, it was functioning admirable at Bingham School."

Col. Bingham was a leader in establishment of NC State College, of the NC College for Women at Greensboro (now UNC-G), and adoption of a compulsory school law state-wide. Through his efforts Asheville was the first city in the south with compulsory education. He died in 1938. A son, Robert, once owned and published the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal newspaper.

English Girl Arrives In U. S. By Airplane To Marry E. R. Bird, Jr.

Another of those English-girl-meets-a-Yank stories will reach the wedding-bells stage here at 8 o'clock Saturday night.

This time it will be blonde Yvonne M. L. Hobden of London and a recently discharged field artillery captain, Edward R. Bird, Jr., of 101 Vermont avenue, West Asheville. The marriage ceremony will be performed at the West Asheville Methodist church.

Miss Hobden, formerly an English nurse, arrived in the United States by plane two weeks ago. The couple first met three years ago at a London party.

The bride-to-be, getting her first look at America, "didn't like New York a bit . . . but Asheville is sweet."

One of her biggest thrills is tomato juice. Bananas and eggs—("I just like to stand and look at an egg; we used to get one a month in England")—are runners-up as the blonde Yvonne's favorite American commodities. But she definitely doesn't like America's still-overcrowded trains and buses: "I think I must have come from New York to Washington in a cattle-truck!"

She is taken with American kindness, she says, and "with the courtesy of shop people. You have strange kind of courtesy over here. You may bump a person off the street and say nothing—and yet you still are so nice in most ways. You are—well, the words are 'free and easy.'"

The Birds will live in Asheville. The bridegroom-to-be is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bird, Sr. In service four years, he returned to the United States last Sept. 7 and received his honorable discharge January 27.

"The Littlest Shepherd" is a part of the Christmas story sometimes overlooked, but carries with it, the poignancy and feeling of the "person left behind." Portraying this character of David, the Littlest Shepherd, in the play given at Eugene Rankin elementary school today, was Jimmy Bishop, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Bishop of 38 Nebraska street, shown in the above picture at the left. Little Barbara Callahan depicted the "Star Child", shown at the right, who came to the shepherd in a dream. When the Shepherds go to Bethlehem, David is left behind to watch the flock and although longing to go, he gave aid to many persons. Because of his goodness, his "Star Child" throws stardust in his eyes and shows him the Nativity scene in a dream, according to the narrative. Persons participating were as follows. Joan Norman, as "Mary"; Donald Green, "Joseph"; Barbara Moffatt, the girl traveler; Billy Farmer, the old man traveler; Carl Messer, Robert Neely, Joseph Randolph, Dennis Freeman, Eugene Harrin, Billy Wilson, Larry Taylor, and Bob Ingle, shepherds; Billy Summey, Rolby Ingle, Ralph McCurry, the Three Wise Men; Patsy Kirkpatrick, Billy Ingle, Agnes McRary, Hillary Ingle, Jack Wilson, Peggy Shipman, Mary Candler, Ronnie Murphy, Donald Talbert, Charles Bolden, Dean Harrsman, H. R. Wells, Billy McRary, Lucille Orr, Donald Norman and Wilburn Brookshire, travelers. Members of the Angel chorus were Franklin Orr, Shirley Jones, Barbara Heise, Jimmy Fisher, Shirley Muse, June Sherlin, Mildred Alexander, Dolores Gillespie, Martha Sue Lance, Julian Sutton, Betty House, Gwynette Worley, Donald Walker, Pearl Hopson, Wilma Gordon, Peggy Taylor, Mary Anne Sprouse, Billy Joy Alexander and Marilyn Messer. Charles Ingle and Doyle Taylor were narrators and Etta Mae Langford was soloist. The program was given by the primary grades.

Firemen Gets Big Kick Out Of Discovering Rare Currency

UNUSUAL DESIGNS FOUND IN EXHIBIT

Herman Bishop Has Devoted Years To His Profitale Hobby

By DOROTHY SCHUMAKER

Men have quder hobbies. Staid lawyers have been seen earnestly chasing butterflies and eminent capitalists breathlessly losing their self-control over an Indian arrowhead. Yet it is unusual to find a locomotive fireman with a passion for rare old coins!

Herman Bishop, of 43 Montana Avenue, West Asheville, a fireman on the Southern Railway, has been collecting old coins for so long that he cannot remember when he began. In a trunk at his mother's home, he says, are most of the coins he has gathered in his lifetime of thirty years.

He has with him, however, a small collection in which American coins figure largely. One of these is the 1795 silver dollar, which 43 years ago brought twelve dollars at auction, and which is now, of course, even more valuable. A bank of Dallas, Texas, rates it from thirty dollars up. It has a border of fifteen stars, and the Liberty head is unbanded, with flowing hair. There is no statement of value on either flat surface of the coin, but around the edge runs the legend, "Hundred cents, one dollar, or unit." While this coin has not the rarity of a 1794 dollar, and cannot, therefore, command such high prices, it has a peculiar interest of its own. An authoritative manual states with regard to the Philadelphia mint: "The mint was not fully in operation until January, 1795. Before that time it was rather engaged in experimenting . . . .' Thus the 1795 silver dollar has the distinction of being the first regular dollar of the United States to be put into circulation.

Lucky Dollar

Mr. Bishop was exceptionally lucky in obtaining this coin, he admits. The estate of an old colonial family in South Carolina was being disposed of, and the only remaining relative, a young surveyor, broke up a rare collection of coins belonging to the estate by giving them away to his friends and acquaintances at face value. Mr. Bishop was one of the favored few, receiving the 1795 silver dollar and a silver half-dollar minted in 1833. This half-dollar has the Latin motto, "E Pluribus Unum," floating in a scroll over the eagle's head. The next year, however, came the change of standard, and the motto, which had never been acknowledged in the law, was discontinued.

On a street car one day, Mr. Bishop received as change two dimes, dated 1840 and 1854. The 1840 dime is in a remarkable state of preservation. A seated Liberty supports a small shield across which "Liberty" is written in tiny letters on a scroll, yet every letter of the word is distinct and clearly read.

The collection includes also two coins of the Dominion Republic on the island of Haiti: a 2 1-2 centavos piece dated 1888, and a silver coin of 20 centavos dated 1897; a Danish three-cent coin, dated 1859, that is very tiny, less than one-half the size of our penny, and so thin that it feels brittle; a Danish cent of 1860; a "Deutsches Reich" 2-pfennig piece of 1876; an 1854 French coin with the mark of the Rouen mint; two copper Spanish coins dated 1861 and 1879; an American half-cent of 1828; and and English half-penny of 1871 with the initials F. D. cut into the reverse side of the coin, defacing the profile of Victoria. The meaning of the initials is unknown. They may be a mint mark.

Mr. Bishop also has a very tiny, octagonal gold coin. The date, 1849, can be distinguished, but the surface is undecipherable. The only American octogonal coin is the fifty-dollar gold piece issued in 1851, on the Pacific Coast, but that, of course, is out of the question, since a coin of that denomination would be much larger than the one in Mr. Bishop's possession. Assam, a British province in the Brahmaputra valley in India, had, and may still have, an octagonal currency, and it may be one of her coins that has drifted across the seas into Asheville, by way of Mr. Bishop.

Many Ports

Most of his foreign coins have come into his hands through a sailor-friend, now in Hamburg, Germany, who picks them up in his cruises round the world and turns them over to Mr. Bishop at the end of each voyage. The latter says he has returned a goodly number of these coins to the sailor, who himself has two wooden jars filled with foreign currency. The strange adventures those jars of coins hint at, can be guessed. A square Japanese coin with a hole in it brings instantly to mnid the almond-eyed girls, the fantastic temples, the rare beauty of the cherry blossoms. Another suggests a night in a Chinese gambling den, a street-bazaar in Persia. An encampment of Romany wanderers. Still others picture a Norwegian fishing-smack hailed in passing, Arabs with fantastic eyes, Australian bush-tribes, low-caste native Indians. All these may have played a part in the gathering of the tokens, which passed through the hands of the sailor into the possession of Mr. Bishop.

Born at Landrum, South Carolina, in 1898, Mr. Bishop and his twin brother spent their childhood on a farm. Their parents were of old Irish descent on both sides, and the young Herman must surely have inherited the adventurous Irish temperament, for at the age of 15 he left home and began his railroad career. At sixteen he was a brakeman. He went west for the first time in 1915. The next year found him in Hendersonville, crippled by an accident, and because of this he missed that greatest adventure of all for a young man—the World War. He recovered, and in 1922, went west again. In the flood of that year, he saw the business streets of Wichita, Kansas, under six feet of water. He also was in Hutchins, Kansas, and there heard President Harding on the 29th of June, in his speech on the World Court.

In his two trips west, Mr. Bishop has covered a good deal of territory. He is familair with every section of the Union except the New England states. He has been up Pike's Peak twice, and true to his profession, is very enthusiastic over the cog-railway up the mountain.

He is a sturdy, pleasant-looking young man, with a slow, soft voice and an appealingly diffident manner, but his shyness quickly vanishes in his enthusiasm over his collection. He does not pretend to be a connoisseur of coins, and indeed, he is not one, in the strict sense of the word, but he handles them with a genuine interest and affection.

Coin-collecting is not his only hobby, however, since he takes an only slightly less interest in the rock specimens he has collected. And hunting and fishing have an equally strong claim on his leisure hours. He knows many trails of the Smokies, and he knows, too, almost all of the Cherokee Indians, having lived at Bryson City for four years.

Mr. Bishop has been living in Asheville since 1922. In 1924 he married, and he has now two children, three-year old Ted and the baby Carolina. He is a Mason, a member of the Moose order and belongs to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

Mr. Bishop has been a fireman for eleven years. He has been in several wrecks and runaways in his varied railroad career, but he doesn't like to think about them, and refuses to talk about them. Still, he likes his job. And he hopes to keep on being a fireman—and collecting coins.

UNUSUAL FEATURE PLANNED TONIGHT

Radio Station Will Offer West Asheville Artists In Drama

A group of West Asheville artists has planned an unusual program which they will broadcast over the local station WWNC from 9:30 to 11 o'clock tonight.

Several rehearsals have been given for G. O. Shepherd, director of the station, with the result that Mr. Shepherd announces that this will be one of the best local programs offered recently.

It is to be a musical and dramatic entertainment. Group numbers and solos will be offered by the following musicians: Mrs. Etta H Blanchard, pianist, Mrs. Elizabeth Krausse, violinist, Mrs. E. C. Griffin and George Hartrick, vocalists.

In between the musical selections a radio drama will be broadcast. It is an adaptation by Arline Pruette from "The Jackdaw," short story by Owen Oliver, well known English author. The cast of characters includes Mrs. Pruette as the wife, Hellin Keeling as Tom Bruce and Charles Trumbo as the "Jackdaw."

There will also be a ragtime vodvil offered by Hetz, Hetz and Ross, comedians, which promises plenty of laughs.

Community Life Centers About Organized Groups

West Asheville Folks Combine Efforts In Unity Plan

By GLENN W. NAVES

The people of West Asheville believe in organization.

And, incidentally, they believe in co-operation, and that a combination of these two elements is essential to community growth and progress.

Consequently, they have embodied the two in a number of well organized community groups, each of which is varied in policy and purpose so as to conform with the needs of everybody from the business man down to the boys and girls who are going to school and training themselves to be future citizens.

Beginning several years ago, public spirited citizens of the community grouped themselves in the belief that business, religion, social work, education and community government can best be conducted when each is thoroughly organized. And these organizations have grown with the progressive expansion of that section until each is a valuable asset, something which just as essential in a sense as the streets, schools and churches are because many of these benefits have been obtained through the efforts of one or more of the organizations.

Club Is Oldest

The largest and oldest of these groups are the West Asheville club, the West Asheville Community club and the West Asheville Merchants Association.

The former was organized in November, 1925 with S. D. Hall as president. Other presidents have been: Don C. Young, 1926, Hugh Sowers, 1927 and H. B. Posey, whose term will expire in November of this year. Both Mr. Posey and Mr. Sowers are bankers, the former being cashier of the Bank of West Asheville and the latter connected with the Wachovia Bank and Trust Company. Mr. Young is representative No. 1 from Buncombe county in the General Assembly. G. G. Morgan was elected the first secretary and after his resignation was succeeded by Bert Starnes, who has served in that capacity since.

The club's membership of around 75, includes business and professional men of every calling—lawyers, bankers, ministers, physicians, merchants, public officials, and even one fire chief, a mayor and a few "politicians." The fire chief is A. L. Duckett, of the Asheville fire department, the mayor, Gallatin Roberts and the "politicians" include Mr. Young, who is also among Asheville's best known attorneys.

The club has since its organization shown a deep interest in the upbuilding and progress of the community, and at present has on schedule a number of plans in that direction.

Community Club

Shortly after the West Asheville club was formed the ladies of the community decided that they should also have a similar organization so the West Asheville Community club was formed.

The club has its musical and literary de[illegible] which have separate meetings and give programs in which the members participate. One of the most popular of these features is the monthly musical program, usually held at the home of a member. Local talent is used and a visiting artist entertains with vocal or instrumental numbers, or perhaps lectures on some interesting phase of music study. Each month the program is planned under the supervision of a selected member and is arranged so as to provide variety and an opportunity for each member to exercise their talent.

In many other ways the club takes an active part in the social, and church and educational life of the community, and has a large and active membership, many of whom are charter members.

Merchants Group

The West Asheville Merchants Association was organized in January, 1926 with a charter membership of 13 business men. The organization has since grown to 60 members, including practically every business concern in the community.

In accordance with tentative plans this organization has continued to function as a mutual benefit group for business men and citizens and has accomplished much in the expansion of the business interests of West Asheville.

J. R. Mills, who died about two years ago, was the first president. Other officers elected at the initial meeting who are still serving are O. J. Judd, vice president and V. F. Brown, secretary. John May succeeded Mr. Mills as president.

Other Organizations

Other groups pprovide the essential organization element for the people, of the comunity.

Young people's organizations include two troops of the Boy Scouts of America; the Junior Music club; the Business Girls' Circle; the Young Men of the Presbyterian church, and others.

One of the Scout troops has been organized at the Methodist church and is sponsored by the pastor, the Rev. J. S. Hiatt, and others, Troop 5 of the Presbyterian church is under the leadership of Jimmy Haley, patrol leader and F. Bonnotte, Scoutmaster.

The Junior Music club was organized by Mrs. A. X. Blanchard and has since grown from eight to eighty members. The group was formed so as to give the children of the community with musical talent an opportunity to benefit from study and contact with each other, and to maintain their interest in music. The club is known as one of the most active in West Asheville.

Other organizations are the Calvary Baptist church orchestra and male [illegible] Junior choir of the Methodist church; Business Girls' Circle, Woman's Auxiliary, Men of the Church and Young Men of the Church, of the Presbyterian church, the Woman's Missionary groups of the community churches, the B. Y. P. U., Epworth League and Christian Endeavor organizations, the Mitchell Avenue Home club, the Friendship club, the Parent-Teacher Association of Hall Fletcher, Aycock, Eugene Rankin, and Vance schools, the Sunday school groups and others.

Fraternal organizations include the West Asheville chapter, Order of Eastern Star, Locke Craig Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, Red Men, Moose, Odd Fellows and the A. F. and A. M. Masonic

THE NEWS PERSONALITY OF THE WEEK

MRS. ARTA X. BLANCHARD

A poet, when once asked the secret of his life, replied, "I had a friend!" The story of this week's personality coincides with that formula.

One day the phone rang.

"Is this 1377? Well, this is Louise. I want you to do something for me," the voice continued.

"What is it?" was in inquiry.

"I want you to take my class of twenty pupils," came the answer.

"Why I never gave a lesson in my life," was the reply. I cannot do it."

"I cannot turn them out to the four winds, and you are the one to take them," continued the urgent Louise.

This was the gist of a conversation when Miss Louise Jackson, daughter of D. L. Jackson, called her good friend, Miss Elta Handte on the telephone not so many years ago. Little did Miss Jackson think at the time that her summons was to be the means of changing the whole life source of her friend and at the same time be the beginning of a career that was to elevate Miss Handte to a high peak in the field of pedagogy in the years to come.

This was Miss Handte's first year of teaching, and at the end of the year Miss Jackson's class had proven a delight beyond all expectations, even tho there was the three-mile walk home across the mountain after classes were over on the two teaching days each week.

Jacob S. Handte gave his daughter, when she was about ten years old, a dime bank, to encourage her to save. This act prompted the very young lady to make some definite decisions, for when the father asked her a short time later what she was going to save for, she immediately replied, "To go to New York to study music!"

This incident took place shortly after the young girl had come with her parents from Chicago to Asheville. Here her mother at once sought the best teacher of piano available. The teacher was Miss Minnie Westall, under whose guidance the young and musically ambitious Miss Elta remained for quite a few years, at the same time continuing her education at the private school, The Asheville School for Girls. Mrs. Blanchard claims much inheritance of her love for good music from her mother, who had studied for years and who was also a church organist.

During her first year of teaching at Haw Creek, Miss Handte continued study at the same time with the nationally known Grace Potter Carroll, who had then only been teaching in Asheville a few years, as well as doing some recital accompanying for Carl Behr, well known celloist, and former member of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Mrs. Carroll proved the inspiration and help in the final preparations for Miss Handte's long-planned trip to New York for further study. The bank account, begun in childhood, was sizeable enough by now to get to the big city for study for at least a short time, with teaching and accompanying making longer period of study possible.

Happy and satisfactory progress was being made, and engagements with well known singers were being booked, when Miss Handte was stricken with double pneumonia, which sorely depleted both her funds and strength and forced her return to the sunny south to recuperate from what nearly proved a fatal illness.

To return to the metropolitan city in the fall was the plan, but all the time Dan Cupid was silently working, and instead of returning to New York in October, Miss Handte, on the arm of her father, marched down the aisle of Trinity church here to meet her future husband, Arta X. Blanchard, at the altar. Although Miss Handte was a member of Central Methodist church, being president of the Roberts Philathea class, one of the largest in the state, her marriage took place in another edifice because Central's new building was under construction at the time.

But although Mr. Cupid thwarted her plans as for going to New York, he was not able to interfere with the continuance of her teaching career. For in 1925, a year after her marriage, calls began coming in from mothers who were wanting to begin their sons and daughters in the study of the pianoforte; and so it was that on July 4, 1925, the Blanchard studio, with a class ready built by interested mothers, was opened. And a steady increase in teaching and related activities have filled the nearly eighteen years since that July day. Mrs. Blanchard declares that whatever she has done has been largely due to the faith and encouragement of both her husband and father.

Many very talented young people have come under Mrs. Blanchard's supervision, including Miss Dorothy Gaskins, director of music at David Millard high school, who was a charter member in Mrs. Blanchard's classes; and Miss Joy Hipps, now Mrs. Jack Adams, former head of the music department at the Henry Ford school in Georgia. Many talented students are now enrolled and a waiting list is always existent.

But Mrs. Blanchard has other interests besides teaching. She is a fine and sympathetic accompanist (concert accompanying is what she had always planned to do) and appears on radio frequently, presenting request programs of her works. She composes teaching numbers for young musicians, writes poetry and musical articles, does water color sketching and paints.

Organization work also has been an interesting feature of Mrs. Blanchard's activities. In 1925 the West Asheville Junior Music club was organized under the direction of Mrs. Blanchard, who a year later was greatly honored by the membership, changing by unanimous vote the name of the organization to that of the founder. Over two thousand boys and girls have been touched through the ministry of the Blanchard Junior Music club.

Every good chance for study has been taken advantage of by Mrs. Blanchard. In addition to those already named, she has studied under such well known teachers as Mrs. Crosby Adams, Hans Barth, Blanche Fox Steenman, John Thompson, Guy Maier, Kate Morton Laxton, Ernesto Berumen, Frank LaForge, Dr. Arthur Livingston Manchester and Dr. Frederick Stanley Smith.

As perhaps many of the music world in this section will recall, Dr. Manchester was the director of the Florio Singers, a chorus of young women, who once gave many programs in and around Asheville. Mrs. Blanchard assisted in the arrangement and presentation and was accompanist for these programs.

Mrs. Blanchard is a member of the National Guild of Piano Teachers, also the National League of American Pen Women, and at present is working on her degree in psychology.

Mrs. Blanchard's advice to young people is to decide definitely on what they want most to do in life, and then after the goal is set, to bend every effort in that direction. "And don't count the hurdles life sets before you," she counsels. "They are only to test you, to see what you will do about it."

NEW OFFICERS AND COMMITTEE MEMBERS were installed at a meeting of the Hamilton Junior Music Club yesterday in the George Vanderbilt Hotel. This was the first meeting of the fall. Among speakers was Mrs. Elta H. Blanchard, music teacher and writer. She reviewed the history of the club. New officers of the club, shown in the photograph, are: Beryl Roberts, president; Margurite Reed, first vice president; Mary Anne Styles, second vice president; Peggy Rich, third vice president; Patricia Swann, recording secretary; Lois Kline, corresponding secretary; Emogene Murdoch, treasurer; Shirley Muse, accompanist; Elaine James, assistant accompanist; Marjorie Kaiser, Jeanette Velsor, Alice Bell and Betty Moffatt, year book committee; Mary Alice Romine, Nancy Edwards, Jean Lane and Margaret Sublett, scrapbook committee; Alice Goforth, parliamentarian; Betty Lou Compton, publicity chairman; Beth Owens, club rating chairman; Patricia Warren, Maria Roberts and Gladys Dalton, radio committee; Dorothy Logan, Mildred Bowers and Sandra Hollingsworth, music club magazine. Mrs. Hugh Brank is councilor for the club.

A Poet's Songs Of Faith

Elta Handte Blanchard's Shield of Faith (Banner Press, Emory University, Georgia, $2) is a book of verse which sings notes of love, hope, and faith above the turmoil of today's discordant world.

Mrs. Blanchard has been closely identified with the musical life of Asheville for many years as a musician, teacher, composer, and accompanist. Residents of Western North Carolina will realize, while reading the volume, that many people, prominent in the musical world, were the inspiration for some of the poems. Among them are Dr. Crosby Adams, Mrs. Grace Potter Carroll, Miss Ruth O'Shaughnessy, the late Mrs. O. C. Hamilton, and others.

Mrs. Blanchard's volume of poems might, just as aptly, have been titled "Songs of Faith," for her verse mirrors the music which is an integral part of her nature. Indeed, many of the poems are so lyrically perfect, with happy imagery and apt phrase, that they seem to carry their own faint and delicate melody to the mind of him who reads.

The volume takes its title from the poem, "October," whose trees are "Autumn's radiant shield of faith." The entire work is a sincerely and delicately presented impression of a true shield of faith (blended of reverence, the intimate loveliness of nature, the solace of music, the love of true friends)—a shield which has guarded the poet through times of darkness to the serenity and deep spiritual joy which made the poems possible.—L. ELTA HANDTE BLANCHARD

Not too long ago, a book, "Life Begins At Forty," came off the p r e s and on the book shop shelves. One beginning-time. Elta Handte Blanchard, well known musician, teacher, composer and poet agrees with the Grecian women of old who considered their lives as beginning with marriage. But there might be another beginning for this courageous life.

Her great grandfather, Jacob Stuckrath, at fifteen years of age, set out from Wurtemburg with three companions, for America. The trip in a sailboat took three months — but they arrived in Pittsburgh. The lad grew up, married and in 1858 became Mayor of Pittsburgh. A prominent Mason, the Stuckrath Lodge, named in his honor, stands today in the Pennsylvania city.

Mrs. Blanchard fragile in physique but strong in the purpose of a full, triumphant life, is dated insofar as we know from Jacob Stuckrath who braved the Atlantic, plunged into the unknown world and became a leader of men. Jacob Stuckrath was symbolic of his descendent. Mrs. Blanchard rolls time back and symbolizes her courageous ancestor. But Mrs. Blanchard insists on that marriage date, 1924, as her life's rich fulfillment. Arts X. Blanchard was a prominent hotel man at that time. Their home became an "open house" for musicians and music lovers.

A little girl, Elta Handte, came with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob S. Handte, from Chicago where Mr. Handte had been connected with the Vaughn Seed Company. The family located in Asheville and Elta attended the Asheville School For Girls, conducted by Miss Elizabeth K. Ford. She studied music under Miss Minnie Westall. Elta was ready to enter Converse College when her mother's illness and death changed this plan. She studied intensively with Mrs. Robert Carroll, then in 1922, after teaching and recital accompanying the cellist, Carl Behr, Elta left for New York for further work in concert accompanying. The young Elta worked too hard with her studying and her accompanying engagements in New York. She contracted double pneumonia and was obliged to come home to recuperate. About this time John Enwright secured Arta X. Blanchard as his associate manager of the Langren Hotel. Mr. Blanchard was from Richmond, Virginia. The young people met, they admired, love conquered and they were married on Elta's life-date, October, 1924. Mr. Blanchard passed away in December, 1946, mourned by literally hundreds of friends.

In 1925 Mrs. Blanchard saw the need of a Junior Music club in West Asheville. With characteristic initiative and ability she organized the West Asheville Junior Music Club. In 1927 the membership of one hundred voted unanimously to change the name to that of its founder, the Elta Handte Blanchard Junior Music Club. Prophecy: Her name will live in the music-loving hearts of little children, her gentle spirit will help guide their fingers over the ivory keys, as long as Jacob Stuckrath has lived in Elta's own memory — or longer. The club maintains a scholarship fund and assists students when the need arises.

In January, 1950, the organization will have its twenty fifth birthday. It has never faltered in its purpose of service to the young people of Western North Carolina. Miss Ada Gordon is unit co-counselor and continued the meetings during 1946-47. The Blanchard Junior Music Club has touched the lives of over two thousand young people. In concentric circles ever widening, ever deepening, its music has rippled into a surge of spiritual influence. Many of these pupils have completed or are completing their musical start at colleges and universities throughout the South and West.

Mrs. Blanchard has done much senior music club work, as well as junior work. She has taught a limited number of serious music students, maintaining two studios —one on Wall street and one on Blue Ridge avenue. She carries on classes at four county schools —Fairview, Woodfin, Haw Creek and Sand Hill. Recital accompanying has filled the years. Some grand opera singers Mrs. Blanchard has accompanied include: William Gustafson, Jeannett Vreeland, Emily Kalter, Felix Borowsky. Her clubs include: National League of American Pen Women of which she is membership chairman; member of the National Guild of Piano Teachers; Audition chairman for Western North Carolina; member of the Asheville Music Club; Counselor of the Blanchard Junior Music Club; Honorary member of the Eugene Field Society, listed in "Who's Who in Music."

Mr. Jacob Handte her father has made his home with Mrs. Blanchard and her husband until his passing, since the death of Mr. Handte's wife in 1941. She and her father have been members for forty years of Central Methodist Church, Asheville. Mr. Handte has just celebrated his eightieth birthday. A large reception with Mayor Clarence Morgan, giving a speech of tribute to the church's honored member and official, was arranged for Mr. Handte. Hosts for the occasion were the Charles Wesley Byrd class, the Roberts Bible class, the Mother's class, the Men's Bible class of which Mr. Handte had been secretary for so many years. Mr. Handte is a member of long standing of Central's Board of Stewards. Mrs. Blanchard, over a long period, has been a member of the Robert's Bible class. She was its president for seven years in alternate terms.

Mrs. Blanchard has studied piano under Miss Minnie Westall, John Starnes, Mrs. Crosby Adams, Mrs. Robert Carroll and in New York, Frank La Forge, Ernest Berumen. Her teacher courses have been with Kate Morton Laxton, Hans Barth, Guy Maier, John Thompson, and Mrs. Crosby Adams. Her composition was with Frederick Stanley Smith and Dr. Arthur Livingston Manchester. Mrs. Blanchard holds a degree of Doctor of Psychology from the College of Metaphysics in Indianapolis.

Mrs. Blanchard is author of a book of poems, "Shield of Faith," less than a year. Of the work, The first edition was sold out in Doctor of Literature, Lucia Trent, one of America's best loved poets, writes, "The reader who journeys through this volume will find lines which tug at his heartstrings, lines which sustain him in these days of dark transitions, lines which will refresh his faith in the essential unity of life." Glowing comments on "Shield of Faith" have come from many sources, including President Truman, Dorothy Dix and hosts of other poetry lovers.

Art, as projected beauty, seems one of Mrs. Blanchard's unusual definitions which is her new hobby. She has three outlets for her inner gift of the spirit, music, poetry, pictures which are kodaking, enlarging, then painting in oil. Over the mantelpiece of her charming living room is an oil painting, carried through this entire process by her own skill and talent. The painting is of a full blossomed cherry tree. The entire scene is twenty four inches by thirty inches. Her grand piano, a bronze statue, exquisitely wrought, of Jean Baptiste Lully are two other distinctive features of this room whose walls are tinted in pale blue, whose draperies are rich maroon.

Across from Mrs. Blanchard, as if reaching out the protective arms of age, is the wide, low built former home of one time Congressman Hays. This structure is a real landmark in Asheville. A short distance from Mrs. Blanchard's delightful residence Blue Ridge Avenue sheers off to a valley overlooked by some of the rugged foothills of our sections. Her whole life and surroundings seem integrated around beauty. She sums up her aspirations in Emerson's words, "To help the young soul, add energy, inspire hope, and blow the coals into a useful flame; to redeem defeat by new thought, by firm action; that is not easy; that is the work of divine man."

Mrs. Blanchard's Book Of Poems "Candle In The Heart" Released

Elta Handte-Blanchard, Asheville poet and musician, author of "Shield of Faith" and "Singing Heart", has recently published her third book of collected poems, CANDLE IN THE HEART, dedicated to the memory of her father, Jacob S. Handte, "A loyal devoted father, businessman, friend, and churchman, he was referred to as Francis of Assissi, by Dr. E. H. Blackard, his pastor. Mr. Handte had been a member of Central Methodist Church for over a half century; he was an honorary steward." Ash. News

Of her works, Edith Deaderick Erskine says, "The poetry of Elta Handte-Blanchard pulses with a warm human interest, and yet brings out in people and nature, a physical quality that is indeed rare. Candle in the Heart points out the beauty of today, and guides to a more hopeful future."

Expressing the language in words of poetry, Mrs. Blanchard exalts the supremacy of thought in "The Cedar and The Apple Tree," brings out concentrated energy of human endeavor in "I Knew A Father", and throughout the book, each poem opens up new worlds of conquest of thought that mean for a fuller, more useful and a happied existence:

"A friend is like music, loved and cherished 6-29-62
Long after the tones have faded away.
There is touch in the hand of friendship
That silently says what words cannot say.

'Like a gilding ray from the lighthouse tower,
Friendship glows warmly in far-reaching light.
It leaves us a legacy of vision and courage
That inspires for days beyond sight."

Mrs. Elta Handte Blanchard, Well-Known Musician, Dies

Mrs. Elta Handte Blanchard, musician, composer and instructor of music for several years, died in an Asheville hospital Tuesday following a long illness.

A resident of 77 Blue Ridge Ave., West Asheville, Mrs. Blanchard was the founder of a junior music club (second oldest of its kind in the state), which was named in her honor.

A composer with numerous songs to her credit, she was a winner four different times in the North Carolina State Composers Contest.

She was organist of Central Methodist Church for several years, a former chairman of the National Guild of Piano Teachers of Western North Carolina, and treasurer of the Grace Potter Carroll Student Loan Fund of the Asheville Music Club.

Mrs. Blanchard was a former president of the National League of American Pen Women, Asheville Branch, and was the author of three books of poetry. Her last work, "Candle in the Heart," will be published later this year. Several of her articles on music were published by Etude Magazine.

A daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Jacob S. Handte of Ohio, who moved to Asheville when she was a child, Mrs. Blanchard was the widow of Arta X. Blanchard. She leaves no known survivors.

DON W. BLANKENSHIP
Patrolman
ASHEVILLE, NORTH CAROLINA

Officer Don Blankenship says he joined the Department May 11th, 1926, and likes it because of the outdoor phase of it and gives him a better chance of meeting people than he has ever enjoyed before and as if those reasons were not sufficient he gives another—policing is a business full of chances for advancement.

So you see he is ambitious to make good in order that he may receive promotions and a spirit like that is bound to win.

He thinks the members should be students of subjects bearing on criminology and always be conversant with the laws of their State.

Prior to this work he was a member of the City Fire Department and at one time an automobile mechanic.

Naturally he likes a smooth running Department and thinks discipline is the best way to get and maintain one.

Officer Blakenship is a native of North Carolina having been born May 9th, 1898 in Weaverville, living there 4 years, then moving to Asheville.

Weaverville lost a good energetic youngster but by the same token Asheville has a good energetic young man.

He is said to regulate traffic as well as patrol.

He is therefore an all round member of the force.

5 feet 11¾ inches tall and weighs 176 pounds.

His residence No. 29 Allen Street, West Asheville.

Blomberg leaves 7-decade legacy

By Bob Terrell

CITIZEN-TIMES COLUMNIST

Harry Blomberg, whose business career in Asheville spanned seven decades, from the 1920s to the '80s, died Wednesday morning in a local hospital.

Harry Blomberg

Services will be at 3 p.m. Sunday in Temple Beth Ha-Tephila, where he was a member, with the Rev. Ronald Bluming officiating. The family will receive friends from 6 to 8 p.m. Saturday at Williams Funeral Service.

Blomberg was proud of the fact that he was in business in Asheville for 64 years, and that he held the Cadillac dealership exactly 50 years.

He was born in 1904 and grew up on Woodfin Street, around the corner from Thomas Wolfe's mother's boarding house, the "Old Kentucky Home," and said he had helped put Wolfe's father, W.O. Wolfe, to bed "many a time when he came home roaring drunk."

Blomberg was four years younger than Thomas Wolfe, but the two were boyhood friends, and many years later, in what he considered to be one of his proudest moments, Harry purchased the Wolfe home to save it from the wrecking ball and later resold it to the family.

Blomberg's first business was a partnership with the late Clarence Sluder Jr., whose father had driven the first automobile in Asheville, a Locomobile Steamer brought here by Octagon Soap Co. in 1898.

Blomberg's father was one of Asheville's success stories. Lewis Blomberg arrived in Asheville in the 1880s almost without funds, and opened a sporting goods and pipe and tobacco shop at 17 Patton Ave. His business grew and he soon numbered among his customers the Vanderbilts and Arthur Murray, who came here to teach dancing at the Battery Park Hotel and traded the elder Blomberg so many dancing lessons for boxes of cigars.

Harry Blomberg and Sluder opened a gasoline station on North Market Street in 1923 when Blomberg was 19 years old.

He had quit high school after the ninth grade, much to the chagrin of Andy Hutchins, principal of Asheville High, who later admonished Blomberg: "You're wasting your time fooling around with cars. You ought to come back to school or get a job and go to work."

Sluder finished high school and went to college, and Blomberg bought his share of the business, calling it "Harry's Motor Inn." For a long while, everything he did had something to do with rolling wheels – gasoline stations, parking garages, automobile sales.

He sold Haynes cars, Appersons, Auburns, Locomobiles – any brand he could obtain – and at the time Blomberg was flexing his business muscles, an auto-building boom spread across the country and more than 2,000 different autos were marketed.

In 1937, Blomberg made his biggest move, accepting the Cadillac dealership in Asheville. Four years later he added Pontiacs to his showroom and for the remainder of his life he was known as Asheville's Cadillac-Pontiac man.

Blomberg was a master salesman. Once when automatic transmissions first came out, he and one of his salesmen, Johnny Groom, demonstrated a car for a potential customer who lived on a hill on Howland Road. When they drove the customer home and Groom put the car in reverse to back out of the circular drive, the transmission stuck. With the customer waving for them to drive on through, Harry instructed Groom to "keep backing." Rather than let the customer see the transmission was stuck, they backed down Howland Road, down Macon Avenue, up Charlotte Street, and over to Harry's Market Street garage where the transmission was repaired.

See Blomberg on page 3B

Blomberg

Sometimes Blomberg acted on whim. Once he wanted to buy a whiskey still displayed at Biltmore Homespun Shops for display at his business, but when he learned the still was not for sale he bought the entire homespun business. Naturally, it too became immensely successful.

He was one of Asheville's greatest boosters, once promoting the city by persuading Saks Fifth Avenue in New York to pass out Asheville brochures in its men's department, figuring more tourists would be better for business.

Blomberg also was one of the city's great benefactors, pouring hundreds of thousands of dollars into charitable causes. He contributed so much to the community that he formed a foundation and funded it privately.

Blomberg once traded a 1928 Rolls Royce (value today: $200,000) for a $450 diamond ring, though one of his finest moments came on Dec. 22, 1941, when he purchased the Wolfe home on Spruce Street. The massive gabled house of 29 rooms had passed from the hands of Julia Wolfe, Tom's mother, to Wachovia Bank and Trust Co. when she invested heavily in the Florida land boom and went broke.

He bought the house from Wachovia ahead of a man who wanted to tear it down and build a produce market, then sold the property to Fred Wolfe, Tom's brother, two months later.

Blomberg is survived by his wife, Shirley Blomberg of the home; two daughters, Barbara Blomberg of New York and Mrs. S.M. Patton of Asheville; three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

He was a member of Biltmore Lodge 446 AF&AM, Scottish Rite Bodies of Asheville and Oasis Shrine Temple of Charlotte.

The family has asked that contributions to charity be made in lieu of flowers.

"You're wasting your time fooling around with cars. You ought to get a job and go to work."

Asheville High principal Andy Hutchins had no idea that in 1919, when he spoke these words to Harry Blomberg cautioning him about spending all his time tinkering with cars, that Harry's Cadillac, Pontiac, GMC would be standing on a hill on Patton Avenue eighty-six years later. What began as one of Asheville's first gasoline filling stations on North Market Street is today a third generation family business.

Initially, everything Harry did, had something to do with rolling wheels, gasoline stations, parking garages, and automobile sales. He sold used Appersons, Auburns, locomobiles, Haynes cars, anything that had an engine and four rolling wheels.

During the great depression of the 1930"s, when many of Asheville's automobile dealers went broke and even the city floundered financially Harry's business flourished. He was adiligent and honest. He correctly gauged the needs of automobile owners. He knew they needed fuel and service and because most cars were open air models with window curtains, storage for bad weather days. He called his places "Harry's Motor Inns" and located them strategically throughout the city— one on Market Street, another on Haywood Street, and a third at the Grove Park Inn, capturing the tourist trade at Asheville's most prominent hotels.

In 1937, Harry obtained the Cadillac franchise, the first in the Southeast. Four years later, in 1941, he acquired Pontiac. Harry's son-in-law, Buddy Patton joined the business in 1950.. In 1967, Harry's Cadillac-Pontiac moved from downtown Asheville to it's current location on Patton Avenue. In 1991, GMC Truck was added to the franchises and the company was renamed Harry"s Cadillac-Pontiac-GMC and nicknamed Harry's On The Hill.

Harry Blomberg died at the age of eighty-seven in November of 1991. The company is now owned by Buddy Patton, his wife Marilyn, and Harry's younger daughter, Barbara Blomberg. Two of Buddy and Marilyn's three children are operating the business. Pat Grimes is General Manager and her brother Harry Patton is in charge of Sales operations.

Harry would find it difficult to believe that today a top of the line Cadillac XLR sells for $76,000, that three of the company's managers are female, that cars are diagnosed by factory trained technicians with aid of computers, that the paint matching in the collision repair center is a science more than an art and that customers are greeted at the door by his grandson Harry's yellow lab, Shirley.

He would not be surprised that what started with his fascination with wheels over eight decades ago was developed into a multigenerational family business with more than sixty employees who continue to serve the automotive needs of Western North Carolina. Harry's message to his family- "Work hard, treat your customers and employees fairly, and always give back to your community"- is still heard at Harry's On The Hill.

Colonel and Mrs. P. G. Bowman Seriously Injured Making Escape From Handsome Home, Strawberry Hill, Destroyed by Fire Last Night.

Their escape cut off by flames before their peril was discovered, Colonel P. G. Bowman and Mrs. Bowman, narrowly escaped being burned to death after Mrs. Bowman had fallen and Colonel Bowman had been forced to jump from the second story of their beautiful country residence, Strawberry Hill, which was destroyed by fire shortly before 12 o'clock last night.

Finding his escape by the stairway rendered impossible by the rush of flames from below, Colonel Bowman attempted to lower his wife down by use of bedclothing, but her hands slipped and she fell to the ground beneath, breaking her right leg. Colonel Bowman jumped immediately from the second story and fell close by where his wife lay; in the fall he was so injured that he could not move himself nor aid Mrs. Bowman. Both lay nearly an hour almost within reach of the burning timbers of the house.

Neighbors Come.

After what seemed an age to the imperiled sufferers neighbors finally came and hastened to call a physician. Dr. J. O. Anderson was the first to get to the spot and he placed Mrs. Bowman in his automobile and hurried to the Mission hospital, where it was found that her right leg had been broken as a result of the fall. Shortly afterward Noland, Brown and company's ambulance, which had been called by telephone, arrived and Colonel Bowman was immediately taken to Meriwether hospital, where it was found he had a dislocated knee, fracture of several bones in the feet, and a large number of bruises about the body.

At the time the fire broke out, about 11:10 p. m., Mrs. Bowman was sitting up reading, and her first warning was a rush of smoke and flames up the stairway, which took the route probably because it offered the only opening. This was heightened by a draft of hot air from the cellar where the furnace was located, and from which the fire is supposed to have started.

When Mrs. Bowman fell from the end of the improvised rope on which her husband hoped to let her safely to the ground, it was just 11:10; Colonel Bowman jumped immediately and both were on the ground practically unable to move from that time until 11:50. The fire was discovered by the cook who tried to warn the occupants of the house in which were only Colonel and Mrs. Bowman. The servant was returning from Asheville when she saw the blaze.

After the alarm was given a crowd of nearly 200 people went out from West Asheville to the burning house, but neither they nor the West Asheville fire department, which responded to the alarm, were able to do anything to prevent the destruction of the house and its valuable contents. This was due to the fact that the house was located nearly a mile from the end of the car line in West Asheville and beyond the reach of the water lines.

The house which was valued at $25,000 was partially covered by insurance. It was built in 1890 by W. D. Hoagland of Chicago, Ill., and was originally planned as a country club, but after its construction Mr. Hoagland used it as a residence for his family for about ten years. It was then sold to Dr. Winters, of Philadelphia, who occupied it for more than two years. Its last occupant was Colonel Bowman, who came to Asheville recently from Birmingham, Ala.

The destruction of the house was complete and it was impossible to save any portion of the furnishings.

"MOTHER OF THE YEAR"

Mrs. Frank J. Bowman, Asheville

WINNING ESSAY: By Barina Bowman

"A TRIBUTE TO MY MOTHER"

My mother is my guide to God. She leads me day by day. And when I have a problem, I always feel free to ask for advice. A mother is not just a loved one, but a friend who will always be by your side whether times are good or bad. There are many children throughout this world of ours who have to struggle through life alone the hard way, but I thank God for her, because I can have only one mother through life.

Thank you Mother, you've done a good job of helping me start my life out right.

Miss Barina Bowman, age 12, 6th Grade, Sand Hill School, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Bowman.

MRS. FRANK J. BOWMAN and her daughter Barina. Mrs. Bowman is the secretary of the Sand Hill School PTA, and is active in the Eastern Star Electra No. 228 and the American Legion Auxiliary. Mr. Bowman is employed at the American Enka Corp.

Asheville young folk by the scores took to the streets and by ways yesterday and today, after a thin blanket of snow and freezing temperatures had turned slopes into ideal places for sledding and sliding. Some sleds got their first use of the year. These scenes are typical of many throughout the vicinity a short time after the snow had covered the ground. The top picture shows Miss Dorothy Thomas, student at David Millard junior high school, in the act of throwing a snowball—at The Times photographer. She was among the first to get out in the snow during the afternoon. Shown in the bottom picture, three youths are shown enjoying a rapid ride down the slope of Craggy avenue in West Asheville last night. They are Lee Bradshaw, Nick Collins, Jr., and Bruce Blankenship.

Branks' Igloo Is Attractive Product of Storm

This igloo is the "real thing" and will house six children fairly comfortably. It is in the yard of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Brank, 33 Dorchester avenue, West Asheville, and was built by the Branks family and some of the neighbors' children. They all worked about four hours on it yesterday and the Stars and Stripes were raised on it today. In the picture, left to right, are Kenneth West, Mrs. W. S. Brank, Marian Gibbs, Eddie Winslow, Peggy Lou Laughter and Helen Ruble Brank. The igloo is quite a neighborhood attraction and is substantially built. The back, or body, part is much larger than appears in the picture. The three children seated and Mrs. Brank, with shovel at the right, were all inside when the photographer arrived.

Taxi Driver Robbed, Shot By Assailant

A Blue Bird cab driver was robbed and shot early yesterday, narrowly escaping death.

Buel Breedlove, 32, of 81 Virginia Ave., was shot three times in the head by a Negro fare about 2 a.m. He was in fairly good condition at Memorial Mission Hospital where he was admitted some 50 minutes after the attack.

The bullets did not penetrate Breedlove's brain, but were embedded in the skin near his ear, hospital attendants reported. He also suffered a wound in the back and the side of the head.

A suspect was taken off a bus by Greensboro police at the request of the Buncombe County Sheriff's Department and officers from here questioned the Negro at length yesterday.

It was reported, however, that the man was only detained and later released.

The Asheville officers returned to the city last night.

Deputies said they were informed by Breedlove that he had picked up his fare on Southside Avenue early yesterday and had driven him to the intersection of Brooklyn and Wyatt Roads in Shiloh where the Negro demanded Breedlove's money at pistol point.

Officers said Breedlove told them that he gave the Negro both his personal and taxi fare money, totaling $30.

Then the gunman, Breedlove was quoted as saying, shot him. As the driver attempted to get out of the cab, the Negro shot him twice more.

Breedlove stumbled some 200 yards to a nearby residence where he asked occupants to call the Police Department and an ambulance.

Four Rotarians are honored

Times Reports

Four members of the Rotary Club of West Asheville have received the Paul Harris Fellow Award.

They are Balfour Brookshire, B. Allan Culberson Jr., Dr. Orville MacAlpine and Walter Tipton.

The awards were presented by District 767 District Gov. S.C. "Mark" Markanda, of Matthews.

The four received the awards at a spring ladies night dinner at Asheville Country Club.

The award is named for Paul Harris who founded Rotary in 1905 in Chicago. Rotary International provide scholarships for study in foreign countries for U.S. students and brings students from other countries to the U.S. for study.

The four local Rotarians were honored for their work in behalf of Rotary International.

In 1985, the Rotary Foundation of Rotary International provided 945 scholarships to students and professionals, so they could pursue their educational goals in countries other than their own.

Last year, Rotary International began a "stop polio by 2005" program as part of the Rotary Foundation. This 20-year project will use $6 million each year for a "polio-plus" program, which will immunize all the children of the world by 2005. A Rotary International immunization task force and area operational committees have been put to work.

The program has innoculated more than 50,000 children in Panama and 12 million in Mexico in January 1986. Another team was back in Mexico in March 1986 to innoculate additional Mexican children. Teams have been sent to other countries around the world with reports coming in to Rotary International in Evanston, Ill.

As the work is completed, Paul Harris Fellow Awards are supported by donations from members of Rotary Clubs, by projects conducted by each club and donations from the Rotarians receiving the award.

Bishop Paul Hardin, who serves as counsel for church and public relations at Givens Estates' United Methodist Retirement Community, was speaker at the dinner.

Soldiers Get Proper Fits, Brookshire Says

WHEN you join the army now you're not thrown into an oversized uniform, tight shoes and a motley collection of men.

Douglas C. Brookshire of Asheville who was inducted at Fort Jackson on May 20, told today of the pains specialists take in properly clothing the soldiers, and by thorough tests and lengthy interviews determining where each man will fit into Uncle Sam's fighting forces best.

BROOKSHIRE

Private Brookshire who formerly was employed as librarian by The Citizen-Times company is home on a brief leave. He already has passed through the induction center and now is going through the reception center before being assigned to an army unit.

There's no guess work about any of the procedure, he said, and the physical, mental and aptitude tests are conducted just as carefully as you would expect your own doctor to do them.

Soldiering is a business matter these days, Private Brookshire said, and the army is conducted accordingly. There's plenty of work and discipline, but the food is plentiful and well cooked and living quarters are comfortable.

"It's just like in civilian life. When a man has a job that takes care of his necessities and provides enough money for some of the luxuries of life, he in turn is expected to do his work well."

Private Brookshire is the son of Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Brookshire of 44 School road, Malvern Hills.

Harley Gaskill Brookshire, Jr., general practitioner (1940)

Harley Brookshire, Jr. was one of the few Asheville natives to join the local medical community in the forties. His father, Harley Brookshire, Sr., was a prominent physician and civic leader, a member of the City Council, and a trustee of Asheville-Biltmore College.

Harley Brookshire, Jr., attended local public schools and Mount Herman School for Boys. After graduating from the University of North Carolina, he obtained his medical degree from Tulane Medical School and interned at Charity Hospital in New Orleans. Beginning practice in nearby Candler in 1940, he also accepted an appointment as the Asheville school physician, succeeding Margery Lord.

In 1942 Brookshire began his military service with a medical battalion of the 77th (Statue of Liberty) Infantry Division in the European Theater. He rose to the rank of lieutenant colonel and was decorated with the Army Commendation Ribbon and the Purple Heart. After his return from overseas, he served briefly on the surgical service of Moore General Hospital in Swannanoa.

Discharged in 1946, Brookshire returned to general practice here. He, his wife and two children lived on Shelbourne Road in West Asheville. He died from the rupture of an intracranial aneurysm in 1949. He was 45 years old.

EDUCATOR PASSES

Rev. Dr. Albert E. Brown, prominent Baptist educator, who died early this morning at his home in West Asheville.

REV. DR. BROWN DIES AT HOME IN WEST ASHEVILLE

Was Superintendent for the Past 25 Years of Mountain School Department of Baptist Mission Board.

PROMINENT EDUCATOR

Rev. Dr. Albert E. Brown, for the past 25 years superintendent of the mountain school department of the Southern Baptist Board of Home Missions, and one of the most prominent Baptist educators of the south, died suddenly at his home, 39 Tremont street, in West Asheville, this morning.

Death occurred shortly after seven o'clock, from an attack of heart disease. Rev. Dr. Brown had been in his garden a few minutes previously and became suddenly ill. He went to bed and a doctor was called, but death ensued within a few minutes.

He had been seriously ill for some weeks previously with a complication of ailments, but recently had been much improved.

The funeral will be held at Calvary Baptist church, Sunday afternoon at two o'clock, with burial in the West Asheville cemetery. Rev. J. B. Grice, pastor of the church, will be in charge of the services, assisted by Rev. Dr. B. D. Gray of Atlanta, secretary of the Home Mission Board; Rev. Dr. R. J. Bateman, pastor of the First Baptist church here, and Rev. J. W. O'Hara, assistant to the late Rev. Dr. Brown.

Born in Tennessee

Rev. Dr. A. E. Brown was born near Jefferson City, Tenn., August 6, 1863, and was 61 years of age at the time of his death. He was educated at Carson-Newman college, where he was graduated with degree of A. B., and later had the degree of Divinity conferred upon him. He entered the ministry, and for a time was at Hendersonville, later becoming pastor of the West End Baptist church in this city, where he served a year or more.

While he was pastor of the West End church he received appointment of superintendent of the mountain schools.

To this work he devoted his life's efforts and was eminently successful. Starting with no schools, by reason of his direct work there are now 30 of these schools in nine southern states: North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Alabama, Virginia, Arkansas, and Missouri. These schools now care for 5,000 pupils, and engage 225 teachers. The property valuation is $1,500,000. During his career as superintendent Rev. Dr. Brown established 46 mountain schools, but several of these were discontinued or consolidated with other schools.

On October 1, 1923, Rev. J. W. O'Hara became assistant superintendent and has been aiding Rev. Dr. Brown since that time.

Surviving Relatives

Dr. Brown was married to Miss Lamanda A. Whittaker 38 years ago. The widow and five children survive. They are: W. A. Brown, Cincinnati, O.; A. M. Brown, Asheville; Mrs. B. A. Green, Bakersville, N. C.; Mrs. C. T. Gossett, Asheville; Mrs. Roy Hamrick, West Asheville. Other immediate relatives are two brothers: Rev. T. L. Brown, of Gates, N. C., and E. A. Brown of Sylva; and a sister, Mrs. Sallie Walker of Cleveland, Tenn.

sheriff's dept., fire dept., sports arenas, and any place that had the latest news. Joe Brown allowed the local officials to come on the air and relay the information to the public.

When the year of 1964 rolled around, Brown won the NC Broadcaster's Press Association Award.

This award was an award of excellency after a story he produced with a broadcast on a cave-in at a talc mine in Murphy, NC. Throughout Little Joe's successful adventure of spinning records, he worked at WISE from 1965 - 72 , and at WSKY for 14 years.

WSKY's 1,000 watt radio station recently moved to Westgate Shopping Center in Asheville. In this facility, Joe was the host of a weekday morning program from 6 - 9 AM before retiring to only part-time disc jockey work on Sunday mornings when he allowed the Gospel to spin across the turntables.

In 1997 Little Joe Brown continues to spread the Gospel with his "Gospel Hymn Time Too" program on a local radio station.

Music from the top 7,000 Gospel hits is accompanied by prayer for special requests, and Little Joe also gets the song requests in for his listeners. Like many other great radio announcers, radio runs in his blood.

Buncombe Veterans Fought In Famous Civil War Battles

One man who charged up Cemetery Ridge with the Stars and Bars in Pickett's immortal and fatal rush at Gettysburg and half a dozen who took part in Bragg's "barren victory" at Chickamauga, are among the 37 living Confederate veterans in Buncombe county. Another was present when Lee surrendered at Appomattox, and still another remembers clearly the fall of Fort Sumter, the opening gun of the war, although he did not enter the service until several weeks later.

The veterans living today are a modest lot for the most part. Those who were old enough to get into the grey ranks in '61 are extremely few and a majority of the men who attend the meetings of Zeb Vance camp at the courthouse nowadays say quite frankly: "We were just boys in the regiments recruited toward the end; we guarded prisoners and watched mountain passes, some of us were not even armed. But we had to sleep in the snow sometimes, and live in the mud go hungry and ragged, so we feel that we did our part."

Average Age Is 98

Consider for a moment the troops recruited in '61 were from 21 to 35 years old. Possibly the average was 25. That would make the average age of the survivors today 98 and the youngest, recruited at 20, would be 93. The young men who went into the late regiments in '63 and '64 were often as young as sixteen—from eight to 15 years younger than the troops of the first great Confederate victories, so by far the greater number of veterans living today are of these late regiments.

But even among the living veterans who were but lads in their teens when Sumter fell, are men who fought with musket and bayonet, dashed on horseback with naked sabre, or swabbed and pointed cannon, in the really great battles of the war.

Gettysburg, the real death knell of the grey hopes and Murfreesboro or Stone's River, one of the bloodiest battles of the war, the hundred bloody skirmishes in Sherman's path of devastation; the victory of Bragg at Chickamauga and the battle of Kennesaw Mountain are memories that stir the blood in the now feeble limbs of about a dozen of the veterans in the county today.

Among them are:

W. W. Pace, now 93 years old, had not yet enlisted when the Confederates fired on Fort Sumter, but he was enrolled in Company B, First South Carolina artillery a few weeks thereafter and spent the next two years as a member of the fort's "rebel" garrison. He was there when the Union fleet finally battered them into submission in April '63, and from Charleston, his outfit set out across the Carolinas and Georgia. He was in front of Sherman when that Yankee general swept through Georgia and he was captured finally at the big battle of Averysboro, S. C. He was wounded during the seige of Sumter by the Yankees. He now lives with his son J. B. Pace near Arden.

Was At Chickamauga

J. M. Case, who lives at Emma, and his brother, W. H. Case, now dead, went out with Company D, 30th North Carolina and were transferred to the famous sixtieth regiment. They saw service in Virginia and fought at both Chickamauga and Kennesaw Mountain and were in the thick of 36 days of service fighting around Atlanta.

John M. Houck of Marion, a member of Zeb Vance camp, was captured at Gettysburg after being wounded. He was also in the fighting around Richmond and faced Grant's troops in the wilderness around Spottsylvania.

Spencer Freeman, who served in the 25th North Carolina, is another veteran of the battles of Chickamauga and Kennesaw Mountain.

Captain W. Elbert Weaver of Weaverville and his negro body servant, Gilbert Baird, went out with the 29th North Carolina and campaigned over six states, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida and both the Carolinas. Captain Weaver still carries a bullet from Chickamauga. He saw Sherman burn Atlanta and took part in the last battle of the war, an engagement at Mansfield, La., some days after Lee's surrender at Appomattox.

Colonel R. L. Fitzpatrick, present commander of Zeb Vance camp, was for awhile a member of Morgan's famous raiders, but didn't cross the Ohio on the brilliant raid into Kentucky and Indiana. He enlisted with 31st Tennessee, but for most of the war was in Captain Owen's detachment of scouts, doing reconnoitering for Vaughn's brigade.

F. B. Bishop, 89, of Avery's creek, was present at Lee's surrender to Grant and was wounded "at the big battle of Bull Gap." His father and older brother also wore the grey.

S. Patterson, 67 Murphy street, says he was in "plenty of battles" in the Carolinas, and was wounded seven times. He is now 97 years old.

Wounded In Pickett's Charge

Levi J. Walker, 83 years old now, was the fifth color bearer shot down in the Confederate charge up Cemetery Ridge. He lost his left leg and spent the remainder of the war a prisoner at David's Island, N. Y. He has lived in Asheville since 1920 and his home is at 266 Forest Hill drive. He was in Company B of the 13th North Carolina.

The Rev. T. F. Glenn, who has been in the ministry 75 years, was chaplain of a regiment of General Joe Wheeler's command called the Third Confederate. It was made up of companies from Georgia, Tennessee, and the Carolinas. He was at the battle of Murfreesboro in Tennessee and was in front of Sherman at Atlanta.

Lee Williams of Old Fort, was in Company B, of the 9th North Carolina artillery battallion. He took part in the battle of Forth Fisher and saw service in Virginia.

Ephraim Byerley, who lives in West Asheville, had two fingers shot off at the battle of Hatcher's Gap. He served in Company A, 21st North Carolina.

J. J. Stephenson, who was in Company C, 69th North Carolina, was in the battle of Bull's Gap and saw service in Tennessee.

R. T. Underwood, Chestnut street, now 87 years old, served Capt M H. Love's company of Col. W. H. Thomas' Legion, which included 400 Cherokee Indians. The unit was made up largely of young boys and Underwood's job was to guard Yankee prisoners and the passes in the Great Smoky mountains. He and his comrades saw no fighting but endured great hardships in the last winter of the war. He brought many prisoners back to Asheville.

P. B. Brown, living on the Brevard road, was in Company C, 16th South Carolina regiment.

Several Served In Cavalry

A number of the local veterans belonged to the 14th North Carolina cavalry battalion, a unit recruited of young soldiers. Among these were J. J. Stephens, R. B. Bitton of Horseshoe, J. A. Hughey and H. S. Walton.

John Paxton of Canton, who belongs to Zeb Vance camp, saw service in the western army with Company I, 62nd North Carolina.

J. W. Dickerson, who was in Col. Walter Bryson's command was quite young, and served at the saltpetre works near Hendersonville.

There are a number of names on the Confederate pension role at the courthouse whose regimental affiliations and records are not known to the camp, nor does the pension clerk have their addresses. They are known to be living, however, as they called for their checks in June. They include D. V. Cole, T. M. Cole, F. Guthry, Thomas Hudgens, Henry S. Limbaugh, O. W. Reynolds, Clingman Sawyer, O. W. Surratt, David B. Watts, Charles W. White and Richard Gowan. The names of J. A. Ballard and H. E. Parham are on

THE NEWS PERSONALITY OF THE WEEK

By TOM CUSHING

ROBERT JOSEPH BROWN

W Ash. News - 6-22-45

This is an interview with a far better interviewer than I am.

Robert Joseph Brown (or you may call him just plain "Bob" like every one else does if you wish) has written stories about the truly great ones of this country and the world. He has also taken their pictures. I believe he could also write the music if called upon to do so.

Twice in recent years Bob Brown interviewed the late President Roosevelt, took excellent pictures of that great world leader. Bob said he knew the President better than he did Mrs. Roosevelt, in spite of the fact that she visited this section (Ed: and others) oftener. Dorothy Dix, the internationally known Columnist of Common Sense, wrote Bob Brown that the picture he made of her for one of the leading magazines was the best she ever had. I was much amused at her personal letter to Mr. Brown, in which she insisted on paying him for the prints. "I am," she wrote, "one of those honest widder wimmin who pays her debts."

That superb violinist, Jascha Heifitz, saw a portrait photograph which Bob Brown made of him (and it is one of the best I ever saw of anyone). Heifitz took the picture, refused to return it until our editor of the Farmers Federation News promised before witnesses to supply the concert violinist with prints! Jeannette McDonald, the well-known opera and movie star, considers Bob Brown almost her State Photographer as well as her friend. Jose Iturbi, the pianist; Martinelli, renowned Metropolitan Opera singer; John Barrymore: they have all been willing subjects before the camera of Robert Joseph Brown. It makes me feel so small to be writing about this top-flight news man.

I hardly know where to begin. Maybe it would be best to start with the beginning of a career rather than a birthday.

The bus from Rockwood, Tenn. to Knoxville stopped for a few minutes at Harriman. A youth of 22 got off to stretch his legs. He was on his way to Knoxville, hoping to get a job in that most depressing year of 1929.

The young man, always alert to anything around him, chanced to hear some excited conversation among the natives of the town. A local mother had just drowned her three children and hung herself. Horrors!

Robert J. Brown (you guessed it!) went into action. There would be another bus in an hour. He had just quit a Cincinnati newspaper because of an unfortunate type-setting error proved later to be no fault of his. He hoped to get a writing job in Knoxville. Here was the lucky break he needed.

Within minutes Bob Brown had checked with the sheriff's office, the local undertaker, and several others. The story was true. Bob promptly phoned the story to the Knoxville News-Sentinel. Then he caught the next bus to that city. That afternoon he entered the editorial offices. "How do we know you can write?" he was asked.

"You have a front page story I wrote in that paper," pointing to the latest edition of the News-Sentinel on the editor's desk.

It was the story of the tragedy at Harriman. "Well I'll be . . !"

Young Bob went to work at once. His personal depression was over.

But what of his preparation for the job of newspaper writing? A news scoop, like knowing the right people, will get you a job; but unless you know your stuff, the lucky breaks won't hold that job for you.

Robert Joseph Brown, son of Harry and the late Mrs. Brown, of Rockwood, Tenn., learned his present profession by working at some of most everything there is in the world, or so it seems to me. At 38, he has had a wealth of experience in many lines: jobs he did well, too—though the breaks of the game got him fired or laid off, made him quit, and actually got him in jail (which, as he wrote about it later, was a surprisingly nice jail; of which Chattanooga should be proud. But that is another story.)

Young Bob Brown, whose Dad owns a dry cleaning plant and laundry in Rockwood and also serves as city commissioner, appears to have an unquenchable thirst to know more about most things than any man I ever met. It doesn't matter much what it is, so long as he is learning. Which makes a highly elastic, versatile mind. Couple that with a persistence wholly ignorant of the word "quit," and you have an unbeatable combination. The lad went through public school in Tennessee, then for two years at the U. of Cincinnati. Later he and his wife had further study at Lincoln Memorial U.

Mechanics and electricity fascinate him. When Bob was a little boy his father had charge of coal mine machinery in Kentucky and Bob learned all there was to know about it. Though his education was along classical lines, he "buddied" with science teachers, learned 'on the side' all they could teach him. Till, at 13, he built the first radio receiving set in his entire community. People came from miles around to see and hear this mysterious new thing.

You may have seen Bob Brown in some of his lectures and demonstrations in science. He is booked regularly by a Lyceum bureau for three or four lectures in schools throughout the country - during his vacation. As a part of his astounding demonstrations this prominent West Asheville resident plays with high frequency electricity as a kitten plays with a ball of twine. Using a home-made Tesla coil like he first saw when he was six and which he and the boys in his practical science course at Oakley school built, Bob Brown amazes his audiences by passing electricity through a little girl and lighting enough lamps to illuminate a night baseball game. For a long time Miss Jean Bruce, a Unadilla Avenue lass now working for Buncombe County, helped Brown with this demonstration. Recently his own little daughter, Betty, 9, is his fearless partner. The Bob Brown demonstration of how to play safely with certain death was first made at an Asheville Junior League circus. This amateur scientist is now very much in demand all over the southeast.

No man ever plans to enter the newspaper or publishing field. He is usually bitten by some unseen bug. But once the Printus Inkus virus enters the blood stream, it is there for life. Bob Brown was so bitten during the famous Scopes "Monkey Trial" down in Tenn-O-see near Brown's home. The lad was in high school and visited Dayton with a preacher friend. To pass the time, he crashed the trial room, innocently took a seat in the section reserved for some of the world's greatest reporters. Young Brown came out of that room a newspaper man—for life.

Between the time he first knew what his profession would be and the first reportorial job he had, Bob Brown tried most everything in the way of honest work (and he IS a most honest, most ethical man). During summer vacations he worked on a railway section gang, in a chemical laboratory, in coal mines; he ran a gasoline station, tried his hand in a butcher shop, helped a Chattanooga reporter on a mine explosion story which killed 38 people. Good stories always seemed to "break" for Bob, but he had little luck in getting a regular job.

In 1927 this lad, whose mother had died when he was [illegible] to make his way away from home to make his way in the world. That way proved rough for him. In Cincinnati he got locked out of his hotel room because he couldn't pay his rent; he went plenty hungry till he got a short-term job in a cafeteria. A man on the Cincinnati Enquirer got him a job as glorified office boy and apprentice with an advertising agency. Then to the Kroger grocery chain; and to another Cincy paper as reporter, which place he quit when a story was published NOT as he wrote it. Which brings us to the time of his getting that story of the Tennessee tragedy reported from Harrimon.

It was soon after that Bob Brown landed in jail—for refusing to divulge the source of information and pictures of a cock-fighting story Bob did for a Chattanooga paper. Life magazine featured this incident in the career of a true, ethical, fearless newsman. "And," Bob told me, "my little boy Bobby was the only one who failed to see a lot of fun is my being in the hoosegow for four days."

In 1933 Robert Joseph Brown married Mary Tallent of Rhea Springs, Tenn. This wedding followed a courtship of one week. It is most gratifying to see this lovely family of four, started by a natural infatuation which was known no doubt from the first moment Bob Brown and Mary Tallent met. Their children, Bobby and Betty, are being reared most intelligently as individuals entirely capable of thinking for themselves.

Though they had been most everywhere, the Browns had never seen the ocean up to 1940. So they loaded up their trailer and left Tennessee with nothing else in mind. Their route led through Asheville. They stopped here for two weeks, during which Bob worked for a local paper. They liked it so well they stayed. And I don't believe they saw the sea until Mr. Brown went to Charleston on one of his Lyceum lecture tours this Spring!

Robert J. Brown had not been in Asheville long before a vacancy in the editorship of the Farmers Federation News occurred. Because of his all-round ability as newsman and photographer, Brown was a "natural" for the job, as James G. K. McClure, head of the Federation soon found out. Once when young Brown went to ask his Chief about a cover picture for the News, Mr. McClure said, "Now, Bob, the Farmers Federation News is YOUR job. This office is mine." And so it is that Robert J. Brown, affectionately known as "Bob", works as his own boss—some 16 to 18 hours a day. He photographs matters of agricultural and stock-raising interest throughout this section, and runs pictures and stories in one of the best laid-out monthly magazines of its kind. He travels here and there, and knows the people. "It isn't work, Tom. For me, it's nothing but fun."

More than two years ago Bob Brown, who studied the violin when he was a boy, but, frankly, can't play it at all, had an idea which will bring to this section a wealth of the finest publicity. A sincere lover of music, in co-operation with radio station WISE Bob Brown originated a "musical appreciation" course in the city and county schools. Superintendents Roberson and Latham joined enthusiastically in this cultural effort.

"My son Bobby really started the thing," Bob says, "when, after hearing his school teacher read for the class the story of Hansel and Gretel, the boy asked her if the students wouldn't like to hear the music of that charming opera. They did, after Bobby had me take the records to the school and play them. I figured other students in the other schools would like the same thing."

Last week I attended a meeting of the Lions club, where this unique course among the schools of the nation was given the honors. This child of Bob Brown's splendid brain is much too big to be limited by the space of this sketch. I shall quite definitely tell you about it in detail at an early date. With credit where credit is due: to Bob and Bobby Brown, originators; to the heads of our schools who so quickly recognized the worth of the course; and to Station WISE, who so generously contributed the necessary equipment and time on the air if our children were to receive the benefit of so fine a thing.

And now we come to end of this poor sketch about Bob Brown. My notes are only half exhausted. But Bob Brown wears well, and he will still be here, doing fine things for western North Carolina, when the time comes to write another, more worthy story about him.

ROBERT JOSEPH BROWN
West Asheville, NC 28806

Robert Joseph Brown, born in Rockwood, Tennessee in 1906. He had one sister and several half brothers and sisters. He attended the University of Cincinnati where he majored in Physics. Afterwards his jobs were newspaper reporter and photographer for numerous papers in Knoxville and Chattanooga, Tennessee, Louisville, Kentucky, Denver, Colorado and Asheville, North Carolina.

In 1932 he married Mary Gertrude Tallent from Rhea Springs, Tennessee. They knew each other only seven days and married on the school house steps. They had one son, Robert J. Brown, Jr. and a daughter, Betty (Hazel Elizabeth) Brown, born in 1934 and 1936.

Brown's interest in electricity and the field of science began when his Dad brought home an old telegraph instrument. He extracted two dry cell batteries from the telephone to make sparks.

Brown worked on the TVA projects in 1933 where he did electrical work. He also did old jobs for people in the area, like installing electricity to the homes for lights.

In 1936 he moved to Chattanooga where he was a paper reporter and photographer. The next move was to Asheville, NC.

The Farmer's Federation was a new place of work. He was the editor for the Farmer's Federation News. Photographer and Asheville paper became his next venture. He was encouraged to make his first Tests Coil. Fairview School and night students made him a place to try his experiments for what his life long dream held for him.

In 1945 he presented his first assembly program which over the years grew to seven complete programs.

After a summer in Lakeside, Ohio where he performed his new toy, he was asked to join the International Platform Association where he began booking and traveling with his shown, "Science Circus", to schools in the mid-west. After several years he settled in the southeastern states closer to home.

So many of his demonstrations were devised from items around the house, simple to do and simple to explain. He began writing down the stunts and putting them in book form. He published seven books. He also had a newspaper column "Science For You" which was published in seven different countries in several languages. Over 100 newspapers carried the column.

Brown did a 13-week national PBC television program in 1949. It was a 30-minute program, one of the first live coast-to-coast broadcasts of the era.

In 1951 Easter vacation, Brown was asked to perform a 15 minute program on Tesla for the World's Micron Convention in New York City. Betty was his assistant and stood on the top plate of the coil with sparks coming from her fingers. The Life Magazine photographer made photos of the stunt and a full color page photo was then published in September 1951 Life Magazine.

Returning to North Carolina and going back to school assembly shows, he began developing new shows. Over the years there were seven shows; electricity, static electricity, logors beams, sound, general science and physics demonstrations.

In 1954 he moved his family to Fontana North Carolina for the summer. He was editor and photographer of the Fontana Village News. All the family had various jobs for that summer.

In 1965 Brown was asked to perform Tesla Coil for President Lyndon B. Johnson. The IPA Convention was in Washington and Brown was part of the entertainment's there as well.

In 1970 he wrote a song, "Welfare Cadillac".

In 1980 "That's Incredible" TV show had a fifteen minute portion of Tesla. They filmed for three days at the Brown's home and in front of a live audience in Black Mountain. Betty flew to LA with him for the live program appearances.

Brown retired from his travels to schools in 1982. Science Circus still made appearance by other gentlemen who used the equipment.

In retirement years Brown worked on a book about coalmines, it is still unpublished. His later years were spent with his wife Mary who cared for him as he developed Parkinson's and Alzheimer's and he passed away in December 1989.

Science Show Is Fun For Brown, Audience

When a newspaper man goes into the show business it is news.

That is just what Robert J. Brown, former Citizen reporter and photographer has done with his "Bob Brown and His Science Circus" show. Started as a hobby because of a natural interest in things scientific, the show was given first for friends and then for small groups.

Someone with an eye for good showmanship saw it and encouraged Brown to take it on the road. That is just what he did and in a matter of months he has played in 20 states and Canada with his "Science Circus."

This tour was climaxed in 1949 with a 13-week engagement on American Broadcasting Company's Television network from Chicago.

In this television series Brown gave a show every week and what's more each show was entirely different. Just imagine having a nice routine set up for a show lasting an hour or an hour and a half and then being suddenly called upon to expand the show not into quintuplets but "thirteen-tuplets." But Brown did it and successfully, too.

One reason was that he had fine cooperation from various college proffessors assorted commercial scientific firms and manufacturers, the American Medical Association and the atomic energy boys. It looked like everybody was trying to get into the act and practically did.

It was a lot of fun, Brown admits, and he is toying with the idea of taking another crack at TV this year. Just now he is home with his family at 20 Vandalia Avenue, but never get the idea that he is just resting. He has been bouncing around to various parts of Western North Carolina, playing before various schools and groups and having a wonderful time with it. The strange part of it all is that he has no difficulty in going back to the same school for a repeat performance. The interest factor in his show is quite high and so is the comedy, and that seems to be a combination that is hard to beat.

For those who have not seen the show, a little information on how it operates may be of interest. Brown uses no theatrical tricks or stage dressing to get his effects. When the audience files in the stage is covered with a strange collection of black and white cabinets filled with miscellaneous materials.

Conspicuous at first glance is a arge cylinder wound with fine insulated wire, topped by a bright metal ball. Around the base of this cylinder is a helical coil of copper wire about the size of a lead pencil. This gadget is what Brown uses for the climax of his show. It is capable, with the aid of a clutter of transformers, of producing something like 400,000 volts.

As every high school physics student knows a voltage like that is capable of producing all sorts of queer phenomena and this coil and its associated apparatus does just that. Brown usually introduces it by having the room darkened and turning on the electricity with a foot switch. A spectacular lavender spider-web of sparks sizzles from the metal ball atop the coil. It crackles and hisses and fills the air with the sharp smell of ozone.

When the lights are turned back on the coil is still there, as drab and harmless looking as it was before the display. The only thing that is really changed is the audience. Keyed to a high pitch of excitement by the miniature bolts of man-made lightning, the audience is filled with a feeling of suspense as Brown goes through a series of demonstrations of the various kinds of vibrations and how they work, because the audience knows that sooner or later he will come back to that terrible gadget that shoots lightning bolts.

He does this in the climax scene, of course, using a girl or boy from the audience to demonstrate how it is capable of lighting electric light bulbs without wire connection, of making even burnt-out fluorescent tubes blaze into life.

Imagine what happens to the audience when he clamps a broad band of copper about the arm of his volunteer assistant and then hooks it to the metal ball on the big coil with a heavy copper wire.

Will the girl who has volunteered to help him be burned to a crisp? That is what the audience is thinking and this reporter has a sneaking notion that sometimes the girl is thinking the same thing.

Of course there are a lot of other gadgets in the show, including a Geiger counter which detects radioactive substances, and a lot of tricky materials like bouncing putty, which bounces like a rubber ball, stretches like molasses candy and breaks like a piece of glass. Another is a rod of lucite twisted in a knot that conducts light as if through a hose.

LAVENDER FIRE BLAZES from the metal ball atop the huge coil and the two burned out fluorescent tubes glow brightly in the hands of Miss Betty Wilson, Biltmore High School senior, as Robert J. Brown presses his foot on the floor switch. Miss Wilson is connected by wire with the coil with a large copper band about her left arm, but feels no sensation from the potential of more than 400,000 volts put out by the transformer and coil. One purpose of "Bob Brown's Science Circus" is to stimulate interest among elementary and high school students in science and the possibilities it offers for new explorations.

Brown has a gift for wrapping his whole show in comedy. He plays the role of an absent-minded professor who is a little on the dumb side but as the show clicks along the audience begins to wonder who is really dumb. To step up the entertainment quality he has a series of magic tricks that he slips in so the audience gets in something of a fog trying to figure which is a trick and which is a demonstration of science.

Brown explains this after he has mystified his audience with the electric light bulb that floats in the air, a fan changes itself from a silken masterpiece to a tattered relic and back again in an instant, and a piece of rope that insists on joining itself back together no matter how many times it is cut apart.

The peak of the comedy comes when he gives a volunteer assistant from the audience a big breath of helium gas from a cylinder. The gas has the property of affecting the vocal cords in such a way that the most resonant voice is changed in a flash to something that would make Donald Duck blush with shame. But the audience screams with laughter and that in showmanship is always the right answer.

SCIENCE CIRCUS (Two Volumes) by Bob Brown. Fleet Publishing Co., New York, N. Y., Volume 1, 253 pages, $4.50; Volume 2, 286 pages, $5.95.

Bob Brown of Asheville, author of the nationally syndicated column Science for You, has written two volumes in sequence that provide ideal experiments for the science classroom or home.

Brown, a student and teacher of science who has lectured in nearly every state, provides his narrative in a clear manner through earlier discipline as a newspaper man and his scientific mind.

Demonstrations in both novels are based on scientific laws without the cumbersome equations found in technical books and journals.

Brown is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and has spent 15 years writing for such newspapers as the Louisville Courier - Journal, Denver Post and Knoxville News-Sentinel. His column appears in The Raleigh Times.

The whole family can enjoy the experiments which utilize light bulbs, playing cards, pots and pans, baking soda, ping pong balls, needles and dry ice and other such items.

Bob Brown, Miss Black To Perform Before President

Asheville science writer and lecture - demonstrator Bob Brown, and his assistant, Miss Barbara Black, have been invited to perform before President Lyndon B. Johnson and other persons in Washington Saturday, Aug. 7.

JUL 11 1965

Miss Black and Brown have been asked specifically to demonstrate an unusual effect in which Miss Black stands on a million-volt coil and electricity surging up her body sets fire to a wooden paddle in her hand.

A-CITIZEN

Brown believes that no other woman in the world has ever performed the trick.

The coil was invented by Nikola Tesla, an electrical engineer and inventor who was born in Austria but later came to the United States. It was Tesla's polyphase alternating current system that made long distance transmission of electricity possible.

The coil kicks up regular household current voltage to a range of 800,000 to 1.2 million volts, with an 800,000 cycles per second spark emanating from aluminum foil wrapped around the handle of the paddle.

Miss Black stands on an aluminum plate. Brown explained that the current, being of such high frequency, does not course through her surface, thus presenting no danger to her, but making a spectacular stunt.

Brown said the stunt had, until last year, been exclusive with Dr. Erwin Moon of the Moody Institute of Science in California.

The occasion for the demonstration will be a party at the Drew Pearson farm, 15 miles from Washington. The President will be the guest of honor.

Two other acts will work with Brown and Miss Black to round out the program, Brown said.

The program is sponsored by the International Platform Association, which will be in convention in Washington that week. Drew Pearson, a syndicated newspaper columnist (his column appears in The Times), is a member and former president of the organization.

Miss Black and Brown will also appear on the Saturday afternoon program of the IPA in Sheraton Park Hotel.

Brown is a member of the board of directors of IPA.

He has written two books, Science Circus and Science Circus 2, and his column, "Science for You," is published in more than 100 newspapers in the United States, Canada, Switzerland and Italy.

He Failed As A Hillbilly, Took Up Science Now Famous The World Over For Shows

Asheville Man Began Career In Childhood

By JIM AB HURLEY

From toying with a set of dry cell batteries when he was five years old, Bob Brown has built a science exhibition billed as the leading assembly show in the world.

Brown, who lives at 20 Vandalia St., Asheville, now performs five different shows in all Southeastern states, has written two books, which are used as supplementary science texts and has won the recommendation of two thirds of the state departments of education.

A native of Rockwood, Tenn., he professes to be a Tennessee hillbilly who "is a failure as a hillbilly because I can't play the guitar."

When he was five years old, his father brought home a telegraph instrument. Young Bob extracted two dry cell batteries from the home telephone and began his interest in science and electricity.

He majored in physics at the University of Cincinnati and after graduation worked at the unlikely job of newspaper reporter and photographer for 15 years in Knoxville, Louisville, Chattanooga, Denver and Asheville. He has never worked as a physicist.

In 1945 he began his first assembly program which has now grown into five complete programs involving electricity, laser beams and general science and physics demonstrations.

His electrical show, probably his most popular, has delighted thousands of grammar and high school students throughout the South. It includes standing girls' hair on end by means of static electricity and producing fire sparks from outstretched fingertips with high frequency voltage.

Recently Brown syndicated a column, which will be carried in The Asheville News. Called "Science For You," the column has received endorsements from educators and is growing in circulation.

His two books, "Science Circus" volumns 1 and 2, have received recommendations from two thirds of the state departments of education and are employed as supplementary science texts in many schools.

The ABC Television Network hired Brown and his family to produce a 13-week program called "Science Circus" which originated from Chicago in 1950. This was in the early days of television when the network had only 13 affiliated stations.

Brown employs magic in some of his demonstrations. A member of the International Brotherhood of Magicians, Brown says the tricks can be ethically exposed if they embody one or more principles of science.

He belongs to an impressive number of science and educational associations including the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the National Science Teachers Association, the North Carolina Academy of Science, the National Education Association and the International Platform Association.

Several organizations and individuals have written endorsements of his work, including David Dietz, science editor of the Scripps-Howard newspaper chain and Thomas J. Pike, schools representatives of the Copley chain.

Brown's wife, Mary, is employed at WLOS-TV. The couple has two children, Bob, Jr. who is a research scientist with Boeing Aircraft in Seattle and a daughter, Mrs. Walter Yow of Meridian, Miss.

Presently, Brown is on a tour of neighboring states with one of his programs.

WEARING THIMBLES TO AVOID BURNS, BETTY BROWN SMILES AS A MILLION VOLTS OF ELECTRICITY SPRAY FROM HER UPRAISED FINGERS

A YOUNG LADY IMPERSONATES AN ELECTRODE

In North Carolina 15-year-old Betty Brown gets a real charge out of helping her showman father

The crackling personality exhibited by Betty Brown (above) is the result of electricity—four or five hundred times as much as the 2,000 volts used to operate Sing Sing's electric chair. Betty's father, Bob Brown, makes his living by entertaining schoolchildren with demonstrations of high voltage electricity, and when Betty is not in school herself she helps him out.

The high point of the act comes when Brown stands obedient Betty on a metal plate, wets her bare feet and turns on the juice. With a frightening roar a million volts climb through her body and stream out of her upraised finger tips. The secret of survival: very high frequency electricity which, when used correctly, is not only harmless but, as Betty says, "feels fine."

Bob Brown

Many cities have banned paid assembly programs but make exceptions for Brown because his programs augment the students' education. The exception to cities making this allowance is Asheville, his place of residence.

A Shocking Demonstration

CHILDREN, now grown up may remember this exhibition in Bob Brown's electrical show. His daughter, now grown up, too, demonstrated the human body as a transformer. She is shown standing atop a million-volt Tesla transformer, allowing the electricity to flow up her body and stream in purple sparks from her fingertips. The former Miss Betty Brown, she is Mrs. Walter Yow of Meridian, Miss.

Human Firebrand

First published details on construction of a Tesla coil used by Bob Brown in his "Science Circus" are contained in his new book, "Science Treasurers." It is very powerful, yet tame enough to allow a girl to stand on it for the current to flow through her body and set fire to a board on her hand. Barbara Black, Brown's assistant, demonstrates the experiment. She also helps Brown in his writing and stage demonstrations. The book also contains many of the "great simple experiments' that Brown says can be repeated with common objects found around the house such as string and glass jars.

Brown Has Four Books Now Being Published

NOV 30 1968
A - CITIZEN

Aspiring young writers still hoping to find publishers who will plunk down advance royalties on their aging manuscripts would probably say that Bob Brown of Asheville has hit the jackpot.

Although a long way down the road as a successful author, Brown has just totaled up recent accomplishments in the junior science field and found that four books under his by-line are being simultaneously.

Even for the wizard of "Science Circus," this is somewhat extraordinary, and will require some explaining.

Fleet Publishing Corporation of New York published in November his book "Science Treasurers — Let's Repeat the Great Experiments," and it is now on sale at book stores.

Two editions of the same book, both to be called "Science and You," are also being published by Hobbs, Dorman & Co. — one as a hard cover and the other as a paperback.

And now Cornerstone Library, a division of Simon & Schuster, has just signed a contract to publish a paperback version of "Science Treasures." Norman Monath, president of that company, said the paperback should be available at newsstands sometime in late 1969, according to Brown.

Brown, who presents his "Science Circus" on school assembly programs throughout the country and has won the praise of educators as well as the children, had three books to his credit before the current outbreak of publication.

His earlier books, "Science Circus" and "Science Circus No. 2," and one already out called "Science and You," are books of experiments used in his show which can be performed at home.

"Science Treasures" is Brown's first book containing biographical sketches. It outlines the lives of 19 great scientists, and presents experiments they performed and which Brown says can be repeated by students in the upper and junior high school grades.

One scientist, a Transylvania County research chemist, called the latest book a work of interest to adults as well as children.

Brown is well-known for his stage demonstrations in science, and one program includes spectacular stunts in high voltage electricity. He uses a Tesla coil in which a student stands, allowing the current to flow through the body and crackle in purple fire from the fingertips.

Until "Science Treasures" was written, there was no book to tell budding scientists how this particular Tesla coil is made. It contains a description and schematic diagram along with directions for making a simpler model of the coil.

Brown, who lives at 20 Vandalia Ave., is also the author of a syndicated column, "Science For You," which appears in 86 newspapers.

BOB TERRELL

AUG 10 1972

The Magic Man

In his home on Vandalia Avenue in West Asheville, Bob Brown, for the 24th time, is preparing a show of science that borders on magic for school children everywhere.

Brown is a wizard who turns simple things like wine and water and toothpicks and rubber bands into scientific things and experiments.

BOB TERRELL

He can totally charm a class of school kids and does so all over the country—except in his own home town. The Asheville City Schools do not permit Brown to conduct his show in their classrooms.

Brown and his assistant for 14 years, Barbara Black, are readying a show on electricity and magnetism which they will begin presenting in schools as soon as the school year begins.

Before school is out next spring, Brown will have played more than 350 schools.

"We do a completely different show each year," Brown said. "Next year's show is already in the planning stage. It will be on vibrations, mostly sound and light. We have another show built around the laser beam, another featuring a sight switch."

New Book Is Out

Brown's home is literally covered with scientific experiments. In a special room upstairs are several experiments and tricks in the making. Downstairs in the basement are stored those magical things that Brown has already perfected.

Even the kitchen of the Browns home is not safe from science. There are times that Mrs. Brown has to move experiments aside in order to get eggs in the pan.

It takes about a month and a half for Brown and Mrs. Black to get a show ready for the road. In each of their new shows they incorporate some of the new things science has developed.

The sight switch, for example, was a Brown exclusive for awhile. Presented one by its developers, Brown used the sight switch several months before anyone else in his field. It is a machine designed for space travel in which various things can be turned on and off simply by looking at their switches.

Last week, Brown's fourth book on simple scientific experiments and tricks was published by Fleet Press Corporation of New York. It is entitled "Science Circus No. 3" and contains more than 150 different tricks.

In the book, available now in local bookstores, Brown tells how to make a ghost whistle, a smoke ring cannon, an air car and a wave machine. He tells how to make a cloud in a jug, how to drive a soda straw through a potato, and how to make your teeth light up in a dark room.

Simple Experiments

Most of his experiments are simple and are designed to use ordinary materials that may be found around any house: things like matches or water glasses, soda straws, rubber bands, old phonograph records.

You'd be amazed at the interesting things one can do with such things.

School children aren't alone in enjoying Brown's scientific tricks. Some of them make terrific party stunts and grown-ups get as much kick out of them as kids.

Brown works a lot with electricity. He can make a flourescent bulb light up in your hands, or he can make your hair stand on end.

Packing a show into boxes that will fit in the trunk and rear seat of Brown's automobile is one of his better tricks.

"We drive up to a school," said Barbara Black, "and the kids who know us are always glad to see us. They enjoy the show so much. But the thing that amazes them most of all is how much stuff we get in the car. We pull up to a school and unpack the entire show from the back of the car and when the kids come into the auditorium, the whole stage is full. They can't understand it."

After 24 years in the business, Brown has learned about all the tricks—and they are numberless.

"There is no end to them," he said. "There are more simple scientific things that you can do with ordinary materials than you can shake a stick at.

"For example, I've been doing a daily newspaper column for 14 years, syndicated in about 100 newspapers, and each column is one experiment or trick. In the 14 years I have never had to repeat a column, and there is no end of them in sight. I think I could go on indefinitely without running out of material."

Science 'Wizard' Hunting For Apprentice Sorcerers

By TOM OLIVER
Citizen-Times Staff Writer

In the 28 years since Bob Brown began his "Science Circus" some of the children thrilled by his shows have became scientists and science teachers.

A C-T

The same 28 years have aged the traveling electrical magician. He says he is getting too old for his work and that he plans to retire.

"I'm 68 years old and for two days not too long ago I was almost dead. My health still isn't the best and I'm not as steady as I use to be," Brown said, extending an arm to display an almost imperceptible quiver in his hand.

Robert J. "Bob" Brown of 20 Vandalia Ave. in West Asheville is a scientist. He writes a syndicated science column for newspapers and has several science textbooks in use in elementary schools.

He says he plans to continue writing and experimenting, but he wants to quit traveling with his "Science Circus."

He performs in more than 300 schools a year, sometimes putting on two or three shows at different schools in a day, Brown said.

"This is my last year. I am booked solid, two or three schools a day, from mid-August through May, five days a week. If I can't find the right people, I'll continue for a couple more years, and then I don't know what," Brown said.

"The right people" is two people to take over most of his traveling circuit and some new territory, Brown explained.

The job requirements are a knowledge of science, some performing ability, a love of children and a willingness to travel, Brown said.

But the rewards of the work are not just financial, Brown said.

"A man who saw my show as a boy became interested in science and eventually became a scientist himself. He wrote to me and told me he had named his son after me. That kind of honor makes you feel good," Brown said.

JUN 20 1976

In 1947, before Brown began his "Science Circus" career, he taught a little girl who lived in his neighborhood how to hypnotize her friends. The youngsters taught each other hypnotism and began a flurry of interest.

Brown also counts his early demonstrations of Silly Putty—a clay-like putty that bounces, stretches and breaks—and his demonstrations of one of the first lasers among his favorite memories.

But his pride is a million-volt Tesla coil, a transformer that bounces crackling, blue bolts of electricity through the air.

"I believe I am the only person who is using one of these in public. I plan to keep it, but I have another one I would sell to someone interested in carrying the show on after I quit," Brown said.

Standing a young girl on a platform over his Frankenstein-type gadget, Brown ran a million volts through her, igniting a piece of wood she was holding.

The girl smiled, said it didn't hurt and noted that she plans to be a magician and is learning from Brown.

"There's nothing to worry about," Brown said. And then he added, his showmanship sparkling, "if everything works right."

That showmanship got Brown his own show on television in 1949, when there were only 13 television stations in the United States and few television sets.

The show, however, was not properly produced, Brown said. An elaborate set was used in front of a live audience. The show was too expensive, and was soon halted.

But some people who saw the show took the idea, used a small, inexpensive studio to film it and launched the "Mr. Wizard" program that remained on television for several years in the 1950's, Brown said.

A Farewell For Milo Hopper

By BILL MOORE
Citizen-Times Staff Writer

The Wizard came into the office the other day.

His eyes kept filling with tears and his voice broke as he talked.

"I've never had any trouble writing coherently before," he said, "But I just can't seem to get this to come out right. Will you help me?"

BILL MOORE

The Wizard is Bob Brown, the originator of the daily Science For You feature that runs in a number of newspapers across the country.

For years he has been educating people while he entertained them. For years he has been amazing and delighting youngsters with his lectures and demonstrations in schools all over the Southeast.

In the five years that I've worked here in Asheville, I've came to know Bob pretty well.

He is a kindly, soft-spoken, man who is always pleasant, always considerate of other people.

We share an interest in opera and have gone on a couple of jaunts to the Brevard Music Center together.

I never before have seen him as emotionally moved as he was the other day, though.

"My best friend just died," he said.

"He had been helping me with a chore at my house when he fell and injured his shoulder. I was driving him to the hospital for an X-ray. He died two blocks from the hospital.

Bob choked, his face a mask of grief and frustration.

"I've been trying to write something about — it, but it won't work. Here, see what you can do with it for me."

This is what Bob had written:

"Milo Hopper, a very special neighbor, is dead.

"He and his wife, Norma, and my wife, Mary, and I have lived as neighbors and almost as one family for many years.

"A narrow band of grass separated our homes, but like other things, only brought us closer. It gave us something in common; a cool place to sit and talk.

"He and Norma shared with Mary a garden plot behind our homes. Milo always prepared the the flower beds where Norma and Mary, most working on their knees, have grown exceptional flowers.

Conan Doyle, in one of the Sherlock Holmes stories, said that dogs reflect the personalities of their owners.

The Hopper's little white dog, Pogo, is a wonderful neighbor; gentlemanly, harmless, intelligent — just like his owners.

"And the Hoppers have loved our cat, Yellow Bell.

"Whenever one family went away on vacation, the feeding of their pets always fell to the other family.

And whenever the Hoppers great-grandchildren came to visit the Hopper house, they always ran across the grass to exchange hugs and greeting with the Browns.

"Just a few hours before his death, Milo came over to help me move a heavy box.

"He was always looking for things to do to help other people. I tried, but I couldn't find enough things to do help him to stay even at all.

And now Milo Hopper, a very special neighbor, is dead.

What Bob Brown wrote didn't need any help from me.

I wish I had known Milo Hopper.

And I'm very glad I know Bob Brown.

July 15 is the deadline for applications for the American Enka freshman scholarships to Asheville-Biltmore College, according to Dr. Glenn L. Bushey, president of the college.

Each year the Company awards two new scholarships, amounting to $200 apiece, to children of Enka employees who have been selected on the basis of scholarship, need, character, citizenship, and leadership. The selections are made by a committee appointed by the college president. Holders of freshman scholarships may continue them during their sophomore year provided they maintain the proper quality of work.

Dr. Bushey also has announced that Glenn Norvell, winner of one of the 1950-51 freshman scholarships, will keep his scholarship as a sophomore next year. The other 1950-51 winner, James Connor, has left to go into the Armed Services. Glenn is the son of Roger Norvell of Spool Spinning; James is the son of Fairlee S. Connor, Coning.

Alfred Hughes, son of Cliff Hughes of the Machine Shop, and Rose Marie Brown, daughter of Joe H. Brown of the Financial Accounting Section, are graduating this month on scholarships which they kept both years at Asheville-Biltmore.

Applications, together with transcripts of high school credits and three letters of recommendation, should be mailed or delivered before July 15 to Dr. Bushey at the college.

VIRGIL F. BROWN TAKEN BY DEATH

West Asheville Loses Valuable Citizen After Illness

Virgil F. Brown, 66, of 100 Brevard road, secretary of the West Asheville Merchants Association for the past five years and widely known resident of this section, died last night at 9:30 o'clock at an Asheville hospital after an illness of two weeks.

He is survived by his widow; six daughters, Mrs. Hugh Sowers, Mrs. A. C. Myers, Mrs. H. L. Penland, Mrs. Ray Steelman, Mrs. Ralph James, and Miss Ida Brown, and one son Fred Brown, a student at the University of Tennessee.

Funeral services will be held at the Calvary Baptist church tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock with the Rev. J. B. Grice, pastor of the church, officiating. Burial will be in Green Hill Cemetery.

FUNERAL IS HELD FOR V.F. BROWN

West Asheville Man Was Leader In Business, Church Movements

Funeral rites for Virgil F. Brown, 66, well known business man, church worker and civic leader of West Asheville, who died at a local hospital Wednesday night at 9:30 o'clock, were conducted at Calvary Baptist church yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The Rev. J. B. Grice, pastor, officiated, with the Rev. L. W. Colson, Oteen post chaplain, assisting. Interment was in Green Hill cemetery where a brief service was conducted by members of West Asheville Lodge No. 665, A. F., and A. M., of which Mr. Brown was a member.

Active pallbearers were Mayor Gallatin Roberts, R. M. Wells, Frank Bishop, M. W. Hamrick, H. B. Posey and G. D. Morgan. Honorary pallbearers were directors of the West Asheville Merchants association. All member concerns of the association closed from 2 until 3 o'clock.

Mr. Brown, who was formerly clerk of the Jackson county superior court, later a Southern railway employee and Asheville grocery store operator, was one of the chief organizers and promoters of the West Asheville Merchants association. He was secretary of the organization for four years, having been reelected several months ago. An active church and Sunday school worker, he was rarely absent from Calvary Baptist church where he had an attendance record of only about five Sundays absent from Sunday school during the past 15 years. For about twelve years he had been secretary of the Men's Bible Class at the church. He had been a member of West Asheville Lodge, 665, A. F. and A. M., for several years.

Mr. Brown is survived by his widow, Mrs. Dora Brown, of 100 Brevard road; six daughters, Mrs. Hugh Bowers, Mrs. C. C. Myers, Mrs. H. L. Penland, Mrs. Ray Steelman, and Miss Ida Brown, all of Asheville, and Mrs. Ralph James, of Hendersonville; one son, Fred Brown, a student at the University of Tenn.; five sisters, including Miss Sara Brown, Miss Lily Brown and Mrs. L. J. Moses, of Asheville. He was an uncle of Dr. Fred Brown, pastor of the First Baptist church, of Knoxville, Tenn.

Southern Bell Installs 25,000th Phone Here

Asheville Citizen 10-25-50

Asheville's 25,000th telephone was installed yesterday by Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company in the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Bryan, 43 Morris Avenue, West Asheville.

The installation marked a gain of nearly 5,000 telephones in the past three years, J. Lovell Smith, Southern Bell district manager, said.

Smith said there were 20,331 telephones in Asheville in September of 1947. He pointed out that Asheville had 110 telephones in 1900 and had jumped to 10,029 telephones in 1917. At the start of World War II the Asheville exchange listed 12,676 telephones and 14,988 at the close of the war.

Asheville has had a telephone exchange since 1898 at which time the Proctor Telephone Company was incorporated under the ownership of O. G. Munson, Mrs. Charity Rust Craig, H. P. Proctor and Mrs. W. S. Proctor Southern Bell established an exchange about 1899 under the name of Asheville Telephone Company It was located on West Pack Square over Law's China Store. John Weaver was manager.

In 1903, Southern Bell purchased the Proctor firm and changed the name of the merged units to the Asheville Telephone and Telegraph Company. The exchange was located at 11 Patton Avenue on the third floor over Redwood's general merchandise store and Noland's undertaking establishment. The exchange had approximately 117 working stations.

The exchange building at Walnut Street and Lexington Avenue was completed November 11, 1906, and the system was changed from crank type telephones to common battery.

At that time there were six long distance circuits coming into Asheville. Today there are more than 300 long distance circuits terminating in Asheville and more than 5,500 long distances call originating here each day.

Early in 1948, the telephone company moved into its present building at 24 O. Henry Avenue and changed from manual operators to the dial system. At that time there were 21,403 telephones in Asheville.

Through Johnny Sain's Generosity

Autographed Ball (By Yankees) Cherished Item Of Local Fan

Baseballs autographed by the New York Yankees of 1961—not the commercial balls that names are stamped on, but the real McCoys, signed individually by each member of the team—are rare items.

They are so rare, in fact, that one would command a high price on an open market among fans. Yet an Asheville woman has one in her possession today, compliments of several people in various walks of life who combined their efforts to provide this woman with an hour of happiness.

She is Mrs. Katherine Phillips Bryson of West Asheville, a rabid fan of the Yankees even though she has never seen them play except on TV. Not only that, but Mrs. Bryson probably never will see the Yankees in person for she lives in an iron lung, a victim of polio that struck her almost 12 years ago and has been with her ever since.

She lives at 78 Fairfax St. with her mother, Mrs. Edna Phillips, and two of her four children, daughter Langdon and son David.

Now, occupying a place of prominence in the bright little room, is the baseball autographed by the Yankees.

How it got there makes a good story, a story of combined effort of the sprawling world of Baseball and the Baptist Church, and a story of generosity on the part of a Yankee pitching coach.

Two summers ago, Dr. Morris Ashcraft, a professor of Theology at Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary of Kansas City, met Mrs. Bryson when he served as interim pastor at Grace Baptist Church in West Asheville.

Dr. Ashcraft visited Mrs. Bryson frequently and as they talked of baseball he learned of her love for the Yankees.

Recently, Dr. Ashcraft, a native of Malvern, Arkansas, paid a visit to his native state. He bumped into an old friend, J. P. Friend, a baseball statistician of Blytheville, Arkansas.

Telling J. P. of Mrs. Bryson, Dr. Ashcraft wondered if the statistician had any contacts in the baseball world through which he could obtain a baseball for Mrs. Bryson autographed by the Yankees.

The scene then switched to Walnut Ridge, Ark., a week later and Friend, there on business, looked up his old friend Johnny Sain, a Yankee pitching coach.

He related the story of Mrs. Bryson to Sain and asked the coach if he knew where he could get an autographed ball. "Sure," said Johnny, opening a cupboard, "I have two left. Help yourself.'"

"I know it was a treasured item," Friend said later, "but it was typical of John."

"Golly," said the courageous woman, "hold it close and let me read the names."

They were all there—all her favorites.

And now the baseball the Yankees signed is the most cherished item in Mrs. Bryson's room.

The Punch Line

Katherine Bryson laughed and looked at him in the mirror over her iron lung as Bobby Richardson, center, finished a funny story about a sports car he swapped for a jeep. Also enjoying the laugh were (L-R): Albert Long, Raymond Berry and Dr. Calvin Thielman. (Staff Photo)

April Not A Cruel Month While Kindness Still Lives

By JAY HENSLEY
Citizen Staff Writer

A famous poet called it the "cruelest month," and a Montreat minister started looking for something to give April a new look.

He found Katherine Bryson, about the brightest ray of sunshine that ever graced an iron lung, and mixed her happiness with the robust laughter of a roomful of famous athletes.

Actually it all came about quite accidentally, but the heroes of the sports world had wanted to meet Mrs. Bryson from the moment they heard about her.

Bobby Richardson, Raymond Berry and Albert Long crowded into her home at 78 Fairfax Ave. in West Asheville Sunday afternoon.

Bill Wade had stopped off Saturday to meet the woman who is quite famous herself as a sports fan.

They had heard about her when Calvin Thielman, Presbyterian minister at Montreat, mentioned Mrs. Bryson in a sermon.

Dr. Thielman brought Richardson, former second baseman of the New York Yankees; Berry, "the man of a million moves;" and Long, who lettered at the University of North Carolina in four sports, to see Mrs. Bryson Sunday.

The impression they left was that Mrs. Bryson was doing them a favor by permitting the visit.

" 'April is the cruelest month,' says T. S. Eliot — and who in America today would deny it," Dr. Thielman noted.

"But in the midst of the national bedlam, there are always signs of hope — and one of them was witnessed here today," he said.

Dr. Thielman, chaplain at Montreat - Anderson College where a sports rally sponsored by the Fellowship of Christian Athletes was held this past weekend, had preached a sermon in which he told of Mrs. Bryson's faith and life.

A member of the FCA heard the sermon and passed the story on to Richardson, former star of the New York Yankees.

The story also mentioned Mrs. Bryson's ardent love of the Yankees. She was stricken with paralytic poliomyelitis Aug. 26, 1950, and has spent her life since that time in an iron lung.

In 1962, through the efforts of many persons from various walks in life, Mrs. Bryson was presented a baseball autographed by the Yankees.

Sunday she had in her room—where the walls are decorated with pictures of baseball greats and other men of fame — Dr. Thielman and his team of celebrities.

The talk was of sports, with Mrs. Bryson asking questions or making comments. "When the Yankees don't make it I don't watch — I'm a sore loser," Mrs. Bryson said.

"Say, listen — I brought you a baseball," Richardson said. He autographed the ball and gave her a copy of the book he has just published.

Berry, former offensive end for the Baltimore Colts and now assistant coach of the Dallas Cowboys, had his arm in a sling and took some kidding about the fall during a basketball game in which he dislocated his shoulder.

"I want a picture of you," Mrs. Bryson told him. "You broke my heart many times — I mean when the Redskins were playing."

Each of the men took turns sitting in the chair behind Mrs. Bryson so she could look at them in the mirror and them at her when they talked.

Long, now regional representative of FCA from Raleigh, lettered in football, baseball, basketball and track at UNC — the first three in one year.

They were on their way back to their homes and had stopped for the visit en route to the airport. They seemed reluctant to leave.

Katherine Bryson and the four men laughed and talked and the poem by T. S. Eliot didn't seem to fit.

Not, at least, on Sunday afternoon, April 7, in the house at 78 Fairfax Ave.

Mother's Day Has Special Meaning

By JAY HENSLEY
Citizen-Times Staff Writer

The pretty brunette smiled into the mirror and everybody in the room brightened a little bit. The conversation was of Mother's Day.

The brunette is a mother. She smiled into the mirror again.

"Four," she said. "Two sons and two daughters."

She wore her lipstick just right, and when she smiled her eyes sparkled. A bright ornament held her hair, in an upsweep arrangement, at the top of her head.

The interview was pointless as far as the story was concerned. It was all in the poem.

"Tears," she said, "are for happiness." She said that only in the poem, though.

In the interview she talked of folk songs, baseball and a visitor from South Africa.

Mrs. Katherine P. Bryson spoke also of the thing that happened to her almost 15 years ago which narrowed her existence to the confines of an iron cylinder.

And of the world that she watches—reflected in the mirror mounted above her head on the iron lung in which she lives.

The thing that happened to Mrs. Bryson was paralytic poliomyelitis. She was stricken on Aug. 26, 1950, and before another day was more than a few hours old she became a mother for the fourth time.

"I was sick for three days before I knew it was polio," Mrs. Bryson said. "I was pregnant and about ready for delivery."

But when a physician was consulted he immediately recognized symptoms of something more than the ordeal of impending childbirth. Mrs. Bryson was taken to Asheville Orthopedic Hospital about 6 p. m. and her youngest daughter was born there about 2 a. m. the next day.

4A Asheville Citizen-Times
Sunday, May 9, 1965

Miss Karen Louise Bryson has the distinction of being the only child ever delivered in that hospital.

Immediately after the birth the mother was placed in an iron lung. And until this day she remains in the machine—a giant "lung" which encases her body up to her neck and does her breathing for her.

When the children were young the family made the room in which the iron lung is located at 78 Fairfax Ave. its gathering place.

"For meals, for devotionals and prayers," Mrs. Bryson said. "My oldest daughter is married now, and my oldest son is in college."

But when company comes, the living room is bypassed. Everybody goes to the room with the pretty brunette and the grotesque iron lung.

"I have a great deal of company," Mrs. Bryson said. She doesn't know how the word gets around, but people she has never heard of come to the house to see how she is getting along.

"At least 2,000 persons come each year. They come from as far away as Japan, Germany, Sweden, England and South Africa," she said.

Mrs. Bryson said the average life of an iron lung patient is two years, which would make her of considerable interest to medical people. But most of her visitors are just "people."

The man from South Africa, a representative of the Gideons, left her a handful of carved figures of animals of his native land. And a deer skin—or the skin of a South African relative of that animal.

Paralyzed from the neck down, Mrs. Bryson would be little less immobilized even if she didn't have to depend on the lung for breathing.

Her mother, Mrs. Edna Phillips, is with her always—which is still another story that would be fitting for this occasion. She cares for Mrs. Bryson day and night.

And poetry is not Mrs. Bryson's only interest, although she composes many poems, dictating the lines for the typewriter operated by Mrs. Phillips.

She has written folk songs, and at least one highly entertaining monologue. But her interests range all the way from sports to politics to religion.

One wall of her room is decorated with photographs of baseball teams and other greats of the sports world. The Washington Redskins, the Bombers, Charlie (Choo Choo) Justice, Asheville's Hall of Fame football player, and several members of the New York Yankees.

There are also pictures of national leaders, in politics and military affairs.

The pretty brunette looks at the world in a mirror and puts the reflection in a poem.

But if the world's all wrong there's nothing to gain by crying.

"Tears," she said, "are for happiness."

Tears Are For Happiness

When the sunset of life is near and the sky is red
I turn back the pages of time and count each golden hour
As I recall the faded past, old memories seem so real
Time cannot erase those happy days so long ago
And then I remember tears are for happiness.

When the springtime of life was here and the sky was blue
Each golden minute seemed an eternity, as the pages from the book of life turned so slowly by.
I'll never forget how I loved to live, have pretty clothes, go to parties, and date the boy next door
And then I remember tears are for happiness.

When the summertime of life was here and the sky was sometimes gray,
God gave me a heavy cross that I might serve Him best,
To me He gave a loving Mother to help me bear the pain
To me He gave a toiling Father to help me bear the burden
To me He gave two handsome Sons to help me see the way
To me He gave two beautiful Daughters to help me through each day.
O Heavenly Father, I thank Thee for being so richly blessed
And then I remember tears are for happiness.

Mrs. Katherine Bryson Dies After 20 Years In Iron Lung

Mrs. Katherine Phillips Bryson, 44, of 78 Fairfax Ave. died Sunday morning in an Asheville hospital after a long illness.

A native of Henderson County, she had lived in an iron lung since she was stricken with polio Aug. 26, 1950, only a few hours before the birth of her fourth child.

Shortly afterwards, she was paralyzed from the neck down. Since then, unable to live outside her respirator, she has been under the constant care of her mother, Mrs. Edna W. Phillips of the home.

An avid sports fan, many sports figures had come to visit her. Her walls at home were covered with pictures of baseball and football stars. Among her prized possessions was a hand-signed New York Yankee baseball.

Mrs. Bryson had said she averaged at least 2,000 visitors a year from as far away as Japan, Germany, Sweden, England and South Africa. She had said the average life of an iron lung patient is two years, which would make her of considerable interest to medical people. Most of her visitors, though, were just "people," she had said.

Surviving in addition to the mother are the father, H. E. Phillips of Asheville; two daughters, Mrs. A. J. McClure of Asheville and Mrs. James R. Cole Jr. of Weaverville; two sons, Phillip of Shelby and David Bryson of Lookout Mountain, Tenn.; a sister, Mrs. Charles M. Starnes of Lincolnton; and four grandchildren.

Services will be held at 2 p. m. Tuesday in Grace Baptist Church.

The Revs. C. R. Pierce Jr. and Calvin Thielman will officiate. Burial will be in Green Hills Cemetery.

Pallbearers will be Ralph Bull, Allan Demaree, W. E. Helms, W. G. Hutchinson, W. E. King, Ross May, H. D. Murphy, C. C. McCurry, Riley Smith and Bert Starnes.

Honorary pallbearers will be members of the West Asheville Lions Club, Johnson School District Lions Club and Buncombe County Rescue Squad; also Dr. O. D. MacAlpine, Dr. H. E. Hinman, Dr. Richard Nailling, Dr. Curtis Crump, Dr. A. M. Moser and Harry Stover.

The family will receive friends from 7 to 9 p. m. Monday at Groce Funeral Home where the body will remain until placed in the church 30 minutes prior to the services.

Polio Victim Was An Example To All

By JAY HENSLEY
Citizen Staff Writer

There is a lesson for the entire nation in the life of a West Asheville woman who lived 20 years in an iron lung, a young Presbyterian preacher who once served as envoy for a President, said here Tuesday.

The Rev. Calvin Thielman of Montreat spoke at a memorial service for Mrs. Kathrine Phillips Bryson, who was buried Tuesday in Green Hills Cemetery.

Thielman, like missionaries from as far away as Japan and South Africa, came to know Mrs. Bryson after she was stricken with polio in the late summer of 1950.

"She had a motive for living that could help those who glue their days together with dope and booze," Thielman told a gathering in the house at 78 Fairfax Ave., where Mrs. Bryson had lived with her mother and children throughout the years of her ordeal with paralysis.

Her faith in God, her mother, her children and the people from all over the world who sought the source of her courage made up her motive for living, Thielman said.

A close friend of former President Johnson and a native of Texas himself, Thielman is pastor of Montreat Presbyterian Church and chaplain at Montreat-Anderson College.

Among his most vivid memories are the reactions of people he has known who went to see Kathrine Bryson with the resolve to help her if they could and came away feeling that she had helped them instead.

Thielman was in Biloxi, Miss., preaching at a statewide Presbyterian youth convention and cut his visit short when Mrs. Bryson died Sunday morning in an Asheville hospital.

Thielman managed to get here in time to hold the service at the West Asheville home of Mrs. Bryson's mother, Mrs. W. Phillips, who had taken care of the invalid daughter for 20 years.

"Katherine Bryson's story has a lesson for our nation, in this day and time, and for our young people," he said.

He recalled one day in April of 1968 when ex-New York Yankee Bobby Richardson, Raymond Berry and former UNC star Albert Long went with him to visit Mrs. Bryson at 78 Fairfax Ave.

"You broke my heart many times — I mean when the Redskins were playing," Mrs. Bryson told Berry, a former offensive end for the Baltimore Colts.

An avid sports fan, it was because he was playing for the Colts and she was rooting for the Redskins.

Berry, his eyes moist, had told Mrs. Bryson, "...I know this is hard for you . . . But one day God is going to give you a brand new body."

Her mother and her four children, all married now, listened as Thielman talked Tuesday in the crowded living room at the Bryson home.

"Katherine Bryson was a remarkable woman. For 20 years, one of the longest periods on record, she lived in an iron lung, yet she radiated joy and courage and hope . . . every breath was a struggle. All she would have had to do to die at any time was simply to quit trying to live. Yet she battled away for life until her tired, strained heart failed her."

Thielman talked also of the doctors and nurses and others who stood by Mrs. Bryson and assisted her where they could in her struggle to live.

"She never yielded to the sour, ill temper of fear and hate," he said, and those are words that the nurses who knew her over the years have also used.

"What kept her going all of these years?" Thielman put into words the motive for living of Katherine Bryson:

"Well, first of all, there was her faith in God, the giver of life. The incredible love of a mother who cared for her every need. Four children she loved and delighted to see grow and kept her spirit happy," he said, and spoke too, of her church and her pastor and other friends.

"Then, too," he said, "Katherine was a sort of evangelist. She was convinced that she could show the love of Christ to others by the way she bore up under her trouble," Thielman said.

Her message to the nation, he said, was that life is a gift from God, and it is worth living.

Why And How A Settlement Was Made Where Asheville Now Stands

By COL. PAUL A. ROCKWELL

A query was made in the column of the Asheville Citizen-Times several weeks ago as to why a settlement was first made where Asheville now stands, and how the settlement, which started without the initial advantage of waterways, trading paths, or roads, ever progressed to its present importance.

Some answer to the question may be found in the History of Buncombe County, by the late Dr. Forster A. Sondley, and in a few other publications, such as the Asheville Directory and Buncombe County Business Gazeteer for 1883-1884, which gives in the back of the volume a brief history of Asheville. However, very little has been published so far concerning the origin of the present city of Asheville and its earliest days.

Perhaps the best authority alive today on the subject is Albert S. McLean of Asheville, secretary of the Western North Carolina Historical Association, a lineal descendant of several of the pioneer settlers in what is now Buncombe County. McLean has from early childhood studied avidly the history of all this Western North Carolina mountain region, listened to the traditions and stories handed down by older generations, and is a veritable treasure-house of information about the swaddling cloth days of Buncombe and surrounding counties. Unfortunately, he has not as yet written down what he knows.

Until a few years after the War of the Revolution, the present Buncombe County belonged without dispute to the Cherokee Indians, part of whose home lands it had been for centuries. The rights of the Cherokees had been acknowledged more than once by sacred treaties, but they made the error of siding with the English during the War, and therefore were ill considered by the Americans. And all the more so, because the Americans were ceaselessly and insatiably greedy for more and more lands, and pushed relentlessly towards the West. To the mind of the immigrants, the Cherokee had no rights, and the only good Indian was a dead Indian.

The first settlers who came into our Buncombe County of today settled in the wide and fertile Swannanoa Valley, about where Bee Tree Creek empties into the Swannanoa River. They came across the mountains from the east, via Morganton, already a thriving frontier outpost. Some of these first families were the Davidsons, Alexanders and Pattons. The Indians did not like the intruders, who disturbed their ancient hunting grounds. Samuel Davidson and others were killed, but the tide of white immigration continued, more and more cabins were built, more and more land was cleared and cultivated.

It was early realized that the Swannanoa Valley could not be a suitable site for an important community, as the only possible route into and out of the valley ran east and west, and communication with the outside country was slow and difficult. John Burton, farmer, miller, hardy frontiersman —and now called the Father of Asheville—perhaps was one of the first to survey the near-by territory and to decide that the most feasible location for a promising settlement and courthouse town was on the plateau north of the confluence of the French Broad and Swannanoa Rivers. This plateau was the logical crossing for future roads, coming from all directions, north, south, east, and west. Another sound reason for planning a town on the right side of the French Broad rather than the left, was the fact that the river offered good protection against Cherokee forayers. The Indians usually came up the Pigeon River from their villages in East Tennessee, and slipping through Hominy Gap raided the new Buncombe settlers.

Buncombe County was created January 14, 1792, the act stating among other things that "the western part of Burke and Rutherford Counties are very inconvenient to court-houses in the said counties, which renders the attendance of jurors and witnesses very bothersome and expensive, and almost impossible in winter season."

The first County Court met on April 16, 1792, at the residence of Colonel William Davidson near the old "Gum Spring" on the south bank of the Swannanoa River, on what is now the Vanderbilt Estate and across the river from the Southern Railway freight station. One of the chief concerns of the court was the laying off and building of roads.

There was much discussion as to where the courthouse should be located. Some settlers wanted it on the south side of the Swannanoa River. An equally vociferous group insisted it be north of the river. Finally, William Morrison, a disinterested outsider, was asked to decide the argument and he opted for the north side. It is said that an early site considered was on an elevation near the present intersection of Vanderbilt Road and Busbee Road in Biltmore Forest, about where the residence of Dr. W. P. Herbert stands.

Meanwhile, John Burton was busy planning to get into the real estate business. He marked out in 1793 forty-two lots, lying on both sides of the future Biltmore Avenue and Broadway, and on July 7, 1794, obtained from the State of North Carolina a grant of land which included the lots. According to McLean, Burton was an energetic and enterprising man, a natural Chamber of Commerce booster, and he pushed the sale of his lots and development of his "town" vigorously. Soon almost all the lots were sold.

Many stories have been handed down about John Burton, says McLean. It is related of him that he was very fond of the rough and potent whisky distilled in abundance throughout the mountain country, and sometimes he drank to excess. He formed the habit of at times going home drunk, and of picking up the garments of his wife piece by piece and throwing them in the fire. Mrs. Burton finally rebelled, and one day, when her husband started pitching her clothing into the flames, she gathered up his coats, shirts, trousers, etc., and added them to the blaze. Thenceforth, tradition says, Burton burned no more of his wife's clothes. Whether or not he stopped drinking is not known. Probably not.

John Burton's wife was Jane (or Jean) Forster, sister of his neighbor William Forster. She was born in Ireland April 13, 1746, a daughter of William Forrester (as the name was spelled in the "Old Country"), who brought her to America at an early age. Th family lived for a time in Virginia, before moving on to North Carolina, where Jane married. She is said to have borne several children to John Burton, and lived to a ripe old age, dying January 28, 1824. This mountain climate made for longevity, even among the hard-working pioneers. Several families in Western North Carolina claim to descend from John and Jane Burton. A street in Asheville bears Burton's name today, the only honor or recognition ever given the city founder to date.

Burton's new settlement was first called Morris or Morristown, one tradition says in honor of William Morrison and out of gratitude for his decision to put the Buncombe County courthouse on the north side of the Swannanoa River. I have a copy of the Lucas map of North Carolina, published in Baltimore, 1812, which shows "Morris," the only place in the State west of "Rutherford" and Morganton. I have located no earlier map of North Carolina which indicates any English-speaking community in all the vast territory between Morganton and Knoxville, Tenn.

The name of Morristown turned out to be unpopular from the start, and within a very few years records called the village Asheville or Asheville, in honor of Samual Ashe, then governor of North Carolina. Ashe was a distinguished Revolutionary War hero, greatly liked and admired throughout the state and a member of a prominent Eastern North Carolina family. On Jan. 27, 1798, Burton's village was incorporated as Asheville, and there never has been question of another name since.

Probably the first buildings erected in Morris-Morristown-Asheville other than the crude log cabins — usually single room affairs with a stone and mud chimney at one end, packed earth for a floor, no windows and a sole door—hastily and painfully constructed by the early pioneers, were taverns. These establishments catered chiefly to the drovers who almost immediately began to arrive in steadily increasing numbers driving horses, cattle, hogs turkeys, sometimes even ducks, by hundreds and thousands from the farms of Tennessee and Kentucky to the eager markets in Columbia, Augusta, Charleston and elsewhere in South Carolina and Georgia. The taverns were the centers of news and excitement. They accommodated travelers over-night frequently in bare rooms with only the earthern floor for a bed, served coarse but bountiful food for the drovers and others, provided pens and feed for livestock and poultry, dispensed spirituous drinks to the thirsty and the weary.

During the first years of Morris-Morristown-Asheville, constant patrols (on horseback?) were maintained some six miles beyond the settlement, along the edge of the mountains south and east of the French Broad River, to guard against surprise Indian attacks. Sometimes Cherokees slipped through, and massacred people on isolated farms, but there is no relation of a determined onslaught against the courthouse village. I knew an old man years ago on the North Fork of the Swannanoa, who well remembered his grandmother, who at the age of 16 had been tomahawked by an Indian, scalped, and left for dead. The loss of her hair had not prevented her from finding a husband and having many children.

The orders of the first Buncombe County court for laying off and building roads were carried out steadily and efficiently, and the more the means of transportation and travel were improved, the more traffic came into Asheville. Some travelers remained, others remembered the place, told about it, or returned to settle. Stage coach lines connecting with Salisbury, Greenville, S. C., Greeneville, Tenn., and points beyond were inaugurated, improved, increased in number. The fame of Asheville's scenery and health-giving climate spread far and wide. The Confederate War of the 1860s halted for some years the slow but constant growth of the town, but the coming of the railroads from east, west, and south in the 1880s was all that was necessary for the steady development of Asheville into the modern and busy city it is today.

PRIOR TO THE ERECTION of the Jackson Building on southeast Pack Square in 1924, the site of Asheville's first skyscraper looked like this. It was also at one time the home of W. O. Wolfe's monument and stone-cutting shop which was described so vividly in Tom Wolfe's "Look Homeward, Angel." Note the W. O. Wolfe sign on the building at the extreme left of the picture. The Jackson Building was erected by L. B. Jackson, Asheville real estate dealer.

John Burton: Pioneer Town Planner, Real Estate Agent, Grain Producer

If any man can be called the "Father of Asheville," it is John Burton, who laid out the town and sold lots to Buncombe County's early citizens.

In general, the veil of the passing years has been pulled over John Burton's life in this community. But enough is known of him to class him as a pioneer town planner, real estate agent, and grain producer.

Four years before the town of Asheville was incorporated by the Legislature, Burton obtained from the state a grant for 200 acres of land in Buncombe County.

It was July 7, 1794, when the grant was issued. The boundaries of the "Town Tract," as it was then called, were roughly these: Orange and Clayton Streets on the north, Charlotte and Valley Streets through the David Millard Junior High School property on the east, Carroll Avenue to the intersection of Coxe and Banks Avenues on the south, and Coxe Avenue through Pritchard Park to the intersection of Orange Street and Merrimon Avenue on the west.

At about the same time Burton also obtained a State Grant for another tract of land of the same size as the "Town Tract" and lying immediately north of that tract. This was known as the "Gillihan Tract."

Even before the grants were issued, John Burton was at work. He laid out a portion of the "Town Tract" in 42 lots, each containing one-half of an acre, except two at the souther end. The tracts were laid out for the town of Morristown, as Asheville was known for a number of years before its incorporation under the present name on January 27, 1798.

The distinction of buying the first lot in Asheville belongs to Thomas Burton, who bought lot No. 4 for "twenty shillings" on July 28, 1794. (The value of a shilling at that time is not known, since it varied from one section of the country to another. The English shilling today is worth about 20 cents.) This lot is occupied by the Earle Hotel on Biltmore Avenue.

A list of John Burton's real estate customers reads like a roll call of pioneer families in Buncombe County. The lots were bought by individuals like Thomas Foster, Zebulon and Bedent Baird, Samuel Luck, Colonel William Davidson, Patton & Erwin, to mention only a few.

But John Burton was more than a real estate agent. He engaged in one of the most needed occupations of his day—operating a grist mill for grain production. In January, 1793, the governing body of Buncombe County ordered "that John Burton have liberty to build a grist mill on his own land, on a branch of the French Broad River, near Nathan Smith's below the mouth of the Swannanoa." This mill was built on Glenn's Creek a short distance above its mouth.

In his book, "Asheville and Buncombe County," published in 1922, Dr. F. A. Sondley says that it was "undoubtedly the first grist mill in Buncombe County, all the grinding of the settlers having been done previous to its erection at the Old Fort."

Burton later sold the mill to Zebulon and Bedent Baird, brothers who came to North Carolina from New Jersey in the latter part of the 18th century. Scotsmen by birth, these two men were the first merchants in Buncombe County.. Zebulon Baird was the grandfather of Zebulon Baird Vance, Civil War Governor of North Carolina.

After the sale of the mill Burton moved to Gap Creek on the road from Asheville to Fairview where, according to Sondley, he met with business misfortune and lost all his property.

There the story of Burton's life must end. The date of his death, like the date of his birth, are unknown. By a strange historical quirk, the life span of his wife, Jean Forster Burton, was recorded. She was born April 13, 1746, and died January 28, 1824.

Thus John Burton lived his allotted time and left as his legacy a little mountain community that has developed through the years into North Carolina's seventh largest city. He was truly the first builder of Asheville.

WHO'S WHO AND WHY IN ASHEVILLE

Ash. Cit. Tim 12/10/33

OTTO BUSECK, general manager of Middlemount Gardens, has devoted most of his life to the culture of flowers. He was born December 21, 1868, at Frankfort on the Main, Germany.

After completing his public school education, Mr. Buseck served three years as an apprentice to a florist and then spent two years at a horticultural college in Germany—at Geisenheim, on the Rhine, where famous wines are made.

Following completion of his college course he traveled over Europe seeking further knowledge of his chosen profession. On March 1 of nevt year he will have been following it 50 years.

It was in 1893 that Mr. Buseck came to the United States, landing at New York. Shortly thereafter he went to Omaha, Nebr., where he had charge of the public gardens.

Mr. Buseck's work next called him to Memphis, Tenn.—two years after going to Omaha—where he laid out Raleigh Springs, a resort. In 1897 he returned to New York to lay out the gardens of Jacob H. Shiff, one of the Kuhn, Loeb partners and later planned the gardens of H. Kemp, at that time the world's sugar "king."

A year after reaching New York Mr. Buseck became superintendent of public parks at Paterson, N. J., where he remained a year and a half. Leaving there, he returned to Memphis, to enter business as a florist, where he remained until 1909.

Upon leaving Memphis, Mr. Buseck went to Hawthorne, N. Y., where he grew cut flowers for the wholesale market for nearly 10 years. He came to Asheville in 1918 and was employed by Karl von Ruck for one year. He then became private gardener for Mrs. Charles A. Webb, laying out and landscaping her grounds. In 1921 Middlemount Gardens was begun, and has grown to where it now has the largest greenhouses in North Carolina. The gardens' Asheville store is located on Haywood street.

Middlemount Gardens ships flowers over most of the South—as far away as Jacksonville, Memphis and Birmingham. At present it is specializing in carnations.

OTTO BUSECK

On January 2, 1909, Mr. Buseck married Miss Emily Nathan, at Memphis.

He is a member of the B. P. O. E., is a Scottish Rite Mason, a Shriner, member of the Southeastern Florists association, the National Florists association and the Florists Telegraph Delivery association. He was one of the recipients of the German Red Cross, given to a few Asheville persons who participated in raising a monument in Riverside cemetery to German sailors who died here while interned during the World war.

Mr. and Mrs. Buseck live on Sulphur Springs road.

Nothing pleases him better than to have visitors at the gardens located on Sulphur Springs road about six miles west of Asheville. He especially likes to have the school teachers bring their pupils for a tour of the greenhouses. It is part of the children's education that should not be neglected, he believes.

BUSECK SUFFERS STROKE AT HOME, DIES SUDDENLY

Manager Of Middlemount Gardens Was Well Known In His Profession.

Ash. Times 3/22/34

Otto Buseck, one of the outstanding florists of the south and a prominent resident of this section, died about 10 o'clock this morning at his home on the Sulphur Springs road. Death was sudden and followed an illness of a half hour.

Mr. Buseck, who was general manager of Middlemount Gardens, visited the garden's greenhouse about 8 o'clock this morning. At this time, employes there said he was apparently in good health.

He returned to his home, located nearby, for a late breakfast. Mr. Buseck ate breakfast about 9:15 and about 15 minutes later complained of feeling ill. He died about 10 o'clock.

Cerebral Hemorrhage

Dr. G. D. Gardner, who was summoned, said death was the result of a stroke of paralysis caused by a cerebral hemorrhage.

Workers associated with Mr. Buseck at the greenhouse said he had been in apparently good health recently and was very active in the direction of the concern.

Mr. Buseck is survived by his widow.

Funeral services will not be conducted in Asheville. The body will be taken to Cincinnati, Ohio, leaving on the 6:40 train tonight, where services will be held tomorrow, it was announced.

Born in Frankfort on the Main, Germany, in 1868, Mr. Buseck devoted most of his life to the culture of flowers.

Mr. Buseck came to Asheville in 1918 and was employed for one year by Dr. Karl von Ruck. He then became private gardener for Mrs. Charles A. Webb, laying out and landscaping the grounds of her home.

In 1921 Middlemount Gardens was begun, and has grown to where it now has the largest greenhouses in North Carolina. The firm maintains an uptown shop on Haywood street.

Mr. Buseck was a member of the B. P. O. Elks lodge, was a Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner, a member of the Southeastern Florists association, the National Florists association and the Florists Telegraphic Delivery association. He was one of the recipients of the German Red Cross, given to a few Asheville persons who participated in raising a monument in Riverside cemetery to German sailors who died near here while interned during the World War.

200 FLORISTS OF 8 STATES COMING HERE

Southeastern Association to Open Annual Session On Monday.

Two hundred florists from North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana will meet in Asheville Monday morning at Kenilworth Inn when a two-day convention of the Southeastern Florist's association opens.

Numbers of the delegates had begun to arrive at the inn Saturday night while still more were expected during the day Sunday. The initial session of the meeting will start Monday at 9 o'clock and will be opened by a call to order by John Wolf, Savannah, president of the association.

This will be followed by invocation and addresses of welcome will be made by F. Roger Miller, manager of the Asheville Chamber of Commerce, and by Mayor John H. Cathey. The response will be made by C. Lesley Whipp, Jacksonville, vice-president of the association.

Among the most important business expected to be brought before the florists at their convention will be the inclusion of the state of Virginia in the association. Following the business session Monday a short trip over the city will be staged for the visitors and a banquet will be held at Kenilworth Inn Monday night.

The president's reception and grand ball will follow the banquet, it is announced.

Tuesday morning will be occupied by business sessions again and in the afternoon a tea and organ recital will be held at Grove Park Inn by Fred L. Seely to honor the convention members. Otto Buseck, together with H. E. Eates, field secretary of the association, and numbers of Asheville florists were at work Saturday night decoration Kenilworth Inn for the convention.

OTTO BUSECK'S BODY IS TAKEN TO CINCINNATI

Prominent Florist Dies Suddenly At His Home Here

Otto Buseck, 65, a leading florist of the south and a prominent resident of this section, died suddenly yesterday morning about 10 o'clock at his home on the Sulphur Springs road. Death resulted from a stroke of paralysis caused by a cerebral hemorrhage, Dr. G. D. Gardner, physician, said.

Mr. Buseck, general manager of Middlemount Gardens, visited the garden's greenhouse, adjacent to his home, about 8 o'clock and returned home about 9 o'clock, apparently in good health, employes said.

About 15 minutes after eating breakfast he complained of feeling ill, dying about 10 o'clock.

Taken To Ohio

The body of the noted florist was taken by train to Cincinnati, Ohio, at 6:40 o'clock last night, accompanied by his widow, his only immediate survivor, and by his nephew, Hans Nussbaum.

Simple rites will be performed when the body is cremated in the Ohio city today. Relatives there are in charge of arrangements.

The sudden death of Mr. Buseck was a great shock to his friends and business associates, for he apparently had been in good health recently and was active in the management of the florist firm, employes said.

Mr. Buseck came to Asheville in 1918 to work for Dr. Karl Von Ruck for a year. He then became private gardener for Mrs. Charles A. Webb, laying out and landscaping the grounds of her home.

Middlemount Gardens were started in 1921 under Mr. Buseck's direction. It now has the largest greenhouses in North Carolina. Wholesale business is handled at the greenhouses on Sulphur Springs road, while a retail shop is operated on Haywood street in the city.

Professionally Mr. Buseck was a member of the Southeastern Florists association, the National Florists association, and the Florists Telegraphic Delivery association. He was also a member of the B. P. O. Elks lodge, and a Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner. He was one of the recipients of the German Red Cross, given to a few Asheville persons who participated in raising a monument in Riverside cemetery to German sailors who died while interned near here during the World war.

Born in Frankfort on the Main, Germany, in 1868, Mr. Buseck developed an interest in the culture of flowers. Mr. Buseck came to the United States in 1893, landing at New York. He went to Omaha, Neb., where he took charge of the public gardens. He was then called to Memphis, Tenn., to lay out a resort, Raleigh Springs.

Returned To New York

In 1897, he returned to New York to lay out the gardens of Jacob H. Schiff, one of the partners of Kuhn, Loeb and Company. Then he planned the gardens of B. Kemp, sugar "king."

A year later, Mr. Buseck became superintendent of public parks at Patterson, N. J., serving in this position for 18 months. He then returned to Memphis to become a commercial florist.

Leaving Memphis in 1909, Mr. Buseck went to Hawthorne, N. Y.,

Buncombe Veterans Fought In Famous Civil War Battles

One man who charged up Cemetery Ridge with the Stars and Bars in Pickett's immortal and fatal rush at Gettysburg and half a dozen who took part in Bragg's "barren victory" at Chickamauga, are among the 37 living Confederate veterans in Buncombe county. Another was present when Lee surrendered at Appomattox, and still another remembers clearly the fall of Fort Sumter, the opening gun of the war, although he did not enter the service until several weeks later.

The veterans living today are a modest lot for the most part. Those who were old enough to get into the grey ranks in '61 are extremely few and a majority of the men who attend the meetings of Zeb Vance camp at the courthouse nowadays say quite frankly: "We were just boys in the regiments recruited toward the end; we guarded prisoners and watched mountain passes, some of us were not even armed. But we had to sleep in the snow sometimes, and live in the mud, go hungry and ragged, so we feel that we did our part."

Average Age Is 98

Consider for a moment the troops recruited in '61 were from 21 to 35 years old. Possibly the average was 25. That would make the average age of the survivors today 98 and the youngest, recruited at 20, would be 93. The young men who went into the late regiments in '63 and '64 were often as young as sixteen—from eight to 15 years younger than the troops of the first great Confederate victories, so by far the greater number of veterans living today are of these late regiments.

But even among the living veterans who were but lads in their teens when Sumter fell, are men who fought with musket and bayonet, dashed on horseback with naked sabre, or swabbed and pointed cannon, in the really great battles of the war.

Gettysburg, the real death knell of the grey hopes and Murfreesboro or Stone's River, one of the bloodiest battles of the war, the hundred bloody skirmishes in Sherman's path of devastation; the victory of Bragg at Chickamauga and the battle of Kennesaw Mountain, are memories that stir the blood in the now feeble limbs of about a dozen of the veterans in the county today.

Among them are:

W. W. Pace, now 93 years old, had not yet enlisted when the Confederates fired on Fort Sumter, but he was enrolled in Company B, First South Carolina artillery a few weeks thereafter and spent the next two years as a member of the fort's "rebel" garrison. He was there when the Union fleet finally battered them into submission in April '63, and from Charleston, his outfit set out across the Carolinas and Georgia. He was in front of Sherman when that Yankee general swept through Georgia and he was captured finally at the big battle of Averysboro, S. C. He was wounded during the seige of Sumter by the Yankees. He now lives with his son J. B. Pace near Arden.

Was At Chickamauga

J. M. Case, who lives at Emma, and his brother, W. H. Case, now dead, went out with Company D, 60th North Carolina and were transferred to the famous sixtieth regiment. They saw service in Virginia and fought at both Chickamauga and Kennesaw Mountain and were in the thick of 38 days of service fighting around Atlanta.

John M. Houck of Marion, a member of Zeb Vance camp, was captured at Gettysburg after being wounded. He was also in the fighting around Richmond and faced Grant's troops in the wilderness around Spottsylvania.

Spencer Freeman, who served in the 25th North Carolina, is another veteran of the battles of Chickamauga and Kennesaw Mountain.

Captain W. Elbert Weaver of Weaverville and his negro body servant, Gilbert Baird, went out with the 29th North Carolina and campaigned over six states, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida and both the Carolinas. Captain Weaver still carries a bullet from Chickamauga. He saw Sherman burn Atlanta and took part in the last battle of the war, an engagement at Mansfield, La., some days after Lee's surrender at Appomattox.

Colonel R. L. Fitzpatrick, present commander of Zeb Vance camp, was for awhile a member of Morgan's famous raiders, but didn't cross the Ohio on the brilliant raid into Kentucky and Indiana. He enlisted with 31st Tennessee, but for most of the war was in Captain Owen's detachment of scouts, doing reconnoitering for Vaughn's brigade.

F. B. Bishop, 89, of Avery's creek, was present at Lee's surrender to Grant and was wounded "at the big battle of Bull Gap." His father and older brother also wore the grey.

S. Pettigrew, of Mountain street, says he was in "plenty of battles" in the Carolinas, and was wounded seven times. He is now 97 years old.

Wounded In Pickett's Charge

Levi J. Walker, 93 years old now, was the fifth color bearer shot down in the Confederate charge up Cemetery Ridge. He lost his left leg and spent the remainder of the war a prisoner at David's Island, N. Y. He has lived in Asheville since 1920, and his home is at 260 Forest Hill drive. He was in Company B of the 13th North Carolina.

The Rev. T. F. Glenn, who has been in the ministry 75 years, was chaplain of a regiment of General Joe Wheeler's command called the Third Confederate. It was made up of companies from Georgia, Tennessee, and the Carolinas. He was at the battle of Murfreesboro in Tennessee and was in front of Sherman at Atlanta.

Lee Williams of Old Fort was in Company B of the 9th North Carolina artillery battalion. He took part in the battle of Forth Fisher and saw service in Virginia.

Ephraim Byerley, who lives in West Asheville, had two fingers shot off at the battle of Hatcher's Gap. He served in Company A, 31st North Carolina.

J. J. Stephenson, who was in Company C, 69th North Carolina, was in the battle of Bull's Gap and saw service in Tennessee.

R. T. Underwood, Chestnut street, now 87 years old, served Capt M H. Love's company of Col. W. H. Thomas' Legion, which included 400 Cherokee Indians. The unit was made up largely of young boys and Underwood's job was to guard Yankee prisoners and the passes in the Great Smoky mountains. He and his comrades saw no fighting but endured great hardships in the last winter of the war. He brought many prisoners back to Asheville.

Joyce, I found those two pictures. It shows the old Maney store that first started out and my Mother had a Dress Shop she rented and I had forgotten on the new side Mr and Mrs Hart (Pat's) Mother and Father rented out for a store but they didn't stay their long.

I.m sending these so you can get a copy (but these are very special memories fo me so please don't loose them as I have no Neg's)

Where the store is, that my oldest Son's head at the bottom he was only 3yrs old. The one with Aunt Ida has Steve in it. This was made on our front porch at 104 Millbrook Road. The cutist thing about Aunt Ida she said Mrs Carolyn you know I'm not that Black when she seen this picture, it seems only yesteday that I showed her this picture and she was talking to me. She never knew her legacy would live on.

She told me that one day the colored would be mixed with the whites and she said remember it's not us old ones it's gonna be these younger ones coming up that is gonna create all of that. Her Dad was a slave and he was 105 when he died. Bessie and her Son got killed in a head on crash, they died instanly.

George H. Carrell D.M.D.

b. in Louisville, KY .....in 1902
d. in Asheville, NC.....in 1976

graduated from Eastern Ky. State Teachers College
(now Eastern University) in Richmond KY with a B.S. in Biology.....also earned a Masters Degree there.....

Graduated from The University of Louisville with a D.M.D. in Dentistry

Came to Asheville in the early twenties with his Uncle who owned a Carpet Company in Louisville.....layed the carpets in The George Vanderbuilt Hotel and in The Skyland Hotel in Hendersonville, NC. He fell in love with the mountains and after he got his education (a little late in his life) he decided to practise in Asheville and ended up in West Asheville. When World War II broke out the Federal Gov't. drafted several dentists from Asheville and as it turned out it was a great time to be starting a practise. He worked six days a week and Sunday Mornings for several years.

He started his Practise in August, 1940.

Miss Nell Turbyfill.....Miss Ruth Hodges.....Mrs. Evelyn Pounders Steelman (m. Frank Steelman).....Miss Augusta M. Jayne.....Miss Mary Beth Starnes (m. Luke Atkinson later) and Mrs. Mattie G. Morgan were some of the young women who were employed by Dr. Carrell.

Dr. Carrell and Augusta Jayne were married in April 28, 1945 .....31 years until Dr. Carrell's death in April 13, 1976.

Dr. Carrell practised 35 years.

Mrs. Mattie G. Morgan worked for Dr. Carrell 23 years.

The Carrell's had two children.....George Thomas Carrell b. August 28, 1947 and Ruth Anne Carrell (Mrs. Edward Louis Bowen) b. May 26, 1958.

There are two grandsons.....Matthew Thomas Carrell and George Edward Bowen.

Some time in the mid-fifties Dr. Carrell moved his office to The E. B. Roberts Building on Vermont Avenue.

In mentioning that they drafted some dentists from Asheville reminds me of quite a few of our patients went to work at Oak Ridge, TN at the Plant that was built over there early int the war, or before, and we had appointments with lots of them on Saturday Nights. I think they got off early on Saturdays but it was quite a drive to Ashevile from there (in those days) and it was nothing for us to work until 9 or 10 o'clock on Saturday Nights to accomodate them. George was a "Work-aholic" and enjoyed every minute of it. I never saw anything like him. He never sent out statements unless someone es-plicitly ask for one and MOST people paid him. When I first knew him he was such a believer in people getting an education that he would lend money to a young person who just didn't have any other way to go to college. I know of at least eight people that he lent money to. Yes, they all paid him back! I don't expect you to use this but am just telling you what kind of person he was. He provided LOTS of free dentistry too. He never charged parents when he did work for a handicapped child. Some of them were so difficult to work on I was amazed that he could do it!

G. O. CARTER ENTERS THE RACE FOR MAYOR

IS THIRD WEST ASHEVILLE MAYORALTY CANDIDATE.

An Even Dozen Citizens Are Now Seeking Positions On the Board of Aldermen.

The entrance of G. D. Carter to the mayor's race added considerable interest to the West Asheville political situation yesterday, Mr. Carter's formal entry being made with Clerk J. N. Jarrett, of the West Asheville aldermanic board, by the candidate. With his entrance it was announced that a vigorous campaign will be waged in his behalf. He is the third candidate to ask that his name be placed on the ticket for mayor, Mayor A. L. Bright and J. L. Crook entering the race several days ago.

Mr. Carter has been mentioned as a probable candidate for some time past, and his entry was not altogether unexpected. Like Mr. Bright and Mr. Crook, he has been a resident of the town for the past several years, and the three men who are in the race for chief executive now are popular. Regardless of whether any other resident of the town asks for the position of mayor, it is regarded as a certainty that the fight for this position will be a hard one.

Mr. Carter's formal entry brings the number of candidates now in the race for municipal positions in West Asheville up to fifteen. Three of them are seeking the place of mayor, while an even dozen citizens of the community are asking for election to membership on the aldermanic board, which is made up of a resident of each of the four wards of the town and an alderman-at-large.

That each of the fifteen men in the race at the present time is determined to make a fight for the position which he seeks is indicated by the methods of campaigning, which are in vogue at the youthful town. Voters are being besieged to give their support to various candidates and many arguments are being put forth with a view to winning support for the men who have entered the race. The campaign, however, is free from personalities and the friends of the candidates are proceeding on the basis that every man who wants to run for office is entitled to enter and to ask for support. Every campaign along such lines as will leave no bitterness when the race is settled and the successful candidates are announced.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DEATH AT CROSSING

MRS. G. B. CARTER BADLY INJURED YESTERDAY MORNING

Struck by Passenger Train at Dangerous Crossing Near the Smith Bridge

Mrs. Garrett D. Carter, of West Asheville, had a narrow escape from death yesterday when struck by passenger train No. 101 at the crossing near Smith's bridge. Mrs. Carter was immediately taken to the Mission hospital, where her wounds were dressed by Dr. Hilliard. Examination showed that two ribs were broken, and that her head bore a cut about three inches long, while she was bruised painfully in various places. The injuries are not considered serious.

In walking towards town yesterday Mr. and Mrs. Carter attempted to cross the tracks of the Southern railway just after a freight had passed. It is alleged that the gates were not closed. On starting across the track, they saw that a passenger train was coming in an opposite direction. Mr. Carter jumped backwards, while Mrs. Carter, who was somewhat ahead of him, made a dash for safety to the other side. There are conflicting reports as to what part of the engine struck her, but she was knocked to the ground, but in falling was thrown to beyond the track and so escaped instant death. Mr. Carter did not see the accident as the train was between him and his wife.

Comfort For The Ill

"IN QUIET HOURS," Banner Press, Birmingham, $2.50.

Not far short of a hundred years ago, a new speck was added to the whirling myriad of specks that populate the earth. The new one was one number higher for the feminine side of the ledger in the 1874 census of Augusta, Ga., and its name was Frances Laurie Anderson. 9-23-62

Just one month more than 87 years later, Laurie joined the untold millions in whatever lies just past this life. But she left behind evidence of her passing journey. Asheville Citizen

How long the visible remnant of her life will be in touch with the remaining specks of life will be up to the whimsy of public fancy, and to the lasting worth of her efforts—whether that be much or little. But her little book of poems, "In Quiet Hours," is about to be released to public judgment.

At the time of her death, few called her "Miss Laurie" any more, but "Mrs. Carter," or just plain "Granny." And in spite of the slowing down of the brain's functions, she still was able to pen a few more poems to add to her life-long collection—and the publisher's editorial board judged them good enough to go in her book.

"Her book"—how that would have thrilled Granny! For she never knew that her poems were to be accepted for publication—only that a kind publisher made a bright day for her by writing to her that they were, in his opinion, "well worthy of preservation in book form," but that the publishing schedule was already full for that year.

Granny's life was full of many things besides poetry—reading, sewing, her children down to great-grandchildren, church work in more able-bodied days, an abiding love for the mountains—a love that was a magnet drawing her back again and again, from the girlhood vacations in Brevard to old-age retirement in Asheville, to rest in Green Hills Cemetery in West Asheville.

Several of the poems speak of her love for the hills of Western North Carolina, and though there is no date to it, one written years ago, entitled "Land o' My Heart," winds up calling this the "land of the sky," one of our trade-marks nowadays!

Her poems are—you might say—old-fashioned, not modern verse at all—and no wonder! Some were written as long ago as 1891, when she was just 17. But the style and metre are the same as when she was in her 80s; the same soul peeks through.

As her publisher, F. W. Helmbold of the Banner Press in Birmingham says, "After you've read her poems, you feel as though you've known Granny all her life!"

There is comfort there in the lines for the ill, the odd, the worried, the lonely. As a sweet little old lady, same vintage as Granny, said, "When I'm feeling sort of blue, I get out that little book to read, and it just sort of cheers me up." And Granny's old doctor in Winston-Salem wrote that he had had much comment from his patients who had read it in his waiting room where he had placed it.

The book they refer to is a little blue paperback booklet that Granny's family had printed in West Asheville for her birthday several years ago, and they provided her with a generous amount to give her family and friends. It is the genesis of the published book that is now coming out. "In Quiet Hours," will be available in several of the local book-stores. It is printed with a special type that the publisher had imported from Germany because he thought it suited Granny's book so well, and is on fine paper, with linen cover.

Granny was a poet, with the poet's desire to share that which came to her with the world. Perhaps she may.—GERRY KOONTZ.

N.C. - Authors - Carter, Mrs. Laurie A.

"Granny" Carter was born in 1874, just a hop away from the Civil War. Back then a library card was a cherished possession. One of her aunts would let Laurie have her card when she went away in the summer. That was pure heaven! In Augusta, Georgia! In summer!

Later when she married Mr. Carter, they spent many of their summers in Brevard, North Carolina. The Carters had the first car in Brevard, also the first phonograph and possibly the first radio. But gadgets and machines were not to Granny's liking.

Granny always wished for time to read and write poetry. In her later years, reading, a little hand sewing, and a little poetry writing were her life. She found rich meaning in every-day things, and her firm Presbyterian faith shines forth richly in the pages of her book.

Those who have read some of her poems find fresh hope and vision for their own lives. Granny's words carry the message of goodness and faith to those who will listen.

Buncombe Veterans Fought In Famous Civil War Battles

One man who charged up Cemetery Ridge with the Stars and Bars in Pickett's immortal and fatal rush at Gettysburg and half a dozen who took part in Bragg's "barren victory" at Chickamauga, are among the 37 living Confederate veterans in Buncombe county. Another was present when Lee surrendered at Appomattox, and still another remembers clearly the fall of Fort Sumter, the opening gun of the war, although he did not enter the service until several weeks later.

The veterans living today are a modest lot for the most part. Those who were old enough to get into the grey ranks in '61 are extremely few and a majority of the men who attend the meetings of Zeb Vance camp at the courthouse nowadays say quite frankly: "We were just boys in the regiments recruited toward the end; we guarded prisoners and watched mountain passes; some of us were not even armed. But we had to sleep in the snow sometimes, and live in the mud, go hungry and ragged, so we feel that we did our part."

Average Age Is 98

Consider for a moment the troops recruited in '61 were from 21 to 35 years old. Possibly the average was 25. That would make the average age of the survivors today 98—and the youngest, recruited at 20, would be 93. The young men who went into the late regiments in '63 and '64 were often as young as sixteen—from eight to 15 years younger than the troops of the first great Confederate victories, so by far the greater number of veterans living today are of these late regiments.

But even among the living veterans who were but lads in their teens when Sumter fell, are men who fought with musket and bayonet, dashed on horseback with naked sabre, or swabbed and pointed cannon, in the really great battles of the war.

Gettysburg, the real death knell of the grey hopes and Murfreesboro or Stone's River, one of the bloodiest battles of the war; the hundred bloody skirmishes in Sherman's path of devastation; the victory of Bragg at Chickamauga and the battle of Kennesaw Mountain are memories that stir the blood in the now feeble limbs of about a dozen of the veterans in the county today.

Among them are:

W. W. Pace, now 93 years old, had not yet enlisted when the Confederates fired on Fort Sumter, but he was enrolled in Company B, First South Carolina artillery a few weeks thereafter and spent the next two years as a member of the fort's "rebel" garrison. He was there when the Union fleet finally battered them into submission in April '63, and from Charleston, his outfit set out across the Carolinas and Georgia. He was in front of Sherman when that Yankee general swept through Georgia and he was captured finally at the big battle of Averysboro, S. C. He was wounded during the seige of Sumter by the Yankees. He now lives with his son J. B. Pace near Arden.

Was At Chickamauga

J. M. Case, who lives at Emma, and his brother, W. H. Case, now dead, went out with Company D, 60th North Carolina and were transferred to the famous sixtieth regiment. They saw service in Virginia and fought at both Chickamauga and Kennesaw Mountain and were in the thick of 38 days of service fighting around Atlanta.

John M. Houck of Marion, a member of Zeb Vance camp, was captured at Gettysburg after being wounded. He was also in the fighting around Richmond and faced Grant's troops in the wilderness around Spottsylvania.

Spencer Freeman, who served in the 25th North Carolina, is another veteran of the battles of Chickamauga and Kennesaw Mountain.

Captain W. Elbert Weaver of Weaverville and his negro body servant, Gilbert Baird, went out with the 29th North Carolina and campaigned over six states, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida and both the Carolinas. Captain Weaver still carries a bullet from Chickamauga. He saw Sherman burn Atlanta and took part in the last battle of the war, an engagement at Mansfield, La., some days after Lee's surrender at Appomattox.

Colonel R. L. Fitzpatrick, present commander of Zeb Vance camp, was for awhile a member of Morgan's famous raiders, but didn't cross the Ohio on the brilliant raid into Kentucky and Indiana. He enlisted with 31st Tennessee, but for most of the war was in Captain Owen's detachment of scouts, doing reconnoitering for Vaughn's brigade.

F. B. Bishop, 89, of Avery's creek, was present at Lee's surrender to Grant and was wounded "at the big battle of Bull Gap." His father and older brother also wore the grey.

S. Patterson, 87, Montford street, says he was in "plenty of battles" in the Carolinas, and was wounded seven times. He is now 97 years old.

Wounded In Pickett's Charge

Levi J. Walker, 93 years old now, was the fifth color bearer shot down in the Confederate charge up Cemetery Ridge. He lost his left leg and spent the remainder of the war a prisoner at David's Island, N. Y. He has lived in Asheville since 1920 and his home is at 260 Forest Hill drive. He was in Company B of the 13th North Carolina.

The Rev. T. F. Glenn, who has been in the ministry 75 years, was chaplain of a regiment of General Joe Wheeler's command called the Third Confederate. It was made up of companies from Georgia, Tennessee, and the Carolinas. He was at the battle of Murfreesboro in Tennessee and was in front of Sherman at Atlanta.

Lee Williams of Old Fort was in Company B of the 4th North Carolina artillery battalion. He took part in the battle of Forth Fisher and saw service in Virginia.

Ephraim Byerley, who lives in West Asheville, had two fingers shot off at the battle of Hatcher's Gap. He served in Company A, 21st North Carolina.

J. J. Stephenson, who was in Company C, 69th North Carolina, was in the battle of Bull's Gap and saw service in Tennessee.

R. T. Underwood, Chestnut street, now 87 years old, served Capt M H. Love's company of Col. W. H. Thomas' Legion, which included 400 Cherokee Indians. The unit was made up largely of young boys and Underwood's job was to guard Yankee prisoners and the passes in the Great Smoky mountains. He and his comrades saw no fighting but endured great hardships in the last winter of the war. He brought many prisoners back to Asheville.

P. B. Brown, living on the Brevard road, was in Company C, 16th South Carolina regiment.

MOORE ABOUT THE MOUNTAINS

Bill Moore

Bookmobile Driver - " I love books, I like people and I like to drive, so the job was tailor-made for me.

That's the way Miss Katherine Case, just rounding out 50 years of employment for the Asheville-Buncombe Library System, described the way she picked a career.

Miss Case went to work for the library system on July 1, 1939, as a Bookmobile driver. She retired from that job in July of 1977, but the retirement didn't exactly "take."

"I retired on a Friday and went back to work on a Tuesday," she said. "The only reason I retired was I got to be 65 years old.

She went back to the library as a part-time employee in the library's technical services branch, getting newly-acquired books ready to put on library shelves.

But she soon found herself back at the wheel of the Bookmobile, substituting whenever the regular driver was absent. She's still technically a part-time employee but she works long hours.

A native of Asheville, Katherine Case was graduated from Asheville High School and went to work for a local business. But it wasn't what she wanted to do.

"Then I heard that there was a job opening at the library and that the job was made for me. So I called Mr. Weir (then Asheville City Manager Weldon Weir) and he said I should go see Miss Frances at the library.

"Well, I got the job as the library's first Bookmobile manager. In those days the city contributed most of the local money that ran the library. That's how Mr. Weir figured into it.

The first Bookmobie was made from the chassis of an ordinary 3/4-ton truck with a custon-made body bolted to it. The truck body contained bookshelves facing outwards. Children selected a book, took it from the shelf and took it to the back of the truck so it could be charged out to them.

"There was no heater in the truck and winter days out in the county could be bitterly cold. Many's the time I started a fire in the road so that I and the librarian with me could ward off freezing. Even in those days we traveled on the Bookmobile in pairs.

"If we got a flat tire on that first Bookmobile, we could change it ourselves. The wheels were pretty much like an automobile wheel," Miss Case said.

But on subsequent vehicles, a flat tire meant a call to the nearest garage and wait until someone from the garage could get there and change the wheel.

Bookmobiles frequently had trouble on the dirt roads prevalent in the county in the early days. "The school buses would create deep ruts in those roads. "Miss Case said. "If the Bookmobile driver wasn't careful, the Bookmobile wheels could fall into those ruts.

"When that happened the Bookmobile transmission and differential were down on the ground, the Bookmobile wheels couldn't reach the bottom of the ruts and the Bookmobile was no longer mobile. On more than one occasion we had to persuade a nearby farmer to pull us out with his mule team."

The most recent Bookmobile owned by the library expired almost a year ago while Miss Case was at the wheel. "It happened on Patton Avenue, just opposite the Lincoln-Mercury dealer. It just plain blew up " she said.

The arrival of a new Bookmobile is expected soon and it won't get here any too soon for Katherine Case.

In a resolution honoring her for her dedicated service recently adopted by Buncombe County Commission members, it was estimated that Miss Case has traveled approximately 500,000 miles across Buncombe County at the helm of Bookmobiles. That is nearly the equivalent of a round-trip to the moon.

It also pointed out that she has made tens of thousands of service stops to distribute books to both children and adults.

"I'm always running into people who take a second look at me and say, "I know you. You ran the Bookmobile that came around when I was a kid," Miss Case said.

At a recent party at the library honoring Miss Case for 50 years service, three of the county commissioners present had been "customers" of Miss Case when they were children.

Katherine Case

Miss Case lives in West Asheville in a house that has been her home for all her adult life. She shares the place with a chihuahua.

That commissioners' resolution about Miss Case stated "Katherine Case is extremely well known and will be remembered by many people of all ages in Asheville and Buncombe County not only because of her 50 years of loyal and capable service, but because of her warm hearted nature, manner and genuine interest in the people that she served during her truly remarkable and outstanding career."

RESOLUTION OF APPRECIATION TO KATHERINE CASE FOR FIFTY YEARS OF SERVICE TO THE ASHEVILLE-BUNCOMBE LIBRARY SYSTEM

WHEREAS, Katherine Case became the bookmobile driver for the Asheville-Buncombe Library System on October 1, 1939 and continued in that capacity as a full time employee until July 29, 1977 when she "retired" after 37 years and ten months of service; and

WHEREAS, since July of 1977, Katherine Case has continued to work with the Library System as a part time Clerk and substitute driver and has averaged working 20 hours per week; and

WHEREAS, Katherine Case has driven the Library bookmobile more than 500,000 miles and has made tens of thousands of service stops to distribute books and other reading materials to children and adults in Asheville and Buncombe county; and

WHEREAS, this Board is of the opinion that Miss Katherine Case has contributed to the welfare of thousands of children and adults in a manner unique in the history of the Library and the County; and

WHEREAS, Katherine Case is extremely well known and will be remembered by many people of all ages in Asheville and Buncombe County not only because of her fifty years of loyal and capable service, but because of her warm hearted nature, manner, and genuine interest in the people that she has served during her truly remarkable and outstanding career as an employee of the Asheville-Buncombe Library System; and

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED AND PROCLAIMED by the Board of Commissioners for the County of Buncombe as follows:

1. That Monday, October 2, 1989 be proclaimed as Katherine Case Day in Buncombe County.

2. That this Board hereby expresses its sincere thanks and gratitude to Katherine Case for her truly remarkable fifty years of loyal and valuable service to the citizens and residents of Asheville and Buncombe County.

3. That this resolution shall be effective this the 2nd day of October, 1989

Woman drove bookmobile 500,000 miles

By Clarke Morrison

ASHEVILLE – In the 1940s and '50s, when most of Buncombe County was truly remote and its roads unpaved, Katherine Case provided nourishment to countless minds with her movable feast.

Katherine Case

People yearning for reading materials gathered monthly at spots across the county – from Bee Tree to Candler, from Arden to Barnardsville - for the arrival of the bookmobile she piloted.

It was in the fall of 1939 when Case became the driver of Buncombe's first bookmobile, which soon was a much-anticipated sight across the countryside. She is estimated to have driven these mobile libraries some 500,000 miles, nearly the equivalent of a trip to the moon and back, and logged tens of thousands of hours of service stops during her several decades behind the wheel.

Although she officially retired from the Asheville-Buncombe Library System in 1977, she returned within the week to work part-time, and continued there until the day she died.

That day was Wednesday. Case collapsed while working at Pack Library downtown, fell into unconsciousness and passed away that afternoon at Mission St. Joseph's. She was 89.

Case touched the lives of generations of residents who depended on her to deliver the books they craved, said Deborah Compton, a friend and colleague at the library.

"She was a real icon in the community," she said. "She knows so many people and watched so many children in Buncombe County grow up. She was such an inspiration to us. She was always at work on time and always willing to do whatever was needed to be done for anybody else."

The county had but one, centrally located library until 1959, so the bookmobile was particularly valued in its early days, Compton said.

"People often couldn't get to the library," she said. "They didn't have a car, or it was such a trip into town. So (Case) took books to people all over Buncombe County."

In a 1987 interview, Case recalled pulling into a stop in a remote area where people were awaiting her arrival. Many had walked miles with heavy boxes to return books and check out new ones. Snow and ice never stopped her, she said.

"I'd just put chains on the truck and go on," Case said.

She remembered the fires that she and the librarian would build on the roadside in an attempt to get warm in those early days when the truck wasn't heated. And people always enjoyed the visit.

"Back when folks didn't travel much, they were glad to have someone new to talk with and get news," Case said.

Lisa Stamey, a friend of Case who works at the Enka-Candler branch, took the news of her passing hard Thursday morning.

"Katherine knew just about everybody in the county, or at least it seemed that way," she said. "She made a tremendous impact on so many people. She was definitely what I could call an institution in this county.

"She thought (the bookmobile) was a very, very important service the library system provided, especially when it first started. The county was very rural."

Compton said Case would bake as many as 60 fruitcakes to give to friends during the holidays.

Case never married and lived by herself with her dog "Pee Wee."

"There will never be another one like her"

On February 7, 2001, the library system lost our most faithful and longest-employed staff member. After 62 years of service, Katherine Case stopped working. She passed out temporarily at work and died in the hospital hours later.

Katherine is best remembered as the driver of the very first bookmobile to serve library patrons in the more remote areas of Buncombe County. She started her journey in 1939 on a truck donated by the Coca-Cola Company. She estimated that she drove 500,000 miles on the job. She officially retired in 1977, but came back to work part-time. Her last years were spent in the Technical Services Department where she processed audio cassettes and other materials. She was a productive and valued member of that staff.

There are so many stories to tell about her and so many stories that she shared with us that it is hard to know which to share. Today, very few librarians would agree to the working conditions that Katherine and other bookmobile employees endured. Like the trucks in its day, the first bookmobile had no heater. She often talked about building fires along the way to keep warm while waiting for patrons. Recently, she talked about the mayonnaise in her sandwich freezing before lunchtime.

She was a huge baseball fan, a good Baptist, and a dyed-in-the-wool Democrat. The photograph here shows Katherine at an early bookmobile stop somewhere in Buncombe County.

Her little dog "Pee Wee" was an important part of her life. He was in very poor health and the veterinarian tenderly ended his life shortly after the news about Katherine. Pee Wee's ashes were scattered over "Mama's" grave following her burial.

Katherine was loved and shown appreciation during her life. She could not go out to dinner without someone stopping her to reminisce. almost 20 employees attended her funeral. As the minister lovingly stated, "There will never be another one like her."

The mural Jean Loewer created about the Asheville-Buncombe County Library System's bookmobile took her about four years to finish, working part time.

Immortalizing the 'bookmobile lady'

Local artist captures memory of librarian

By Jess Clarke
JCLARKE@CITIZEN-TIMES.COM

ASHEVILLE — Katherine Case was as dogged with her bookmobile as the postal service. She drove the clunky truck, unheated in the early years, to Buncombe County's nooks along unpaved roads.

Starting in 1939 and for about 50 years, Case was known as the "bookmobile lady," a roving librarian in saddle shoes who dispensed everything from Mother Goose rhymes to books about baseball legend Jackie Robinson. Like an ice cream vendor, she opened up the side of the truck and dug on the shelves for literary treats for clamoring kids.

Case has died, and the bookmobile ended its tour about five years ago for the Asheville-Buncombe County Library System. But she and her steed are captured on canvas at Pack Memorial Library in downtown Asheville in a mural by Asheville artist Jean Loewer.

The colorful mural, 5 feet high and 15 feet long, hangs in the children's area on the lower floor. It depicts about 30 parents and children at the bookmobile with baskets, boxes, bags and a red wagon filled with their borrowed treasures. Case is shown in a pink dress and her trademark saddle shoes. The mural, acrylic paint on canvas, is set about 1950 and based on photographs from the library's collection.

The late Katherine Case ran Buncombe County's library bookmobile for years.

"It's really about service and service to the community," says Loewer, a children's-book illustrator who is a library assistant part time.

Loewer worked on the mural off and on for about four years. She started by making sketches from photographs and then created an image, or cartoon, about half the size of the final piece. She redrew the image on the canvas.

She included in the piece North Carolina flowers and wildlife: rhododendron, wild clematis, Carolina wrens, a painted box turtle.

"To me, it was like an overgrown book illustration," Loewer says. "It was one of those projects that kind of had its own inner energy."

Case had her own inner energy, too.

"She was a beloved character, and she was a character," library director Edward Sheary says.

For people on her routes, Case was the library. And they helped her with her mission.

In the early years, people without telephones or electricity built fires along the road for Case to warm herself beside and pulled out her truck with mules when it became stuck in mud.

Information on Haywood Road
By Bob Bryan Cathey

I was born here on March 9,1922 (80 years ago). My dad built this as our home. Later,we moved a couple blocks west to Covington street where I grew up. He built several homes on this street.

From the age of 15-17 years of age I worked at the Palace Pharmacy for Dr. Foster. The pharmacy was located on Haywood Road. So was the Isis theatre where I happened to be that dreadful Sunday Dec. 7th, 1941. That same week I joined the Marines. We were afraid the war would be over before we could get at those nasty Germans & Japs. I had already joined the West Asheville Baptist church on Haywood Road though I grew up in the Wesleyn Methodist Church. The Baptists had a better ball team and too, most of my buddies were Baptist.

I have mentioned where I was born (corner of Haywood Road & Ormand Avenue) because a boy was killed by sledding into a crank shaft on a car parked on the street. The city officials had the police rope off (no cars) Ormond, and we would sleigh down Ormand & turn left and go to Sand Hill Road. Quite an incline and you would gather great speed. Too, some of the parents would be waiting at the foot of the hill and with sleigh and all they would take us another route to the top of Ormand Avenue and down you would go again. Great fun for all.

Aston Park Hospital where Brother died had a Park and was located on top of hill, or Patton Avenue. In this park they had swimming pool where I learned how to swim.

Also, Hall Fletcher Junior High school was located at the top of River Bridge Road & Richmond Avenue. There I played ball & because I was so short, Coach Griffin would not let me play 1st base, but I played right field and the right field bank was terraced and I played on the middle terrace where I could go up or down and catch fly balls. By the way, the very top of Richmond Avenue is where Haywood Road began. Too, what we called the end of car line was in West Asheville on Haywood Road and Burton Street.

Both Happy

This photo shows a pair of little ladies who from now on will be almost inseparable: Miss Mary Elizabeth Cathey on the left, and Miss Flossie Flirt on the right. Both are evidently happy, Mary Elizabeth because she has received such a wonderful doll free, and Flossie because she has found such a delightful home. Mary Elizabeth, who is the seven-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Cathey, 45 Trotter place, West Asheville, received her wonder doll by securing only four subscriptions to The Citizen.

A Family Enterprise

Chakales Make Socks For Men

Four Plants Here Turn Out 36,000 Pairs Daily

By JAY HENSLEY

They knit, loop, pair and package — and turn out more than 100 socks a minute.

This business of making men's hose has grown around here like a "run" in milady's legwear. Asv. Times

Since 1949 Broadway Hosiery Mills, Inc., has increased its output by almost five times the production of 10 years ago and raised its employment figure from a modest 45 to 350 persons. 11-23-59

A jobber in handkerchiefs, hosiery and other textile products got interested in manufacturing in 1946. His brother-in-law also became interested and they went into business.

Soon the whole family joined the enterprise.

It seems disjointed. Buildings that house portions of the process are located on Brevard road, Brownwood avenue and Burton street in West Asheville.

Another section of the same firm is under the roof of a long brick structure on Sweeten Creek road south of Biltmore some 10 miles away from the West Asheville plants.

The Brevard road and Brownwood avenue plants are about a mile apart with the Burton street facility somewhere about the middle. Burton street is headquarters for the firm.

Originators of this sectionalized hosiery industry are Charlie Chakales and Tom Alexander. They took over the old Frazier Hosiery Mill on Burton street in 1946 and had pushed production to 175,000 dozen a year by 1949.

Meanwhile Charlie's brothers and another brother-in-law joined the firm. Tom Alexander is president of the corporation. Dan Psoinos, Charlie Chakales and Jimmy Chakales are vice presidents. L. S. (Soc) Chakales is secretary-treasurer.

Matriarch of the clan is Mrs. P. H. Chakales, mother of three of them and mother of the wives of the other two industrialists.

She is the widow of P. H. (Pete) Chakales who came to this country in 1887 as a child, went back to Greece in 1910 to get married, and returned here with her to make their home.

The family has lived in Asheville for the past 50 years where the elder Chakales operated dry goods stores, shoe shine parlors, bakeries and other businesses. He died in 1944.

As both their mother and father were enthusiastic football fans, the Chakales boys were sure to become interested in athletics.

Soc earned five letters at Asheville High School, and played football at Rollins College in Winter Park, Fla., where he served one year as assistant coach.

Charlie was an All-State fullback at Asheville High and was a regular on the basketball and baseball teams. He was a freshman star at Wake Forest in 1924, and as a fullback in his sophomore year he scored the touchdown that beat Carolina. That was in the days when Duke was Trinity College, and Soc recalls that Trinity started a steady losing streak to Wake Forest during those years.

Jimmy Chakales, Psoinos and Alexander found themselves in military service soon after their high school days. Psoinos served at Guadalcanal and Alexander, taken prisoner by the Germans in Southern France, remained a captive in Germany for several months.

Soc, who worked as a correspondent for Asheville newspapers while he was still in college, became a staffer in the Times Sports Department when the newspaper was located in the Jackson Building. He also worked on the old Citizen when it was in the building that now houses the F. W. Woolworth Co. on Haywood street.

He later went to Orlando where he was sports editor on the morning paper, worked in New York briefly and went to the High Point Enterprise as sports editor. He became managing editor there and in 1944, joined the Associated Press. He served a year in the Charlotte Bureau, three months in New York, then went to the Middle East where he remained for 11 years. He was in charge of Associated Press news operations in Greece at one time.

The president of Broadway Hosiery Mills, Inc., whose wife is the former Virginia Chakales, came here from Lowell, Mass.

Forty-four Austin avenue, the home of Mrs. P. H. Chakales, is family headquarters of the clan. Each one is an equal partner in the sock-making firm, but "Mama" Chakales controls the voting in family affairs.

Asheville Times November 23, 1959

On a quiet day you wouldn't notice this business and at the peak of production it would make little impression on any except those who are a part of it.

Production figures and shop talk are dealt in dozens. Last year's business was in excess of 700,000 dozen pairs of socks. Top heavy bobby socks, snow-white and dyed socks. Plain socks from top to toe and socks with colorful woven designs.

Since June 1 the annual average has climbed to between 800,000 and 900,000 — dozen pairs, that is.

A new type sock, called the cushion-foot, is also in production here. Broadway Hosiery Mills, Inc., was one of the first to start making it.

From all outward appearances these sprawling buildings could be dormant warehouses instead of bee hives of bustling activity The only heavy traffic to and from them is at starting and shift change times.

Muffled echoes from a scrambled click-clack-click of more than 300 knitting machines are the inside sounds perceptible at the sidewalk near the Brevard road plant.

This building is located just half a block from West Asheville's main thoroughfare. Inside thin threads of cotton and a blend of nylon yarns are fed into the army of knitting machines.

Each machine is a separate unit. They stand like well oiled robot workmen in symmetrical rows across the length of the long room.

Fat spools of thread feed each knitting machine. In turn the intricate mechanism produces a toeless sock almost before you can say "knit one, purl two."

Seemingly unattended, the thread consuming machines click smoothly along as sleeve-like socks, twisting and turning and dancing up and down, are formed in their innards. One after another, connected only by a single thread, socks pile up at an opening below each machine.

Some of them are making one size and some another. But none of them are unattended. An operator, who watches over an average of 25 of these busy little contraptions, keeps coming around to empty the opening where the socks pile up.

In addition to the operator, there's a "fixer," a mechanic who understands the slightest whim of each machine, patrolling the aisles. Each row of machines has a separate fixer.

Every time the operator takes a sock from a slot, the product gets a critical inspection. Sometimes a flaw is found and the sock becomes a second. At other times more flaws are found—the machines are not infallible — and these socks are set aside as thirds.

A failing machine is a liability, though, and a fixer doesn't allow one to remain crippled very long. And at his disposal is a complete machine shop in a corner of the same building manned by Vance McKinney, shop foreman and maintenance engineer.

Among tools there for creation of all but the most specialized machine parts are two turning lathes, a milling machine and an assortment of acetylene cutting and welding torches.

Separate machines are required to make tops for the new cushion foot design, which is a sock with a terry cloth type knit on the inside of the foot. The demand at this time far exceeds the supply. Back orders are in the neighborhood of 32,000 dozen.

Two shifts of workers keep the Brevard road plant going 16 hours a day. It is the lifeline of the business. It is the starting point of a product that will provide work for other people.

From here some of the knitted goods are taken to the Brownwood avenue plant. It is in that building, as simple and unassuming as the first, that the ends of the socks are closed up, making them complete.

They are complete but not finished. The looping process, tedious and exacting work of weaving toe-ends of socks together, is carried out here on a portion of the output.

Of 111 looping machines required to keep up with the knitting department, only 10 are operated in the plant. The others are scattered about in private homes, many of them in McDowell County near Marion.

At least one year is required to train a looper — and then the candidate may not meet the test. It is one of the critical points in the manufacture of a sock.

The disc-shaped looping machine is flanged by countless tiny teeth that pierce the sock between threads of the weave. A fine line, invisible to the untrained eye, is the target, and it takes a steady hand to score.

Once in place on the disc, the product is secured and joins the merry-go-round that will swing it into a weaving apparatus and carry it on to a trimming device. The "loop" that is lopped off the end of the sock is a by-product used in the rug industry.

Material goes through periodic inspection processes. Some of the inspectors, whose eyes are trained to see nothing but flaws in the work, use simple inspection boards on which socks are stretched briefly then sorted into their respective categories.

Other workers use automatic devices that employ a powerful suction system to whisk away the flawless product and place it in a cloth container. Roy Price is foreman of looping and inspection.

All of the work eventually finds its way to the Burton street plant, location of the wash, bleach and dye vats, also part of the equipment at the Sweeten Creek plant. This plant, which finishes all but the top quality merchandise, also contains a packaging machine and conveyors.

James Wood is foreman of the bleach and dye division of Broadway Hosiery Mills, Inc., at 53 Burton St. A whirling moisture extractors and many of the forming boards. At this plant, the first of the string of mills, socks are also paired and packaged.

Forming boards, aluminum legs that size and shape the socks with sizzling steam, are moisture extractor there can handle 100 pounds of goods at a time.

The washed and whirl-dried goods are wheeled to the adjoining boarding section in tub-like buggies where they are fitted over the aluminum boards.

From there they are distributed to the many pairing tables, the last step before the socks arrive in the packaging department. An assortment of brands are stamped on the merchandise depending upon which distributor it was manufactured for. Some of the brands are for export.

When the orders are completed and each pair of socks packaged or folded into a retail box, they are placed into cardboard cartons and shuttled to the shipping department.

It is one of the largest hosiery mills in the country devoted almost entirely to manufacture of cotton work socks. With a payroll of more than half a million dollars a year, increased expansion in the past five years has sometimes dug deeply into profits.

Optimism runs high among these men, however. Orders are good. The machines are running and the future looks bright.

Charles Chakales, 62, president of Broadway Hosiery Mills Inc. died unexpectedly Sunday at his home at 7 Alclare Drive.

He was born in Patrina Sparta Greece in 1903, the same year his family came to America. They arrived in Asheville during 1911.

He was a son of Mrs. Stavroula Kourelakos and the late Peter H. Chakales, a member and past president of the Asheville Chapter of AHEPA and a member and past president of the Hellenic Forum.

Mr. Chakales attended Asheville City Schools and was a graduate of Wake Forest College. He was an outstanding athlete in both football and basketball, and while at Asheville High was named all-state fullback in 1923 and 1924. He was a member of the varsity football and baseball teams at Wake Forest from 1925 to 1928.

Surviving in addition to the mother are the widow, Mrs. Mildred Price Chakales; a son, Peter Chakales of the home; two daughters, Mrs. John Georges of Salem, Mass., and Miss Nicolette Chakales of the home, three brothers, Edward of Richmond, Va., L. S. of Wichita, Kan. and James Chakales of Asheville; four sisters, Mrs. John Starvey of Garden City, N. Y., Mrs. Thomas Alexander and Mrs. Daniel Psoinos of Asheville and Mrs. Robert D. Keeler of Albuquerque, N. Mex.

Services will be held at 2 p. m. Tuesday in Holy Trinity Greek Orthodox Church, of which he was a member and past president of the board of directors.

Father Nicholas Spirakas, pastor, will officiate and burial will be in Riverside Cemetery. Pallbearers will be J. Weldon Weir, George Zourzoukis, Tommy Hanzas, Tommy Arakas, George Lamprinakos and George Kaltsunis.

Honorary pallbearers will be Jim Baches, James Lamprika-

RESCUE OF A MOTORIST pinned beneath his wrecked car has been attributed to "Tony," a collie dog shown with one of his masters, Roy Ed Chapman, 11, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Chapman of Brevard Road "Tony" wasn't feeling too well when his picture was made yesterday. His leg had been injured by another passing motorist prior to Saturday night when "Tony" aroused the Chapman family to help J. L. Sluder of 44 Bear Creek Road who had been pinned under his car for 2½ hours after an unidentified motorist crowded him off the road Mrs. Chapman said "Tony" quit barking Saturday night as soon as she called to him "All right Tony, we're coming." The dog got an extra large bone as a reward from the Chapmans for getting help to Sluder (Citizen Photo)

Leukemia and Lymphoma Society facts

- An estimated 106,200 people in the United States were diagnosed with leukemia, lymphoma and myeloma last year.
- Leukemia, lymphoma and myeloma were expected to cause the deaths of an estimated 57,500 people in the United States last year. Lymphoma is the leading disease killer of men and women younger than 35.
- An estimated 670,950 Americans were living with leukemia, lymphoma and myeloma in 2003.
- Seventy-six percent of all money raised for the society goes directly to research and patient care. The Team in Training program alone raised $6 million at last weekend's Disney Marathon in Orlando, Fla.

MOTOR AGE—Well, well, what have we here! Why, to be sure, that's Miss Betty Clem, 253 Riverview drive, West Asheville, and Miss Margaret Runnion, 82 Lakeshore drive, who are, most of the time, quite modern misses. Right now, however, they are out for a spin in a 1906 Ford, and it's all in honor of the 50th anniversary of the motor car industry. The Ford belongs to the estate of the lat Mark L. Reed, Jr., who made a hobby of collecting old time autos. Upper inset shows the first auto ever to b driven from Asheville to New York. Lower inset show the first car ever to be driven over the Appalachian moun tain range. Both of these history-making drives were mad by John B. Rumbough, 41 Zillicoa street.

TWO CHOSEN IN AUDITION HERE

Miss Wilma Corne And Robert Cochrane Are Contest Winners

Miss Wilma Corne, 70 Brownwood avenue, West Asheville, and Robert Cochrane, 21 Longview avenue, West Asheville, were declared winners yesterday afternoon in the sixth Asheville audition of the Atwater Kent Foundation at the First Presbyterian church. They will compete in the state audition in Raleigh next month.

Second places or alternates were awarded Miss Hilda Kille, 28 Balm Grove avenue, West Asheville, and Leno Solary, 25 Fulton street. Miss Kille and Mr. Solary will be entered in the state contest in the event Miss Corne or Mr. Cochrane, for any reason, are unable to attend. Eight young men and five young women participated in the audition yesterday, which was managed by Charles E. Burnham, city chairman for the foundation.

Others Taking Part

Other participants in the Asheville audition were: Mary Candler, Elinor Lorick and Gussie Southers among the young women, and the following young men: Conrad Williams, Charles Trumbo, Sam Fox, Franklyn B. Neal, Roy Wilson and Crockett Richardson.

Judges were not announced. They sat behind a screen and singers were introduced to them by numbers. Each singer and accompanist performed in the Sunday school room of the church, while judges listened from behind screens under the balcony. Singers were introduced to the judges by Mr. Burnham, numbers being used instead of names as each singer appeared in two selections.

Mr. Cochrane is the son of Mrs. Minnie Cochrane. He has charge of programs and is announcer at radio station WWNC. Mr. Cochrane won first place in the Atwater Kent audition for Durham two years ago while a student at Duke university. He is a student of Mrs. N. F. Reiner, Marlboro road, Lake View park.

Is High School Graduate

Miss Corne is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. T. Coane. She graduated from Asheville high school four years ago. She is a student of Alva Tyler Duval, who has established a studio at 8 1-2 Wall street.

Miss Kille is a student of Mrs. H. B. Harmon, 40 Orchard street. She graduated from Asheville high school in 1926. Mr. Solary is the son of Mrs. L. J. Solary. He is also a student of Mrs. Harmon.

Any amateur singer between the ages of 18 and 25 was eligible to sing in the audition. The foundation's aim in the district state and national auditions is to discover America's most promising young voices and to provide vocally talented young men and women with opportunities for recognition, advancement and reward, Mr. Burnham explained at the audition. A number of friends of singers heard the audition. Not even members of the audience were allowed to see the judges, however.

Win Atwater Kent Audition Here

Miss Wilma Corne, 70 Brownwood avenue, West Asheville, left; and Robert Cochrane, radio station WWNC announcer, were declared winners of the two Asheville sections of the Atwater Kent Foundation audition yesterday afternoon at the First Presbyterian church. They won over five girls and eight boys, and will compete in the state audition in Raleigh next month.

Go To State Finals

Mr. Cochrane and Miss Corne will represent Asheville at the state finals in October. The two state winners will advance to the district contest which will include singers from 10 states. The district victors, five young men and five young women, will compete in the finals in New York City. First place winners in the men's and women's divisions will be given $5,000 each; second place winners will receive $1,000 each; and the remaining six finalists will be awarded $500 each.

Miss Alice Herman and Lawrence King were winners of the Asheville audition last year. They did not reach the district event. Although past winners were eligible to compete again, both Miss Herman and Mr. King were ineligible because they were beyond the age limit for auditions.

The state audition was held here two years ago. It was announced yesterday that winners will be notified soon as to the exact date of the state audition next month. In 1927, Ben DeLoache, an Asheville singer, went to the national finals in New York and was awarded second place. He entered the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

BIRTHDAY HONOREES — Two West Asheville residents were honored last week at the West Asheville Community Center. Older citizens who participate in the center's activities had a birthday party, complete with cake and ice cream, in honor of the July birthdays of Ann Cogburn, 90, and C.P. Knight, 91. Mrs. Cogburn, who has lived in Asheville most of her life, was a nurse at Memorial Mission Hospital for many years. Knight was a pastry chef, working in hotels all over the United States. Children in the center's playground program sang "Happy Birthday" for the honorees.

Anne Cogburn, 96, Defies Popular Images Of Aging

By SUSAN GAMBRELL
Staff Writer

The front door opened and standing there with the first bitter chill of October was old age's toughest member — Anne Cogburn of Haywood Road, her cheeks rosy and her lips brushed with pink gloss.

At 96 she's a woman who defies images of aging — stooped posture, walkers, arthritis and other maladies have no place in her life.

But then Anne Cogburn was never a typical person, in youth or in later years.

She invited her friend from the West Asheville Baptist Church inside her toasty home, which was decorated in pinks, yellow, ruffles and knicknacks she made at the West Asheville Community Center.

It's a cheery spot on a dreary day — a cozy house just off the busy road.

Mrs. Cogburn, a tall, trim woman, wore a pair of slacks with a plaid blouse tucked neatly inside the waistband. Around her neck was an 1893 silver dollar, the year she was born.

Another friend came over and Mrs. Cogburn jumped up from her rocker like a woman half her age and greeted the guest. She looked around the room for a chair and spotted one in the corner. Without hesitation she lifted the tall, heavy chair and carried it to the other side of the room, effortlessly.

"She's amazing," said Hazel Reagan, one of the guests that day. "She comes to church every Sunday skipping through the doors."

Mrs. Cogburn walked around her living room, hunting various handmade items to show her company and chatting like a woman who has too much energy to slow down.

"You all shut up 'til I get tuned in," she said, laughing and hitting her thigh. She said she sometimes wears a hearing aid, but that's her only prop. "My eyes are good, I guess. I can read the paper everyday."

Her day begins at 8 a.m. when she rises and makes herself a hot breakfast of eggs, bacon and sausage — the stuff that's supposed to clog arterties and kill.

Then she does her running around. Recently she passed the driving test and had her license renewed. She carts her younger friends to and from doctor appointments and other errands. At lunch every day, she goes to the senior citizen center, and on some days she has weddings to attend, parties, receptions, showers — and funerals. Hers is a busy life.

It has always been that way.

"Tell them what you do on Sunday mornings," said Reagan, referring to Mrs. Cogburn's church-going. The church is directly across the street from her house.

"Well, I look both ways," Mrs. Cogburn said, chuckling and snorting, slapping her leg again. "Sometimes I have to hold up the traffic."

She has had a rich and rewarding life. She grew up near Marion on a farm, one of many children.

"There were only 14 of us," she said, smiling. "I went to school, didn't learn too much, then got a job. Back when I was growing up, a girl couldn't be employed until she was 18."

And while many young women were rushing to secure husbands, she wanted a career. Her first job was in a mental hospital near Washington, D.C.,.

"I was assigned to take care of a girl with emotional problems," she said. That job led her into a nursing career, and for more than 50 years she has been a registered nurse.

"I went to what was called Asheville Mission and took my training," she said.

She said she waited until her early 30s to marry and have one child.

Mrs. Cogburn's days in nursing school were eventful. She recalled the courses in surgery and one of her first experiences in the operating room. The doctors had put the patient to sleep and were preparing to remove his arm.

"When they started sawing the bone and that arm fell off, I went down on the floor with it," she said. "The doctor said, 'Ah, leave her alone, she'll come to in a little while.'"

Mrs. Cogburn decided to make a pot of coffee and have butter cookies and homemade jam for her company. She sprang from her rocker and prepared the snack, setting the table with her Desert Rose china.

Eating and snacking, she said, have kept her young, along with the exercise classes she takes at the "club." That's her name for the senior citizens center, one of the focal points of her life.

"I drink two cups of coffee with my breakfast, eat three meals a day plus snacks," she said. "I don't turn anything down."

Her other longevity secrets include no napping, "just running around."

"I don't go to the doctor," she said. "I've never hurt bad enough."

CENTURY CLUB

STEVE DIXON/CITIZEN-TIMES

Fourteen seniors ages 100 and over gathered at Givens Estates in celebration of their lives and longevity. Mayor Russ Martin initiated the event put on by Land-of-Sky Regional Council and called the "Century Club." It has been designated with its own proclamation by the City of Asheville and is part of the Older Americans Month celebration. Elected officials from across the region were present to honor those who'd made or passed their 100th birthdays.

Still in the Driver's Seat

At 104, Annie Cogburn lives alone. She does her own cooking, laundry, and gardening, and she dresses up pretty each Sunday to walk across the road to the 11:00 A.M. service at the West Asheville Baptist Church in Asheville, NC. How does she make it across busy Haywood Road, with cars whizzing this way and that?

"Well, now, I look both ways," she says. "Wouldn't you?"

Annie is five feet eight inches tall, slender, and delicately featured. She really doesn't think of herself as old.

"Now, where would I find the time to sit around and think about myself?" she asks. "I'm too busy. Always have been."

Annie still lives in the handsome brick house her late husband built for her more than 70 years ago. A registered nurse, she retired at 83, when she switched to volunteering. She attributes her longevity to "a good body," which came as a result of fresh corn bread and buttermilk, plenty of pork, and lots of fresh air.

She grew up Annie Reel, the third of 14 children on a farm near Marion, NC. All the children worked in the fields, hoeing corn, pulling fodder, digging potatoes, milking cows. The entire family would gather each night for dinner around the long kitchen table, and discuss the next day's chores.

Until recently, Annie Cogburn, 104, tooled around town in her '73 Olds.

"We worked and we went to school, and we just didn't know too much about the world," she says. "We were taught to be good and not tell stories, and that's just the way it was. It stuck with you."

At 16, she started working at the local textile mill, which was a lot better than farming because at least you were out of the hot sun. She remembers a measles outbreak in the mill, and how it felt to lose so many of her friends to that dreaded disease. She contracted measles, too, and eventually pneumonia. "And the doctor came to see me."

"The Lord helps you get accustomed to a lot of things. I worked because we needed money. If we didn't need money, I wouldn't have worked."

Such visits were rare. Annie can remember just a few other times when the doctor was summoned to the area. "Everybody knew he was coming. People would be out on the road, flagging him down.

"He had himself a box of pills. And he gave everyone the same pill. And they would get better. If they got a pill from the doctor, they were happy."

Top: Annie, far right, and friends, circa 1919, during her nurse-training days. She still lives in the house, above, her husband built for her in 1925.

Annie's own career in medicine happened almost by accident. She was in her early 20s. All her friends and sisters were getting married, but Annie was too busy for boys. She wanted to see the world. She went to visit a sick friend nearby. The doctor came and performed a kitchen-table appendectomy, and there was no one around to assist but Annie. So she did. The doctor was so impressed by her work, he asked her to assist in another home surgery. He then convinced her to go into nurses' training.

One of her first experiences at Mission Hospital was to assist in an amputation. "When they started sawing that arm off," she recalls, "I went down on the floor with it." This was in the days before sophisticated anesthesia—and of only the most primitive means of sterilization. One of Annie's jobs was to boil the instruments in the small nurses' kitchen, three hours a day, for three consecutive days. "And on the third day they were supposed to be germ-free," she says. Annie still has her nursing school diploma hanging on her living room wall.

She was 27 when she graduated, an old maid by her family's reckoning. She earned five dollars for 20 hours of work and lived in an apartment with two other nurses. She remembers the most remarkable invention appearing during those years: the telephone. "They said you could talk in this thing and it would carry your voice," she says. "And I didn't believe it. Then the first time I tried it out, my Aunt Anna was on the other end of the line. I recognized her voice. And that was the only way I would have ever believed it."

While still in her late 20s, Annie met William Cogburn, 13 years her senior. He proposed. "And I said, 'Well, I don't want to get married without a house.' And you know what? Bill Cogburn went and he built me this house. So then I had to get married."

Bill, an Asheville police officer, designed the house with an oversize living room and dining room, determined to make the Cogburn home the one where church Christmas parties would be held. He got his wish. Bill and Annie were happy, a two-income family with a brand-new baby. It was shortly after William, Jr., was born that Annie's mother contracted tuberculosis back on the farm. After her mother died at 57, Annie brought her youngest sister, then 16, to live with her. Her sister helped raise Annie's son, so that Annie could go on working.

"Of course, you had your family on your mind all the time," she says. "But the Lord helps you get accustomed to a lot of things. I worked because we needed money. If we didn't need money, I wouldn't have worked."

The only time Annie took a break from her work was when she nursed her husband during his dying days. It was the saddest time of her life. At 59, she was a widow. She would never forget Bill. She would stay true to him. She would never leave the house he built for her.

Nowadays, Annie's son, age 70, a widower, lives nearby. He comes by with groceries, and tends to Annie. And he used to beg her to please stop driving around the neighborhood in her light-blue 1973 Oldsmobile Omega.

"I don't know why," she says. "Anybody who has driven as much as I have and never so much as hit a fire hydrant—why would they feel like I can't keep on doing it?"

After driving for the past eight years under a restricted license, Annie recently met with a very sad day: Her license was revoked. But she is not one to complain, not one to whine about the state of the world. "The only thing I see," she says, about the difference between the world she knew in her youth and the world she knows now, "is that there's so much learning now. People didn't used to have much learning. But they had good common sense. Today it's the other way. A lot of learning, not so much common sense."

A TOUCH OF TERRELL

103 and still going strong

She was 103 years old on Friday, July 12. Her name is Anne Reel Cogburn, and at that advanced age, she is still spry, lives alone, does her own housework, and hops around as agile as a hen. She lives near the West Asheville Baptist Church, where she attends regularly, except last Sunday when she "didn't feel like getting dressed up."

Her sense of humor, which has always been high, has not diminished with the passing years. Looking for her husband's death date in a stack of things on a table, she came across an envelope, which she handed to me.

"I think it's on that," she said.

It wasn't. But there were some things in the envelope: fives and tens and a few ones, and the amount was written on the outside of the envelope.

She looked at it, then peered closer, and an astonished look came over her face.

"Does that say $90?"

"Yes, it does."

"Well, shut my mouth!" she said. "Let's go to town and have some fun."

She grew up on a McDowell County farm near Marion, one of the 14 children of Elijah Crayton Reel and Nancy Louiza Ardell Drucilla Marlow Reel. "Daddy was from Buzzardtown in McDowell County," she said.

"Why did they call it Buzzardtown?"

"I guess it was because of the way people dressed then, mostly all alike, and I guess they looked like buzzards."

She said she hoed corn until she was 18. "Country girls couldn't get jobs back then," she said, "not till they was 18. When I got 18 I got a job in Morganton in the mental hospital. It was right up my alley, and I worked there a year." She then moved on to a sanitarium in Richmond, Va., but after a while she quit and came home and worked in a small hospital in Marion.

She met her husband at a party in the Biltmore House. He worked on the Estate. "He was from Cruso in Haywood County," she said, "and when he proposed to me I told him that everybody ought to have a house before they got married. So he built this one, and we were married around 1925. I've lived here alone since he died." That was on July 24, 1953.

"That's 43 years," she said, "and here I still am."

Her husband was a policeman and his paycheck would not cover family expenses, so she studied at Mission Hospital, earned a nursing degree, and worked as a private-duty nurse until she retired at age 80.

The only offspring of Anne and Bill Cogburn was a son, born in 1927, whom they named William Harrison Cogburn Jr. He became a fireman, and helped fight the fire that burned down the West Asheville Baptist Church a few years ago.

"I was asleep in the back of the house," she said. "I heard the thunder when lightning struck the church and set it on fire, but I went back to sleep. Then I woke up again and kept hearing all this whistling. I went to the front of the house and the church was on fire. The whistling was the sirens on the fire trucks and police cars."

Three of her eight sisters still live – Dovey, who married Eddie Joyner, Pearl, and Emma, all in their 80s, and she has one brother in Florida, Grover.

"How old is he?"

"Lord, I don't know," she said. "He's just like the rest of us. Old."

George Coggins, pioneer mall builder, fashioned many legends

Visiting our past

Rob Neufeld

Westgate, North Carolina's first modern mall, was in 1956 the brainchild of George Coggins, a man who trailed mythology behind him. He lived all of his 93 years, save a few weeks, in the 20th century. A chronicle of his activities is a portrait of a kind of entrepreneur who knew he was a mountain legend and filled the role.

For instance, his founding of Bee Tree Vermiculite, an important home insulation manufacturer, had its roots, he vouched, in a Davy Crockett-like childhood experience. "I decided to go into the mining business," he said in a 1992 interview, "when we were 'possum hunting one night." He had trapped a 'possum in a hole and tried to get it out with "a stick with a little fork on the end of it. You put it in the hole and twist it," he explained, "and it gets the 'possum hide caught on it, and he comes out with it."

"When (the 'possum) came out," he said, "he had something interesting all over him. It was a new mineral we hadn't seen before in the ground, and it was known as vermiculite."

Coggins, a descendant of the Davidsons and Alexanders, both founding Buncombe families, had grown up on what had once been Davidson land — in the Bee Tree community. Coggins' father, Henry Allen Coggins, unofficially presided over life there as the "Mayor of Bee Tree." His connections enabled George to get a job building an addition to the Beacon Manufacturing plant one summer during the Depression.

George had to go down 12 feet to the bottom of a form to bail water out so concrete could be poured for a foundation. "Finally, I came out the ... third day," he recalled. "I was so sore and stiff from the damp I couldn't get up. And I told the foreman ... (and) he said, 'Oh, you're just a sissy. That's like all of you Bee Tree boys.' When he said that, he was standing right on this form, and they were pouring concrete down in the bottom. I hit him right on the chin, and he went right over the form and fell in the concrete."

Coggins' idea for Westgate was born out of a parking ticket downtown. "I was on the parking side of the street," he related, "where it said park this side only, but I headed in the wrong direction when I backed up into that space. It was a one-way street. So, when I came back, the policeman had a ticket on the car and he said, 'I'm going to run you in. You're parked on the wrong side of the road.'"

Coggins told the policeman, "If you give me a ticket, within five years, you won't need any parking space in downtown Asheville because I'll build a shopping center that's centered around parking."

Now, you may not think it's appropriate to treat a serious subject such as history with levity — and that's true in certain crucial cases. But most of what takes place on the patchy road to destiny is as absurd as Mrs. Murphy's chowder.

Mrs. Murphy's chowder is famous for containing a pair of overalls, the song about which was one of the first disks of the Edison Record Company. Bing Crosby covered the song in 1954 as part of an Irish cultural revival.

About the time that Crosby was singing about overalls and crooning "Too Ra Loo Ra Loo Ral," Asheville history took a sharp turn because of a random event in the life of developer George Coggins.

"I was on the parking side of the street (in downtown Asheville), where it said park this side only," he related to oral historian Dorothy Joynes in 2002, whose tapes are held by UNCA's Ramsey Library.

"I headed in the wrong direction when I backed up into that space," Coggins affirmed. "It was a one-way street. So, when I came back, the policeman had a ticket on the car and he said, 'I'm going to run you in. You're parked on the wrong side of the road.'"

Coggins told the policeman, "If you give me a ticket, within five years, you won't need any parking space in downtown Asheville because I'll build a shopping center that's centered around parking."

Coggins already had a leasehold on a former quarry on newly built Patton Avenue, and he began looking at malls in such places as Chicago and Boston.

Louis Lipinsky agreed to move his famous department store, Bon Marche, from downtown to Coggins' mecca. Coggins obtained a loan from Massachusetts Mutual Insurance Company to construct what would become Westgate — North Carolina's first mall. Work began in 1956.

F. JACK COLE

ASHEVILLE — F. Jack Cole died peacefully at the WNC Baptist Home on Wednesday, June 2, 2010.

Born and raised in Candler, son of Ben H. and Opal Gaston Cole, Cole graduated from Candler High School where he played on the basketball team. Following high school, he went to work for American Enka. He served in the Army during World War II. He rose to the rank of First Sergeant before being discharged following the surrender of Japan.

Following the war, he used his GI Bill benefits to enroll in a Bank Trainee program. He worked at First National Bank until he left to assist in the founding of Carolina Federal Savings and Loan where he served as the Charter Bank Manager Executive Officer and eventually President.

Jack was involved in music his entire life, singing tenor in the SPEBSQA (now the Barbershop Harmony Society), and the Central United Methodist Church choir. He was a member of the Lions Club for over 60 years. He served as president of the Asheville Club as well as District 31 A Governor. Through the Lions, he founded an "old time music" group, "The Sanctimonious Seven" which entertained at various retirement homes in the area.

Jack served on the Asheville City Council from 1977-1984. A life long student of the history of Western North Carolina, Cole served as president of the Western North Carolina Historical Association.

He was preceded in death by his parents; brother, Ben Gaston Cole; sister, Alice Cole Iarussi; and wife, Carolyn Mathews (Jo) Cole.

He is survived by his children, Rebecca C. Pate and husband, Jim, of Asheville, Dr. Frederick J. "Ric" Cole Jr. and wife, Ann, of Portland, Ore., and Russell M. "Russ" Cole, and wife, Ellen, of Chapel Hill; and nine grandchildren, Weston and Cole Pate, Ben and Janie Cole, and Deric, Collin, Caitlin, Harrison and Cassidy Cole.

The funeral service will be at 11 a.m. Monday in the Patton Avenue chapel of Groce Funeral Home, with the Rev. Julie Wilburn Peeler officiating. Interment will follow at Riverside Cemetery.

The family will receive friends from 4 to 6 p.m. Sunday at the funeral home.

Memorials may be made to Central United Methodist Church, 27 Church Street, Asheville, NC 28801, or to the Asheville Lions Club Eye Clinic, PO Box 2284, Asheville, NC 28802.

The on-line register is available at www.groce funeralhome.com.

Asheville young folk by the scores took to the streets and by ways yesterday and today, after a thin blanket of snow and freezing temperatures had turned slopes into ideal places for sledding and sliding. Some sleds got their first use of the year. These scenes are typical of many throughout the vicinity a short time after the snow had covered the ground. The top picture shows Miss Dorothy Thomas, student at David Millard junior high school, in the act of throwing a snowball—at The Times photographer. She was among the first to get out in the snow during the afternoon. 'Mom Edith' Compton Dies; Helped Found Eliada Home

Mrs. Edith Van Dusen Compton, 85, known to three generations of Eliada Home children as "Mom Edith," died Wednesday in an Atlanta, Ga., hospital.

She was the widow of Lucius B. Compton, founder of the home in 1906, and spent 44 years as housemother after spending her own savings to aid in the purchase of the original five acres, cabin and barn.

She retired in 1950 and went to California to live, making periodic visits to Eliada and its alumni. After convalescing from a long illness, she came back to Decatur, Ga., last fall to live with her daughter, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Jepson, and made a final visit to this area.

She was born in Cooper Plains, N. Y. Her husband died in 1948.

Surviving besides Mrs. Jepson are four brothers, John and Fred of Stockton, Calif., Arthur of Fresno, and Chester Van Dusen of St. Petersburg, Fla.; a sister, Miss Emma Van Dusen of Concord, Calif., and two grandchildren.

Services will be held Saturday at 2 p.m. at Grace Baptist Church.

The Rev. Alvin Jepson, her son-in-law, will officiate and burial will be in the "Dad Compton" memorial on the Eliada campus, where her husband is buried.

The family has asked that gifts in lieu of flowers be made to Eliada Home or the American Cancer Society. The body will be at Morris-Hendon Funeral Home from 4:30 p.m. Friday.

"Egypt and the Holy Land" Announced as Subject of the Address —Stereopticon Views.

REV. LUCIUS B. COMPTON.

"Egypt and the Holy Land" is the subject of the address which will be delivered by Rev. Lucius B. Compton tonight at the Auditorium, to which the public is cordially invited. Rev. Mr. Compton recently returned from the Orient, and while in the east, secured a large number of stereopticon views, which will be shown this evening.

Rev. Mr. Compton has charge of the childrens' home at Grace, and is well known in Asheville. He is an attractive speaker and no little interest has been shown in the announcement that he is to appear at the Auditorium this evening.

Would Have Sailed on Titanic, but Was Prevented by Engagements in England.

Rev. Lucius B. Compton has arrived in Asheville after a four months' tour in the Orient. He has stood the trip remarkably well and is several pounds heavier than when he left in January. The Egyptian sun equally with the Alps agreed with him.

Some engagements for meetings in England kept him from the fate of the Titanic. Mr. Compton visited the leading charitable institutions in England and elsewhere so as to get a better idea for his orphanage and rescue work here in Asheville. He and Rev. S. M. Stikeleather will commence revival meetings under a large tent on Patton avenue, opposite Depot street, tomorrow night. In these meetings Mr. Compton will tell a great deal of his trip. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Start Of Orphanage Is Described By Compton

Speaker Tells Rotary Club Of His Own Early Life

Ash. Cit. 5/17/33

The motivating spirit behind the altruistic work being accomplished at Eliada orphanage near Asheville was revealed yesterday in an address made by the Rev. L. B. Compton before the weekly meeting of the Rotary club at Battery Park hotel.

Mr. Compton, founder and manager of the orphanage, told of the years of struggle to achieve the success that has come with development of the present $200,000 plant devoted to the material and spiritual needs of homeless children.

The speaker said it was the first time he had ever visited a civic club to seek support for a project connected with the orphanage. On this occasion it was to ask the Rotarians to furnish cars next Wednesday afternoon to transport delegates to the International Union of Gospel Missions to the Eliada home for luncheon.

Mr. Compton said he was born in a poverty-stricken cabin 40 miles from Asheville, of parents who had six children. When only 16 years old he set out to see the world and for four years roamed aimlessly as a tramp before he found Jesus Christ in a mission at Cincinnati 39 years ago. Twice in his wanderings he became so discouraged that he planned suicide, he said. The orphanage, he said, grew from his desire to supply other children with the many helpful influences denied him as a boy.

Started In Cabin

The orphanage had its start in a tumble-down cabin on four acres of land, he narrated. Fully half of the children admitted they were born out of wedlock.

"Many folks have wondered how I got the money to establish and keep going such an institution," he declared. "I want to tell you that I got it on my knees. Why, I can recall when we opened the little cabin with its leaky roof that when it rained we had to put the children under the beds to give them shelter."

A total of 1,900 girls, some of them from leading families, have received aid from the institution since it began operations here years ago.

In response to questions from the Rev. W. A. Lambeth, pastor of the Central Methodist church, designed to bring out the sacrifice of the orphanage manager, Mr. Compton said he did not own any part of the orphanage or its equipment. It is controlled by a board of trustees, he explained.

REV. L. B. COMPTON

"What do you possess?"

"Nothing but what I have on my back and a good wife," he responded.

Applaud Speaker

The Rotarians applauded warmly at the conclusion of the address.

Wilbur Devendorf and Floyd L. Hewitt, acting as a committee, received a number of pledges for use of cars next Wednesday. The visiting delegates will be taken on a scenic drive after the trip to the orphanage.

Hexie E. McDonnold, chairman of the program committee, introduced Dr. Lambeth, who presented Mr. Compton.

Robert F. Phillips, elected district governor of Rotary at the recent Charleston convention, was at the meeting after spending several weeks in Raleigh. The district governor-elect voiced appreciation for the honor he had received and was given a hearty reception.

Charles S. Walters made an announcement pertaining to the work of the Civic Music association here and guests at the meeting were introduced by Charles A. Webb. Clarence C. Morgan, president, presided in the early part of the meeting and made several announcements and Campbell W. Ansley led the singing.

President Morgan announced that Mr. Phillips had been named chairman of the Boston convention committee for the local club. Other members are Clarence N. Walker and Abner W. Faulkner.

A guest at the meeting was Dr. Nat Green, of California, brother of former Mayor Ottis Green and Gay Green.

A MESSAGE FROM THE ELIADA HOME for CHILDREN

VOL. XXX ASHEVILLE, N. C., AUGUST, 1937. NO. 8

Eliada is Taking on Quite a Different Appearance

We have been made to feel many times just a little humiliated over the roughness and run-down conditions of all appearances about the Eliada Institution. The road coming into Eliada has worn out, cut up in gulleys and holes, and with certain weather it was difficult to drive in and sometimes around by the barn it was practically impassible. The fences had rotted down, roofs leaked and all buildings had gone without paint for several years until Eliada had begun to look like a place that had been.

But this summer the Lord renewed our faith and we felt it would be pleasing to Him to make Eliada look like a place worthy of its name, "One Whom God Cares For." So the road has been widened and fixed until now it looks quite respectable and can be driven over with ease and comfort. The buildings are now being painted. Paint certainly improves the appearance of any building or place. The roofs have been fixed, some rooms and halls calcimined and painted, until actually we folks at Eliada are beginning to feel that we are living at home again. At this writing painters are working and another crew is grading for a much-needed tennis court for the children of Eliada. Other men are painting the camp cabins and dormitory building, and Eliada has begun to take on its natural aspect of beauty. The Carolina Power and Light Company is installing a new electric system with a cheaper power rate for all the work done at Eliada, and Eliada is soon to have two large electric ranges installed in the kitchen with new modern equipment that will make the cooks and those in that department feel very happy. Much of the needed repairs has not been accomplished yet, but we are working on them, and we are looking to our friends who think of us in prayer and friendship to help us out in this vast undertaking, for it is requiring a considerable layout of money to accomplish what we have already and much more to finish the job. There is no end to the need for a work like Eliada. Repairs, replacements with continued improvements could keep a crew of men busy on the Eliada premises. But our goal is all buildings painted, new fences to replace the old ones, and repairs on all buildings that will put them in shape for years of future service. And I am sure any person with ordinary business ability would not say this was luxury or an unnecessary expenditure, but an absolute necessity. But Eliada for the past seven years has not been able to keep up the necessities, for we consider all that we have done and are contemplating to do is an actual necessity for the preservation of the property that Eliada now possesses, and if the Lord has entrusted us with Eliada He wants us to trust Him to supply us with means to take care of Eliada. So we are feeling mighty happy for the improvement that is being done.

MRS. COLE AND HER GROUP OF ELIADA CHILDREN.

And if you who read the paper confidence Eliada and believe in the work that Eliada is doing for the class of children we are raising, then I am sure you are going to pray and help us on top of the hill with these badly needed improvements.

Oh yes, I nearly forgot to say we are still waiting and trusting for sufficient money to put the new roof on Faith Cottage, repair the rooms, and paint the outside of the buildings. Now if I could get you to visit Faith Cottage and show you the need, you certainly would pray and you would not only pray, but I am just confident you would help me in putting this building out of the depression wreckage, with all repairs made and every need of that home supplied. We haven't wavered a moment, but our faith is still strong that Faith Cottage will be repaired and these needs met. Remember we cannot use the Eliada Fund for the improvement of Faith Cottage. So the offerings used for this purpose must be so designated in the letter. Otherwise they will be put in the Eliada funds. These are two different Institutions, five miles apart, controlled by separate sets of bookkeeping, yet under the same Board. Don't mistake as thousands have, that the Eliada Home for Children and the Faith Cottage Home for Girls are the same Institution, or supported out of the same funds, or located on the same farm. They are five miles apart. Faith Cottage is in the City of Asheville. Eliada is on a farm five miles away, but the same God established and supports both Institutions, but He uses human instrumentality and has for thirty-five years. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble." Psalm 41:1.

THE NEW TESTAMENT CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE WORK.

To the friends and contributors to Eliada Orphanage and Faith Cottage Rescue Home, and to the mission work in these Southern mountains:

You will notice that in the past we have sent out once or twice a year a little booklet, in that way acquainting you with this work. But as the work is continually growing and the number of friends increasing, there is a demand for more frequent reports.

For some time it has been in our hearts to publish a monthly paper for the purpose of letting our friends know what God is doing in this mountain mission work.

We have seen the necessity of this, yet we have drawn back from it, as it requires time, talent and money, and we feel our shortage along all these lines.

But we believe that He who laid this work on our hearts will see us thru along every line that pleases Him.

Eliada Orphanage and Faith Cottage Rescue Home are not incorporated under any church denomination, but stand on the principles of New Testament Christianity, in that they hold out helping hands to the unfortunate girls and to the homeless destitute children without distinction as to faith or creed. Our great mission to this world is to preach and live CHRIST who is the wisdom and power of God. In publishing THE NEW TESTAMENT CHRISTIAN, we make the subscription price the small sum of twenty-five cents per year, thus putting it within the reach of all who desire to keep in touch with this work. Many have watched its progress with great interest.

Lucius B. Compton.

It was conceived and born in the hearts of those who were reared in these Southern mountains and who knew the hunger for the comforts of life and the struggle for an education.

Without a single dollar and without friends to pledge its support, the work had its beginning in PRAYERS and TEARS which fanned faith into a flame of motion; and all that is visible today at either institution is the result of PRAYER and FAITH. But what has been done is so little compared with what is yet to be done.

PRAYER HAS GIVEN HOME AND TRAINING FOR 700 UNFORTUNATE WOMEN AND 200 FATHERLESS AND MOTHERLESS CHILDREN

Dr. Lucius B. Compton, Head of the Eliada Home for Children, and Faith Cottage for Fallen Women, Has Built up a Great Institution on Faith and Prayer —Native of Pisgah Section, He Livedin 16x18 Log Cabin Occupied by Nine.

BY MEMORY M'CORD

Some people earn money by working for it, others inherit it, but Dr. Lucius B. Compton, who lives five miles out of Asheville on the Leicester Road, gets his by praying for it!

Sounds easy, but it isn't. To make the formula work one has to have faith that the money will come and one must want it for an excellent cause. Additionally, you must be willing to do without food for long periods of time and to spend hours—even nights and days in constant prayer. Follow this recipe, though, and according to Dr. Compton, the Lord will truly provide and really there must be something in it, because in the last 20 years, from out of the great, wide world has come hundreds of thousands of dollars to help Dr. Compton and those dependent upon him.

Some people don't succeed in the praying business the doctor says because they allow doubt to creep in. Others say "if this be your will, Lord." That's all wrong. You must know just what you want, be absolutely sure that you want it for a good reason and then simply say "if you please" properly and there you are!

Righ now Dr. Compton needs $3,500, but he hasn't prayed for it yet, owing to his absolute faith that when the actual hour comes for him to produce the money—well, that he will be able to do so. Meanwhile, he is dreaming a dream and the idea of this last isn't quite clear to him. Somewhere out on his place at the Eliada Orphanage he wants someday to start a religious sanatorium—sounds queer — but he means a place for the care of missionaries and religious workers who have, perhaps, worked too hard and who, broken in health and having no place to go, can come up to the mountains of Asheville and recover. When he dream is all worked out, the site selected and bids even made by contractors for the erection of the building, well, then Dr. Compton will take the matter to the Lord and from somewhere the money will come and the care and upkeep of the place and workers will be assured. It is needless to gother God, Dr. Compton believes, until one has used one's own common sense and done the best that one can to man put the thing or things that are needed. After that one must then fast and pray and, if it's all for a good cause that's all there is to it!

Almost any day on the streets of Asheville you can hear somebody say, "You've heard of that man Compton, the preacher that runs that orphanage somewhere out toward West Asheville. He prays for money, you know, and always gets it—well do you know anything about him? Where he comes from or what are his ideas?" Always the answer is the same. Nobody seems to know, yet as a matter of fact Dr. Compton was born in this section right under the shadow of Mount Pisgah.

Seated in a large wicker chair out at the Eliada Home with a bright-faced little urchin on either side of him calmly rocking in miniature wickers, Dr. Compton briefly outlined his life yesterday, and explained how he came to be so fond of children and how he wished above everything else in the world to see them taken care of and educated.

"I was born in a tiny log cabin," he said "16 by 18 feet it was and it stood in the Pisgah section. The roof was of clapboard and the floor of slab and there were no windows. Mother, father and myself and five brothers and one sister lived together. There was scarcely ever enough to eat and as for education or training, we children knew nothing of such. At five years of age I received a severe hurt caused by a fall. Terrible white swelling developed and from then until I was 14 years of age I was practically helpless. Immediately I got better I decided to leave home and late one night escaped from the cabin and for five years wandered. Sometimes I was able to work at common jobs, other times I was laid up with my leg and kept by charities.

"One cold winter night I stepped into a Cincinnati Mission to get warm and there I got religion. Somehow I can't tell you how it happened. Something just came over me all of a sudden and I realized that it was in me to be something else—or I could just keep on in the way I was going and amount to nothing. For the first time in my life I prayed and such a poor prayer it was, because at that time I could neither read nor write and so poorly expressed my ideas.

"Following conversion I wanted to help and almost immediately began that line of work. At first I was able to do so little, but by and by I learned to speak in a plain little way and, as soon as I found myself capable of helping others to find themselves, I returned to my native mountains. There

Dr. Luciuc B. Compton, who has established a large and valuable institution for orphanage and rescue work by determining what he wants, seeing to it that it is a real need and praying for it. His prayers have never failed to provide the need, he states.

the poor and uncared for children most strongly appealed to me and I determined to start some sort of a school to instruct them.

"Twenty years ago, down by the river in the factory district, where smoke hung heavy over the houses of the poor, I began a mission school and had some queer little tickets printed. A child was given one of these for every night's attendance at the school. So many tickets returned would purchase a hat, and attendance for a whole session would secure one a suit of clothes. Money was scarce down in that section and mothers and fathers forced their little ones to attend the mission so as to secure the garments. There was no compulsory school law then and times were extremely hard. The mission was down in the basement of a church. There on Sunday nights I held simple services. From the very first I took up no collection nor asked for any funds, but contented myself with voluntary gifts and were these lacking resorted at times to wood chopping or any sort of honest labor that would be renumerative.

"One night at the services a poor girl sobbed out her heart to me, telling of the horrible childhood she spent working for people who were not her parents—she was an orphan—and of her betrayal by one who should have made her life most beautiful. So wrought up was I by her story that my wife and I—I had been only a short time married—removed our few sticks of furniture from the housekeeping room we inhabited and rented a cottage. There we installed the girl and out of her adoption grew our idea and later the actual beginning of Faith Cottage, the rescue home for fallen women at 53 Atkinson Street, upon which I now owe the $3,500, of which I was telling you. This debt accrued for the installation of a heating plant for the institution which has just been completed.

"Following the foundation of Faith Cottage, my wife and I persuaded a friend, Miss Edith Van Dusen, a religious worker, to join us. With her help we purchased four acres of ground upon which site now stands the main building of the Eliada Orphanage.

"It was a cold year when we made the move and folk were very calm in advising me against the change. To make matters worse several of the children became ill and my wife, Miss Van Dusen and myself had colds. The little cabin in which we all lived was inadequate for our needs and after doing all that I could to help myself and others, I took the matter to the Lord. Up until this time the largest gift I had ever received had been a $300 one and few donations of any kind had been made. For one whole day I fasted and prayed and early the next morning a beautiful gowned woman came out in a carriage and gave me a check for $1,000. It seemed that faith was the one thing in all the world that she lacked. Someone whom she loved perhaps had proved unworthy; she didn't exactly say, but let that impression. With the $1,000 I began the Eliada Orphanage.

"What does the name mean? Why 'One whom God cares for.' Appropriate? Oh! yes. God has certainly been good to me and mine. True, our first building burned and I was obliged again to ask help from the Lord. He answered then, as always, quite promptly and I immediately began a new building. From four acres the orphanage land increased to 147. Beginning with six children my family grew until I possessed 57 boys and girls all under the age of 12 years. During the history of the institution over 200 have called the orphanage 'home.' Most of them," he paused and patted the heads of the children sitting beside him, "are so-called illegitimate and let me say right now that that is a mis-applied word. Children are never illegitimate, though parents may sometimes be.

"It's a strange thing," he mused, "I've never yet had a death in the institution and I think sometimes that I could scarcely bear to give one of the babies up, but when the time comes, of course, I will be given the strength to face it. You see God never saw fit to bless my marriage with children and, having none of my own, I am especially fond of these babies. Did I ever pray for a child of my own? No I never did, because I figured it out that possibly it was my lack of them that made me wish to care for other people's. That and the memory of my own somber childhood.

"From where do we get our orphanage babies? Why from all over this section. We take them in and legally adopt them or accept them without regular adoption. At various times children have been brought to us at one or two hours of age. Others have come at two or three months and others still at more aged periods. Our youngest child now is a girl of four months. A cute little kid named Alice."

Later we visited this little child in the institution nursery. She was a pretty little thing with huge pansy-like eyes and a smile that would light up the darkest day. Occupying other wee beds, but in the same room, were additional babies. Among them was an unusually sturdy little girl with a remarkably developed character. One would have been willing to stake much on the quality of blood that run through her tiny veins.

From the nursery we crossed the hall to the playroom and watched small boys and girls amuse themselves with mechanical toys and lovely doll babies. Next we visited the boys dormitory and the two huge schoolrooms where larger children were being instructed in the usual school work. All of the faces were bright and eager. It was pleasant, too, to notice how chimmily they greeted the doctor. Children are about the only known people in the world who cannot be fooled sometime or other, and on their recommendation alone one could accept Dr. Compton.

Besides the main orphanage building and the boys' dormitory there is an attractive little cottage for girls and the doctor's own dwelling. Farther on down the road towards town is the camp meeting tabernacle in which services are held each year, during the month of August. It is Dr. Compton's custom to bring preachers here at that time from all over the world. In the vicinity of the tabernacle he hopes some day to build the religious sanatorium of which he now dreams.

Has it paid, you ask, and he understands that you do not mean from a mercenary view.

"Oh yes," he answers, "many, many times over. Why at the present in the city of Cario, Egypt, is a wonderful orphanage run by a woman who learned to love God right here in Faith Cottage in the rescue home for fallen women. Near the outskirts of Asheville, too, lives another girl of the same type who is happily married. In fact, out of the 700 girls who have been members of the rescue home, 75 per cent now lead Christian lives and at intervals write back to us telling us their joys and sorrows. And as for the 200 children who have passed through the Eliada Home or who still linger each has been a joy and blessing. Paid—oh yes. And in addition to everything else, God saw fit to cure the white swelling from which I so long suffered.

"Oh it's all so easy. People worry for fear this or that won't pan out, when all they have to do is to be honorable and upright; to make all the efforts they can and then to take a plain proposition to God. You do your part and He will certainly do His. Most people fail because they aren't steadfast enough or they long for selfish gain. Remember the formula is most simple—believe first of all, then ask and you shall receive."

The Eliada Orphanage is a private one, though it is incorporated under the State laws and possesses a board membership.

Orphanage Head Faces 4 Charges Of Assault With Intent To Commit Rape.

RELEASED UNDER BOND

Buncombe Grand Jury Also Indicts Thomas For Beating Children.

The Rev. L. B. Compton, head of Eliada orphanage, was indicted by the Buncombe county grand jury today on four charges of "assault with intent to commit rape."

He was taken in custody by sheriff's deputies around noon and later released under $2,500 bond posted by Ottis Green.

An hour or so earlier the grand jury indicted Charles Edward Thomas, farm and dairy superintendent at the orphanage, on two separate counts of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill.

After Complaints

The indictments came as a climax to an investigation of conditions at the orphanage launched several weeks ago after three young boys at the institution complained to sheriff's deputies that Thomas had whipped them with a leather haltar rein.

The true bills against Mr. Compton charge that on or about June 1, 1942 and or about March, 1943 he "did make an assault on one ————, and he, the said L. B. Compton, did then and there beat, wound and ill-treat her, the said ————, and did attempt to commit rape . ."

Each of the bills contain a second charge of assault on a female.

Mr. Compton was brought directly to the courtroom by sheriff's deputies on a capias issued by the clerk immediately after the indictments were returned.

To 15th Floor

He remained there with his attorney, J. G. Merrimon, until court adjourned at 1 o'clock for the noon recess and was taken then to the fifteenth floor of the courthouse.

Within a few minutes officers returned him to the courtroom and Mr. Green signed bond for his appearance tomorrow morning.

Prosecuting witnesses in the case range from 11 to 20 years of age, officers said, and all are inmates or former inmates of the orphanage operated by Mr. Compton.

Mr. Compton, 68 years year old, founded the Eliada Home, incorporated, in 1903. It is supported largely by voluntary contributions, and revenue and produce derived from the dairy and farm.

The orphanage takes care of approximately 90 children from all parts of the country, and its plant consists of a number of buildings and several hundred acres of land near Emma.

Thomas was taken into custody at the same time as Mr. Compton and was being held in the Buncombe county jail this afternoon.

The indictments returned against him charge that he did, on or about the 18th day of May, 1943, "assault, beat, wound and seriously injure" Billy McAllister and Howard Collins "with a deadly weapon, to-wit, a shoe and cow halter...inflicting serious and permanent injuries upon..." them.

Notations on the bill indicated the grand jury heard testimony of two deputy sheriffs who investigated the complaint, the county physician who examined the boys, several residents of the community where the orphanage is situated, and a representative of the state welfare department from Raleigh.

Thomas was arrested within a few hours after the boys made their complaint to the sheriff's office here and was free under $1,000 bond for his appearance before Magistrate George A. Gash.

When the case first came on for hearing before Mr. Gash, it was continued until the superior court could hear an appeal from his refusal to dismiss the charges.

Several days later the Rev. L. B. Compton, head of the orphanage, caused a warrant to be sworn out in domestic relations court, charging Thomas with assault.

Judge Hubert C. Jarvis continued the matter there until the other courts had a chance to dispose of it.

Trial Of Compton On Rape Attempt Counts Is Set For August 25

Trial of the Rev. Lucius B. Compton, widely known evangelist and head of Eliada orphanage here, on four separate charges of attempt to commit rape, was continued in Buncombe superior court today until August 25.

J. G. Merrimon, counsel for Compton, moved for the continuance and informed the court that G. Lyle Jones, associate counsel, was unable to be present because of illness.

The case of Charles Edward Thomas, Eliada farm and dairy superintendent who is under indictment on two charges of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, is scheduled to be called Wednesday.

Grew Out Of Probe

Indictments of both defendants grew out of an investigation made by the Buncombe county sheriff's department after several inmates of the institution had complained of treatment they received.

Mr. Merrimon, attorney for Thomas, requested Presiding Judge Felix E. Alley to require the solicitor to let the defense see a cow halter and a shoe allegedly used in the assault charged in the bill of indictment.

He said the halter had disappeared from Eliada farm and he understood it was in the possession of the sheriff's office. Judge Alley refused to grant the request but Sheriff Laurence E. Brown informed Mr. Merrimon that he would let him look at the halter.

Before becoming associate defense counsel for Thomas, Mr. Merrimon acted as prosecuting attorney against him in similar charges still pending in domestic relations court.

REV. L. B. COMPTON IS FOUND NOT GUILTY IN FOUR ASSAULT CASES

Ash. Times 10-22-43

A Buncombe county jury yesterday afternoon cleared the Rev. Lucius B. Compton, former head of Eliada orphanage, of charges growing out of an investigation into alleged misconduct toward young girls in the institution.

The jury returned a verdict of not guilty in the first of four cases which had originally charged assault with intent to commit rape. The felony count was stricken out Wednesday by Judge Felix E. Alley, presiding jurist, leaving only simple assault charged against the defendant when the case went to the jury.

After the not guilty verdict had been returned, James S. Howell, solicitor, announced he would take a nol pros with leave in the other three cases. Counsel for the defense asked for a directed verdict of not guilty, and Solicitor Howell said he would not oppose such a verdict if Judge Alley would direct that such a verdict be entered.

Judge Alley then directed the clerk to make the entry of not guilty in each of the three remaining cases. Late Wednesday, Judge Alley had sustained a motion to dismiss the felony count in the bill which charged assault with intent to commit rape. He held the state had not presented sufficient evidence to sustain such a charge, but declined to dismiss the entire case, holding that the lesser assault count should be submitted to the jury.

Judge Alley, after the verdict was announced, said from the bench that the defendant had been cleared of the charge by the verdict of the jury. He announced that in his opinion the verdict was right and proper in the light of the evidence presented.

Judge Makes Comment

"There should be no criticism of anyone in connection with the handling of the case," he said. "I want to say right here that I think Sheriff Laurence Brown has the most efficient sheriff's department in the state. I find in presiding here and elsewhere in the state that the investigations by his department are most thorough and that the cases they present are better prepared than anywhere I have been.

"I want to say also that there should be no criticism of the young girl who brought the charges that were tried in this case. She felt that she had need of the protection of the courts, and it was necessary for her to be heard and to have the matter cleared up. There is no reflection of any kind on her or on the officers who made this investigation. It was the kind of thing that should have been investigated, and I commend the officers for their interest and zeal in making this investigation.

"I want to say also that I think the solicitor is to be commended for the way he presented the case. It was something that had to be handled carefully and thoroughly.

"I was deeply impressed by the way the leading citizens of the community came to the defense of the defendant in this case, to testify as to his character and works.

"I say there should be no lingering criticism because as the trial progressed counsel for both sides may have gone a little far in presenting their contentions. That was natural but it must now be forgotten. The defendant is cleared and like a blanket of snow falls the mantle of innocence about his shoulders."

After the directed verdict of not guilty in the three remaining cases had been ordered, Mr. Compton arose from his chair where he had been sitting with counsel and a group of friends and went over and shook hands with members of the jury thanking them briefly for the verdict they had just returned.

Rev. L. B. Compton Is Reinstated As Head Of Eliada Orphanage

Ash. Times 11-4-43

At a special meeting and election of the advisory board of the Eliada Orphanage and Rescue Work, Inc., yesterday at Eliada orphanage, the Rev. L. B. Compton, founder, who resigned as president and general manager on June 17 pending investigation and trial on indictments in Buncombe superior court, was reinstated in the offices formerly held by him.

The board, consisting of Walter Smathers, Ottis Green Mayor L. Lyons Lee, Mrs. Compton and Miss Grace Green of Asheville and Dr. D. E. Allred of Greensboro, met at 2 p. m. and the first business of the body was acceptance of the resignation of Miss Green, who has been acting as president and general manager since last June.

The resignation of Mr. Compton came last June after he had been indicted by a Buncombe grand jury on four counts of assault on minor females of the institution with intent to commit rape. Trial of the cases was continued four times and, after the state called one of the cases in the October criminal term and some evidence had been heard, Judge Felix E. Alley, presiding judge, granted a defense motion to strike out the felony charge and evidence was continued as to simple assault. The jury returned a verdict of not guilty as to this charge and Judge Alley ordered verdicts of not guilty as to the other three cases.

Miss Green presided at the meeting yesterday afternoon and Mayor Lee acted as secretary. Miss Green returned today to her former post as secretary to Mr. Compton and to the orphanage. The following resolutions were passed by the board:

"Whereas, on the seventeenth day of June, 1943, Mr. L. B. Compton, president of the Eliada Orphanage and Rescue Work, Inc., requested to be relieved of the office of president and general manager of the corporation, pending investigations and until same should be completed; and,

REV. L. B. COMPTON

Acquitted In All Cases

"Whereas, at the October term, 1943, of the superior court of Buncombe county, verdicts were returned in all indictments against L. B. Compton, acquitting him of all charges made therein, and

"Whereas, the result of said verdict was a complete vindication of said L. B. Compton, the following is introduced and offered by Ottis Green, seconded by W. G. Smathers,

"Resolved, that the resignation of Miss Green as temporary president and general manager of the Eliada Orphanage and Rescue Work, Incorporated, be and the same is hereby accepted.

"Resolved further, that the said L. B. Compton be and he is reinstated in the office formerly held by him, to-wit, as president and general manager."

Mr. Compton was returned by a unanimous vote to his former full charge of the Eliada orphanage and received a hearty welcome from his board and associates at the orphanage, it was reported by board members.

Following the reinstatement of Mr. Compton, the annual board meeting of the Eliada Orphanage and Rescue Work, Inc., was called to order by Mr. Compton.

The following members were added to the advisory board:

Tom Black, trust officer of the Wachovia Bank and Trust company; E. E. Connor, superintendent of the Buncombe welfare department; Dr. P. B. Orr; the Rev. J. R. Owen, pastor of the French Broad Avenue Baptist church; Ned Wheeler of the Ned Wheeler Brokerage vompany; Mrs. W. M. Smathers and Mrs. Dewey Holland.

The advisory board and visiting committee for Faith Cottage Home for Girls was announced as follows:

Mrs. J. R. Owen, Mrs. Dewey Holland, the Rev. Reid Lunsford and Dr. P. B. Orr.

REV. L. B. COMPTON

Death Takes L. B. Compton, Eliada Head

Minister Founded Orphanage And Faith Cottage

The Rev. Lucius B. Compton, 73, president and founder of Eliada Orphanage, Inc., died about 4:30 p. m. yesterday in an Asheville hospital.

He had been in declining health for several months and failed rapidly following a major operation performed last Tuesday.

Mr. Compton was born in Haywood County and resided there until he was 15 years old. As a young man, he suffered from two infirmities, a crippled knee and stuttering speech. When he was about 20 years old, he was converted in a Cincinnati rescue mission and the speech impediment disappeared. In later years, he became widely sought after as a speaker.

Eliada Orphanage housed five children in 1906, when Mr. Compton established it. At present, there are some 68 children in the home [illegible] as people have grown to maturity under his guidance. 12-14-48

The orphanage was founded before the day of compulsory school attendance laws, and Mr. Compton literally took children off the streets to educate them. He went into debt by rewarding attendance with tickets for good clothing.

Mr. Compton also founded Faith Cottage, home for unmarried mothers, in Asheville. An institution approved by the North Carolina Welfare Department, it has cared for more than 2,000 girls. Under his supervision the cottage has been enlarged three times to its present size of 40 rooms.

Mr. Compton's friends point out the countless times that "faith" had seen him through tight financial straits. They said he never asked for donations but usually received them as the need arose in his work. 12-14-48

Several years ago, an adequate water supply was a pressing need of the orphanage. His faith that this $2,000 to $3,000 project would materialize was rewarded when a donor mailed him a check from Alabama. Ash. Cit.

Faith Cottage was founded by Mr. Compton after an unmarried girl came to his door one night in desperate need. He cared for her and soon others came. With his last $50, he took an option on property where he wished to build the cottage, not knowing from what source the rest of the money would come. Several days later, he was preparing to leave Boston after a speaking engagement. He counted the money donated at the meeting and found that he had train fare back to Asheville and enough left over to begin his work.

Some seven years ago, he stood on a site at the orphanage and expressed a hope of building a baby cottage. This $50,000 structure is nearing completion.

Although he had almost no formal education, Mr. Compton was known as an outstanding Bible scholar. He was a jolly host, and when his prize herd of Guernseys or the crops on his farms were mentioned, he talked with the hearty enthusiasm of the farmer or stock showman.

To youngsters at the home and to many of his other friends, he was known as "Dad." A former student at the home, Miss Stella Stevens, now a nurse in a Veterans Administration hospital in Atlanta, Ga., was here on leave as one of his three special nurses.

In May, 1947, he was elected president of the International Union of Gospel Missions. In accordance with his wishes, the organization is scheduled to hold its convention here May 14-16, 1949.

Survivors include the widow, the former Miss Edith Van Dusen of Painted Post, N. Y.; a daughter, Miss Elizabeth Compton, and two brothers, James Compton of Greenville, S. C., and Tom Compton of Hazelwood.

Funeral arrangements, under the direction of Morris-Gearing-Black Funeral Home, were incomplete last night.

Death Claims Compton, Eliada Orphanage Head

More than 1,000 "sons" and "daughters" today mourned the Rev. Lucius B. Compton, 73, president and founder of Eliada Orphanage, Inc., and founder of Faith Cottage for unwed mothers.

The widely known minister who devoted his life to the less fortunate children of his community died about 4:30 p. m. yesterday.

COMPTON

He had been in declining health for several months and failed rapidly following a major operation a week ago.

For the many boys and girls whose lives had been touched by Mr. Compton as they passed through the orphanage or Cottage on their way to maturity, "Dad" was gone. And their loss was great.

For without "Dad" many of them might have lived out their days in poverty, misery, degredation and crime.

It was "Dad" who gave them what he so often said he had relied on in his journey through life—faith.

Mr. Compton was born in Haywood County and resided there until he was 15 years old. As a young man he suffered from two infirmities, a crippled knee and stuttering speech. When he was about 20, he was converted in a Cincinnati rescue mission and the speech impediment disappeared. In later years, he became a popular speaker.

Eliada Orphanage was established in 1906 and in its first year housed five children. At present there are 68 children in the home and more than 1,000 children have grown up in it.

Faith Cottage was founded by Mr. Compton after an unmarried expectant mother came to his door one night in desperate need. He cared for her and soon others came. Since then some 2,000 girls have been helped through that trying period in their lives and the Cottage has been approved by the North Carolina Welfare Department.

The orphanage was founded before the day of compulsory school attendance laws and Mr. Compton literally took children off the streets to educate them. He knew the value of education as he had had no formal education and was taught to read and write by his first wife.

His friends say they know of countless times when faith had seen him through tight financial straits. They say he never asked for donations but usually received them as the need arose.

Several years ago, an adequate water supply was a pressing need of the orphanage. His faith that the $2,000 or $3,000 project would materialize was rewarded when a donor mailed him a check from Alabama.

Wishing to build Faith Cottage, he used his last $150 to take an option on property and took a train for Boston to keep a speaking engagement. After the Boston meeting, he counted the money donated and discovered he had enough to begin his project.

Through the years, Mr. Compton became an outstanding Bible scholar. He was a jolly host, and when his prize herd of Guernseys or the crops on his farms were mentioned, he talked with all the enthusiasm of a farmer or stockman.

A former resident of the home, Miss Stella Stevens, now a nurse in a Veterans Administration hospital in Atlanta, was here on leave as one of three special nurses with Mr. Compton during the past week.

He is survived by his wife, the former Miss Edith Van Dusen of Painted Post, N. Y.; a daughter, Miss Elizabeth Compton, and two brothers, James Compton of Greenville, S. C., and Tom Compton of Hazelwood.

Celebrating a Century of Service to the Community

The Old Main

A Century of Caring

Residential Services for Adolescents

Residential Treatment

The Residential Treatment Program serves high-risk youth in need of intensive residential care and treatment for behavioral and emotional issues. Girls and boys are housed in separate on-campus residences while receiving services that include individual and group therapy, therapeutic recreation activities, and life skills training. Clients attend Horizons Academy, Eliada's on-campus school, and participate in community service activities.

Youth with the most severe emotional and behavioral problems stay in Lions Residence, the first Medicaid Level IV Residential Treatment Facility in Western North Carolina. This secure facility serves nine girls and boys with the greatest need for comprehensive behavioral health services. It helps to ensure that children in our area experiencing severe/acute mental health problems remain in the community, often avoiding in-patient psychiatric hospitalization or detention.

Reynolds (Level II) Program

The Reynolds program offers Level II mental health treatment for adolescents from 14-18 years of age. Young men and women live on campus and work on achievement of mental health goals while acquiring independent living skills. Kids pursue educational goals and receive training in living skills including job interviewing and conflict resolution. Eliada staff work closely with Mental Health and Department of Social Services representatives to ensure success for each client while at Eliada and when independent.

Community Day Treatment

Residential and community clients attend Horizons Academy for a comprehensive educational and day treatment program. Middle to high school age students unable to attend public school receive services designed to facilitate smooth transitions from the Academy to the community. A strong educational program combined with community living skills provides students with the tools for success at Eliada and beyond.

Child Development Center (Day Care, Summer Camp, School Age Care)

Eliada's 3-star rated Child Development Center (CDC) prides itself on its family-oriented, child-centered philosophy. Children from birth through 12 years of age are served in a safe, caring environment where learning is designed to be developmentally appropriate and geared towards the unique needs of each child. The CDC enjoys a reputation for childcare excellence in Western North Carolina: its Day Care program was voted "Best in WNC" in 2001 by the readers of the Asheville Citizen-Times, and the School Age Program was awarded a prestigious 5-star rating.

Therapeutic Foster Care

Eliada offers therapeutic foster care for children from birth to eighteen years of age who need to live away from their biological families and require their therapeutic, case management and mental health services.

Family Foster Care

Eliada's Family Foster Care Program is designed to provide homes and therapeutic services for children from birth to 18 years of age temporarily living away from their natural homes. Services enhance the well-being of children and families by attending to the needs of the child, foster family and natural family.

In-Home Family Services

Eliada's In-Home Family Services Program offers intensive, home-based services to families with young children in an effort to prevent family dissolution. Family advocates work to enhance the well being of children by strengthening family functioning, providing services in the dignity and safety of the home.

THERAPEUTIC RECREATION SERVICES

TASC (Therapeutic Animal Stewardship Cooperative)

TASC combines three therapeutic elements: animal assisted therapy, community service and land stewardship. The program's animal family is composed of ten horses and numerous cats, rabbits, goats and a donkey, many of them with their own histories of abuse and neglect. Program participants, all adolescents with emotional and behavioral problems, build confidence and self-esteem in their knowledge and in their ability to care for the animals. TASC is a holistic program that challenges children and animals to overcome fears and to care deeply for and connect with other living creatures.

High Adventure Recreation

Eliada's kids also enjoy opportunities for high adventure recreation, including rock-climbing, caving, and ropes courses.

The Beginning . . .

Faith Cottage -- the first shelter set up in North Carolina exclusively for unwed mothers. As a young street preacher, Dr. Compton became aware of the need of many young, unwed mothers for a safe home. With his last fifty dollars he chose property on which to build a home, not knowing where the rest of the money would come from. Thus began a ministry of faith which is the present day Eliada Homes for Children and Families.

THE NEW PERSONALITY OF THE WEEK

By TOM CUSHING

W. Ash. News 12-10-43

EDWIN ERWIN CONNER

One day recently Edwin Erwin Conner, Superintendent of Public Welfare for Buncombe County and Asheville, walked out of his office into the hall. There he met a woman of middle age.

"Hello, Mr. Conner," she said. "You don't remember me, do you?"

"I certainly do." And Mr. Conner called her by name. "How are you getting along?"

"Doing pretty well; but I've come to you again for help."

The woman was the mother of four children. About ten years ago she had been in most unfortunate circumstances and under the "Mother's Aid" program followed by the Welfare Department in those days Mr. Conner had been called upon to help this fine family. Now all four children were grown.

"We'll be glad to do anything we can," Mr. Conner told the visitor. "What is it?"

The woman recalled the years of her desperate need, and how the local welfare agency had met that need. "Now," she added, "my oldest boy is a sergeant in North Africa. My second boy is in service, and expects to go over any day. My oldest daughter is working on a good job, and the youngest is about through school. So I'm not tied down.

"Back in the hard times my government helped me rear my children to be fine men and women. I appreciate what you people did for me. I want to show that appreciation rather than tell it; and so I've joined the WAC's. This new help I need from you, Mr. Conner, is a letter of recommendation to go with my enlistment papers."

o o o o

That little true story is one of the things that make E. E. Conner, newly elected president of the West Asheville Men's Club, glad that he is Superintendent of Public Welfare. He very frankly says that when he stopped being a county school principal to take over the welfare job back in 1929, the salary he'd draw had almost everything to do with his decision. But Edwin Conner and the welfare job have grown up together, and in Buncombe county they have grown together, until the name Conner and Public Welfare mean the same thing. Such gestures of appreciation as that grateful woman made bring a lot of satisfaction to the man and the department which he heads.

It is remarkable that E. E. Conner would remember the name of a woman whose family his office aided ten years ago. Especially when many thousands of such people had called on his office during the past 14 years. But then, Edwin E. Conner is a remarkable man in many ways. As the head of an organization which employed only two people when he assumed management but has grown to employ more than twenty office and field workers, Conner could not be expected to give his personal attention to the hundreds of people who contact the office. And yet I have it on good authority that he never refuses to see anyone who asks for him personally, unless perchance it is a case with which he is familiar and knows it does not come under the jurisdiction of his office. The day I called on him a woman from out in the county asked to see him just before I arrived to keep my appointment; and for thirty minutes Mr. Conner listened most sympathetically to the woman, even though he knew there was nothing his office could do to help her. I was happy to wait, for this was a chance to see for myself the kindliness with which all such cases are considered.

Under E. E. Conner's direction, every office employee of Public Welfare is courteous and considerate; but then, that is another story and deserves a headline all its own.

Edwin Erwin Conner was born at Mars Hill, in Madison county. He attended public school there and at Orange street school in Asheville. He did college work at Mars Hill, followed by one year at Wake Forest; and he graduated at North Carolina U. in 1907. He is a member of the Kiwanis Club, Hominy Lodge No. 491, Masons, and the West Asheville Men's Club. He has long been a member of the Acton Methodist church.

Two years after graduation Conner married Miss Elva Crowell. Their children are Crowell Conner, 32, who works at Enka; Ruth (Mrs. F. J.) Greenwood, of Puyallup, Wash.; and Edwina, named for her father, is a graduate of N. C. Woman's College and secretary to the county health officer. There are two grandchildren: Peggy Conner, 10, and Betty Greenwood, 2.

E. E. Conner worked in the educational field until he assumed his present position. He taught school in Madison county and at Youngsville and Franklinton, N. C. For nearly 20 years he taught in Buncombe schools, having served as principal at Sand Hill, Candler, Fairview, and Sandy Mush.

Knowing that he had interviewed as many as 50 people a day himself during the tremendous pressure days of the depression, I asked him if the work of his office had fallen off so much now that there seems to be plenty of employment. He answered that it had; that now the welfare department could do a normal, hard day's work from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and give each case the careful attention it deserved, instead of hurrying through an impossible schedule at a high tension which made it neglect small but often important details.

over

Pack Memorial Public Library

The Conner family lives on the Enka highway, and after office hours E. E. Conner has found time to buddy up with his son on their mutual hobby, farming. "Keeping out of doors with growing things has been good for me," he said. "I've gained weight and never felt better in my life." He smiled, the same quiet, sincere smile with which he had greeted every visitor to his office.

After 14 years of hearing nothing much but tales of misfortune and often unreasonable complaints from thousands of people, the Conner smile is a sure guarantee that our Welfare job has the right man, the West Asheville Men's Club has the right president, and Asheville has the right kind of citizen in the person of Edwin Erwin Conner .

E. E. CONNOR, WELFARE HEAD, DIES AT HOME

Ash. Times - 6-4-46

County Superintendent Since 1930 Had Been Ill For Eight Weeks.

E. E. Connor, superintendent of welfare in Buncombe county since 1930, died last night at his home on Sand Hill road. He had been ill for eight weeks following a heart attack.

Funeral arrangements were incomplete today. Dunn and Groce funeral directors are in charge.

Mr. Connor was first stricken while standing in a field on his farm with a member of his family. He was taken immediately to his home and a physician summoned. His condition was considered critical for several days and then, with the determination and fortitude which were characteristic, he fought slowly back toward health until about two weeks ago when he appeared strong enough to lead to the belief that he would be able to return to his office.

Suffered Series Of Attacks

He then suffered a series of attacks that again rendered his condition critical and it soon became apparent that he was losing a gallant fight.

Mr. Connor is survived by the widow, Mrs. Elva Crowell Connor; two daughters, Miss Edwina Connor, who lived at his home, and Mrs. Fred Greenwood, of Puyallup, Wash.; one son, Crowell E. Connor; one brother, Hubert Connor, of Birmingham, Ala.; two sisters, Mrs. Charles Hendrix, of Asheville, and Mrs. John Smith, of Mars Hill, and four granddaughters.

Born at Mars Hill, in Madison county, Mr. Connor was educated in the public schools, at Mars Hill college, Wake Forest college, and the University of North Carolina where he was graduated in 1907.

Two years after his graduation, he married Miss Elva Crowell.

He had what amounted to two careers, one in education and one in welfare work. His work in education came first, for shortly after his graduation he took up school teaching, serving in the school systems of Madison county, and at Youngsville and Franklinton, before coming to the Buncombe county system. In Buncombe he taught for some 20 years, serving as principal at Sandy Mush, Fairview, Candler, and Sand Hill schools.

It was shortly after he took over the task of managing the welfare service in Buncombe county on January 1, 1930, that the depression struck and for several years a tremendous load rested on his shoulders. His tact and patience during these trying years, coupled with his characteristic hard common sense and unfailing sympathy for those unfortunate, made him one of the most valued welfare executives in the state.

Many Touching Stories

There are hundreds of touching human interest stories to be told about the relations of Mr. Connor and those whom he served faithfully no matter how humble.

During later years Mr. Connor found escape from the drudgery of his job, although it was never drudgery for him, by watching the development of his farm on Sand Hill road. He was a practical farmer and a good manager and he was not afraid to work hard.

Many of his friends felt that the only way he kept from being crushed by the constant trampling demand of so many who needed so much, was his ability to get out on his farm in the few spare hours he had, and give what energy he had left to the trees and other growing things he loved.

Mr. Connor had a rule in his office that he never refused to see anyone, who asked to see him personally, and many afternoons found him working overtime to interview those who had insisted on seeing "Mr. Connor" because they had faith that in spite of rules, regulations and red tape, he would manage somehow to touch and solve their own personal problems. Many times he was able to do just that by figuring a new approach or some move that would offer an unexpectedly satisfactory solution.

For many years Mr. Connor was a devoted member of the Acton Methodist church. He served at one time as president of the West Asheville Men's club. He had been honored many times in his profession as welfare superintendent and was held in high esteem in the state by those officials with whom he worked.

Religious community comes together on terror anniversary

By Dale Neal
STAFF WRITER

ASHEVILLE — This Wednesday, when many churchgoers will mourn for the more than 3,000 lives lost last Sept. 11, the Rev. Buddy Corbin will remember one name in particular.

"Eric Cranford was the guy who did everything right," recalled Corbin, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church in West Asheville.

When Corbin was a pastor in Drexel, he baptized Cranford into the faith. He watched Eric grow up in his church and advance through Boy Scouts. He followed Cranford's career through N.C. State University and then through the Navy where Cranford became a decorated helicopter pilot during the Gulf War. At age 32, Lt. Cmdr. Cranford looked forward to getting out of the military and coming back home to Burke County.

"Eric was minding his own business one bright fall day, sitting in the Pentagon," Corbin said.

But that day happened to be Sept. 11, and Cranford was among the lives lost in the terrorist attacks on the Pentagon, the World Trade Center and the airplane that crashed in a remote Pennsylvania field.

Churches and faith groups will mark the anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks and mourn those lives lost on Wednesday, a traditional night of prayer meetings for many Protestant denominations.

Corbin and Calvary Baptist had thought of inviting Cranford's family to join the Calvary congregation for a special service Wednesday.

◆ SATURDAY: RELIGION

For more on Religion, see page D3.

But then during phone conversations, Corbin realized Cranford's grief-stricken parents were dreading the anniversary. "They're going to be hunkering down, trying to get through this," he said. "They've had to suffer through a constant barrage of invitations to be at patriotic events. They're good Christian people. They love their country, but they loved their son more."

Instead of a service with patriotic flourishes, Corbin and Calvary plan a quiet service. "We will have a time of prayer with some singing," he said.

From reflective readings and quiet music to patriotic honor guards and salutes to local firefighters, police and rescue workers, churches will approach the anniversary in many ways.

Some churches can rely on ancient liturgy. At Holy Trinity Greek Orthodox Church in Montford, the Rev. Stavros Akrontirianakis will led the centuries-old Paraklesis, or Service of Supplication at 7 p.m. Wednesday. "This was written to be prayed in times of sorrow and distress and will be chanted in Orthodox churches around the world at times like 9/11," said Akrontirianakis.

At Tried Stone Missionary Baptist Church, Elder Alfred Blount wants his congregation to reflect, perhaps in a moment of silence and remembrance on Wednesday night. "We may have a time to give our members a chance to express how their feeling. It's been a year now," Blount said. "People are wondering where are we at this point? Do we let what happened last year get us down, or is time to pick up the pieces and move on?"

Others want to show their faith in their neighbors as well, even those of different beliefs from their own. An interfaith service will be held at 8:45 a.m. Wednesday at Pritchard Park, as Christians, Jews, Muslims, Bahais, Buddhists, Pagans and others will share a common affirmation, since no single prayer applies to all faiths.

Jews are in the midst of the High Holy Days, the holiest part of their calendar. Rather than hold their own special service, Congregation Beth Ha-Tephila will join the interfaith gathering, said Rabbi Robert Ratner. "We wanted to show our support in the larger community."

Local pastor apologizes for Katrina comments

By Andre A. Rodriguez
STAFF WRITER

ASHEVILLE — The Rev. Buddy Corbin hopes his rash response to the situation of those left stranded in the floodwaters in New Orleans can serve as a lesson about responding to fear.

The Sept. 4 edition of Calvary Baptist Church's "Crosspoints" newsletter contains a message from Corbin in which he wrote that people who ignored evacuation orders and remained in the path of Katrina were "hard-heads," "pig-headed" and "stupid."

Buddy Corbin

Reached at home on Friday, Corbin admitted that his remarks were thoughtless and harsh, and said he regrets the newsletter was printed with the insensitive commentary. He said he was responding to the fear he felt for the people he saw suffering on television.

"Sometimes those of us who have distance from something that's going on can think, 'Why don't people just get up and go?'" he said. "It makes me sad that I reacted too quickly based on my abilities to (evacuate)."

Corbin said he would discuss the devastation of Hurricane Katrina with his congregation on Sunday. He said Calvary Baptist would hold services with the lights and air conditioning turned off to show the church's unity with the people affected by the destruction.

THE ASHEVILLE CITIZEN, ASHEVILLE, N. C., FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1932

TWO CHOSEN IN AUDITION HERE

Miss Wilma Corne And Robert Cochrane Are Contest Winners

Miss Wilma Corne, 70 Brownwood avenue, West Asheville, and Robert Cochrane, 21 Longview avenue, West Asheville, were declared winners yesterday afternoon in the sixth Asheville audition of the Atwater Kent Foundation at the First Presbyterian church. They will compete in the state audition in Raleigh next month.

Second places, or alternates, were awarded Miss Hilda Kille, 28 Balm Grove avenue, West Asheville, and Leno Solary, 25 Fulton street. Miss Kille and Mr. Solary will be entered in the state contest in the event Miss Corne or Mr. Cochrane, for any reason, are unable to attend. Eight young men and five young women participated in the audition yesterday, which was managed by Charles E. Burnham, city chairman for the foundation.

Others Taking Part

Other participants in the Asheville audition were: Mary Candler, Elinor Lorick and Gussie Southers among the young women, and the following young men: Conrad Williams, Charles Trumbo, Sam Fox, Franklyn B. Neal, Roy Wilson and Crockett Richardson.

Judges were not announced. They sat behind a screen and singers were introduced to them by numbers. Each singer and accompanist performed in the Sunday school room of the church, while judges listened from behind screens under the balcony. Singers were introduced to the judges by Mr. Burnham, numbers being used instead of names as each singer appeared in two selections.

Mr. Cochrane is the son of Mrs. Minnie Cochrane. He has charge of programs and is announcer at radio station WWNC. Mr. Cochrane won first place in the Atwater Kent audition for Durham two years ago while a student at Duke university. He is a student of Mrs. N. F. Reiner, Marlboro road, Lake View park.

Is High School Graduate

Miss Corne is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. T. Coane. She graduated from Asheville high school four years ago. She is a student of Alva Tyler Duval, who has established a studio at 8 1-2 Wall street.

Miss Kille is a student of Mrs. H. B. Harmon, 40 Orchard street. She graduated from Asheville high school in 1926. Mr. Solary is the son of Mrs. L. J. Solary. He is also a student of Mrs. Harmon.

Any amateur singer between the ages of 18 and 25 was eligible to sing in the audition. The foundation's aim in the district state and national auditions is to discover America's most promising young voices and to provide vocally talented young men and women with opportunities for recognition, advancement and reward, Mr. Burnham explained at the audition. A number of friends of singers heard the audition. Not even members of the audience were allowed to see the judges, however.

Win Atwater Kent Audition Here

Miss Wilma Corne, 70 Brownwood avenue, West Asheville, left, and Robert Cochrane, radio station WWNC announcer, were declared winners of the two Asheville sections of the Atwater Kent Foundation audition yesterday afternoon at the First Presbyterian church. They won over five girls and eight boys, and will compete in the state audition in Raleigh next month.

Go To State Finals

Mr. Cochrane and Miss Corne will represent Asheville at the state finals in October. The two state winners will advance to the district contest which will include singers from 10 states. The district victors, five young men and five young women, will compete in the finals in New York City. First place winners in the men's and women's divisions will be given $5,000 each; second place winners will receive $1,000 each; and the remaining six finalists will be awarded $500 each.

Miss Alice Herman and Lawrence King were winners of the Asheville audition last year. They did not reach the district event. Although past winners were eligible to compete again, both Miss Herman and Mr. King were ineligible because they were beyond the age limit for auditions.

The state audition was held here two years ago. It was announced yesterday that winners will be notified soon as to the exact date of the state audition next month. In 1927, Ben Deloache, an Asheville singer, went to the national finals in New York and was awarded second place. He entered the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

A QUICK-PACED FOLK EVENT

Youth Jamboree Swings In

By DURELL BULLOCK
Citizen Staff Writer

The string tempo of mountain folk music with a foot-stomping beat keynoted the 12th annual renewal Wednesday night of the Mountain Youth Jamboree in City Auditorium.

The quick-stepping pace was set only minutes after the curtain was drawn on the 1960 premier performance by singer Carolyn Penley, a Eugene Rankin elementary grade student who rocked through "He's Got The Whole World In His Arms" before a microphone as tall as herself.

Competition, however, was concentrated on seven dance teams which paraded their talents before five judges and an appreciative audience for the right to compete in their respective divisions in Saturday night's finals. Elementary, junior and senior high school dancers twirled on a special platform Wednesday night.

When it was all over, judges pointed to their choices. Clinchfield Elementary School square dancers were named first in their division, over entrants from McKee of Cullowhee and Randolph Schools. Black Mountain Junior High dancers took first place in that category, edging out teams from Marion and McKee Schools.

Lee Edwards of Asheville was named first place winner in the senior high competition, defeating East Yancey High School dancers. Each of the first place winners Wednesday advance to Saturday's contest.

A folk dance team from Malvern Hills Community Club also performed in the junior high folk division.

Sandwiched between the dances was an array of individual talent which roamed from one three-year-old singer from West Asheville, Sammy Cowan, to instrumental duets of guitar and banjo. Each performer sat at the rear of the stage, awaiting his unexpected turn at the microphone at center-stage on the signal of Hubert Hayes, Jamboree originator.

The event, dedicated to the preservation of mountain song dance, is sponsored by the Asheville Junior Chamber of Commerce in cooperation with Hayes. The show will continue each night through Saturday in the auditorium, beginning nightly at 7:15 p.m. with the exception of the finals, which begin at 7 o'clock.

Thursday night's lineup includes elementary square dance teams from Emma and Mars Hill schools, and folk teams from Pleasant Gardens and Mars Hill. Junior high square dance competition will be between Hall Fletcher and Swannanoa, and senior high square dancers will come from Valley Springs and Owen. One team in each division will advance to the Saturday night finals. The Thursday competition will include individual performers also.

Judges for the Wednesday night phase were C. O. Deas of Asheville, B. C. Wilson of Biltmore, Buss Fletcher and Lowry Gudger of Enka and Cecil Briggs of Arden in the square dance category. Joe DeNardo, Mrs. William Peeke and Ed Benson of Asheville in the talent division; and Mrs. Beale Fletcher, Mrs. Alice Weaver and Mrs. F. Pierce Carter of Asheville in the folk dancing phase.

CRESON TO BEGIN PASTORAL DUTIES

Presbyterians To Hear New Pastor In West Asheville Today

The Rev. W. F. Creson of Crowley, La., who arrived in Asheville Friday with Mrs. Creson, will preach the first sermon of his new pastoral charge at the West Asheville Presbyterian church this morning at 11 o'clock. The new pastor will also fill the pulpit at the evening services.

The Rev. Mr. Creson with Mrs. Creson and their three children will make their home in Brucemont Circle, West Asheville, where the new parsonage is located.

The new pastor was called at a congregational meeting held at the church shortly after he visited West Asheville during the Southern Presbyterian Conference at Montreat this year. While here, the congregation invited him to preach at the church, and he did so. Later, after he was called, notice of his acceptance which has been granted by the Louisiana Presbytery, was wired the church officials.

Well Known

One of the best known ministers in the Southern Presbytery, the Rev. Mr. Creson has had a wide and varied field of pastoral work to cover during the past several years. He was ordained to the ministry by the Louisiana Presbytery on October 8, 1908, and was engaged in Home Mission work until the spring of 1911. In June of that year he was called to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian church at Port Gibson, Miss., where he spent nine years. In April, 1920, he was called to the First Presbyterian church at Ocala, Fla., where he spent almost six years as pastor.

In June, 1926, he became pastor of the First Presbyterian church at Crowley, resigning this post to accept the West Asheville church charge. The pastor is now serving his second term as president of the Crowley Rotary club, and has twice represented the club at international conventions. He holds a Master's Degree from the Southwestern Presbyterian University, now located at Memphis, Tenn., and took the complete Theological course at the same institution, graduating with honors and a B. D. degree in the spring of 1908.

Built New Church

An indication of his successful work at the Crowley church, is the erection of a new church which cost $18,000 and is one of the most beautiful structures in the city. While at the Florida church, he was instrumental in the establishment of a church fund which was used for a new building after he had completed his work there.

The Rev. P. N. Gresham, former pastor of the West Asheville church, resigned early this year to accept the pastorate of the First Presbyterian church at Savannah, Ga. Recently he and Mrs. Gresham returned to Savannah after spending their vacation here. The Rev. J. S. Milholland served as supply pastor for several months.

Middlemount Gardens Moving To New Store

Separating Wholesale And Retail Departments Here

"A Shop of Complete Floral Gifts" will be the slogan at the new location of The Flower Shop of Middlemount Gardens, incorporated, 27 Haywood street, which opens for business Monday morning. The uptown store is being moved from 38 Haywood street and an entirely new merchandising plan is to be inaugurated, according to a statement made by the management.

The retail and wholesale departments, which have formerly been operated from the Haywood street store, will be separated and the entire wholesale facilities will be conducted from the greenhouses of the floral firm. The change in business methods has demanded more adequate facilities for the handling of flowers and Otto Buseck, manager, and Max Crohn, secretary, feel that this move will expedite the services on both retail and wholesale orders. In addition, a retail department will be maintained at the greenhouses where customers may place advance orders for holiday flowers and plants, it was pointed out. The greenhouses will be open to the public at all daylight hours, including Sunday, and a cordial invitation has been extended the public to visit at any time. The Flower Shop will feature a large and varied line of flower and plant containers as well as a complete line of cut flowers and plants for immediate delivery.

MAX CROHN

The Middlemount greenhouses are located on route 10, the Canton highway, about 5 miles from the city. There is plenty of parking space off the highway for visitors.

Immense Greenhouses Of Middlemount Gardens

According to Max H. Crohn, general manager of Middlemount Gardens and The Flower Shop, on Haywood street, they expect one of the largest flower seasons of the past several years. While not as plentiful this year, indications are that blooms of many varieties will be more perfect.

FLOWER SHOP RIOT OF COLOR

Middlemount Greenhouse Also Invites Public Out

Now that the frost has about destroyed all the flowers in your yard, there is no reason you should be without them during the fall and winter months.

The Flower Shop of Middlemount Gardens, 29 Haywood street, are showing hundreds of the fall flowers and they are beautifully displayed in the windows of the retail store.

Many new and rare plants never before shown in Asheville are on display at both The Flower Shop and at the Middlemount greenhouses. Dish gardens, and plants for them are here in profusion. They are most acceptable for gifts or for your own home.

Max H. Crohn, manager for both The Flower Shop and Middlemount Gardens greenhouses, is enthusiastic about the outlook for flowers for the coming season. Mr. Crohn said, "While flowers this year will not be as plentiful as in some years past, the blooms are more perfect as to coloring and shape than I have seen them in some time."

To insure perfect service, Middlemount Gardens have both the retail store and the greenhouses. It is a magnificent sight at the greenhouses this time of year and the public is cordially invited to come out and see the thousands of 'mums' and other flowers in bloom. It is only about five miles out to the greenhouses through West Asheville on routes 19 and 23. Mrs. Otto Buseck is always at the greenhouses, and it will be her pleasure to welcome you.

Nothing adds more to the home than beautiful flowers, whether they are potted plants or cut flowers and the most excellent varieties shown at The Flower Shop and Middlemount Gardens makes it easy to choose for gifts or your own home.

Flowers are priced more reasonable this year, it is said, than at any

POTTED PLANTS FOR THE HOME

Now Is Time To Make Ready With Bright Flowers

According to Max Crohn, general manager of Middlemount Gardens and The Flower Shop this is the time of the year to be getting your sunshine flower garden ready. In other words make ready for the plants for the interior of your home that do so much to brighten things.

They have on display all the plants that you will want for your home. One in particular that has a strong appeal is the self branching ivy in pots. Mr. Crohn reports that the florist association says this plant is most popular in thousands of homes throughout Europe.

Football season is at hand and of course everyone knows that "mums" go with football. The Flower Shop is showing the seasons first in the windows and the selection is unusual.

Out flowers in profusion for every occasion are always on hand at this popular store and prices are as low as will be found anywhere. Mr. Crohn still insists that flowers are not expensive and invites the public in at any time to find out for themselves.

MISS CORNELIA VANDERBILT WEDS ENGLISH DIPLOMAT IN BEAUTIFUL CEREMONY AT ALL SOUL'S CHURCH

Brilliant Assemblage of Notables Present at Marriage Solemnized at Noon.

Bride Was Given in Marriage by Her Mother--Heir to Vanderbilt Millions.

SIMPLE EPISCOPAL RITUAL WAS USED

Before a brilliant assemblage of notables from all parts of the world, Miss Cornelia Vanderbilt, only daughter of Mrs. George W. Vanderbilt, was married to Hon. John Francis Amherst Cecil, son of Lord William Cecil and the late Baroness Amherst of Hackney, at noon today in All Souls' church, Biltmore, built some years ago by the bride's father.

The little English village conceived by the late Mr. Vanderbilt as an artistic addition to his extensive estate, Biltmore, was all aglow over the attendant ceremonies. Never before had such a distinguished group of people gathered there for such an auspicious occasion. The church was crowded with invited guests while hundreds of people lingered outside on the village green while the nuptials were being solemnized. Automobiles were parked everywhere and special police were present mingling with the crowds to direct traffic and maintain precaution against undue happenings.

The simple Episcopal marriage ritual was used by the officiating clergymen and the only distinction which marked a difference from the usual church ceremony was the fact that the reading of the banns was performed for three consecutive Sundays prior to the wedding day following the customs in the English church. This custom is rarely performed in America, and in the case of the Vanderbilt-Cecil ceremony, the banns of the church were read for the last time Sunday, before the parish, to complete this preparation ceremony.

Profuse Decorations

The interior of the church was profusely decorated in palms, with white flowers predominating the floral scheme. A mass of dogwood blossoms was banked around the altar at the rear of the sanctuary while along the edges of this particular decoration a beautiful display of azaleas added impressively to the whole plan. White carnations were also used in the general floral decoration. Just in front of the altar, two gigantic Palmetto Palms stood majestically above the smaller palms grouped tastefully around the sanctuary and other parts of the edifice. Candles cast a soft glow around the interior of the church and added a touch of mediaeval elegance to everything their light touched. This was the only artificial light used throughout the ceremony. The altar candles lended a golden radiance to the beautiful flowery background of the sanctuary and brought out in vivid colors the delicate beauty of the blossoms. The dogwood, azalea and other flowers used in the church decorations came from the estate of the Vanderbilt family and their use added a delightful touch of sentiment to the occasion.

Attesting the democratic spirit of both Miss Vanderbilt and her mother was the fact that all of the employes on the Biltmore estate were invited to the wedding and were accorded a special section in one of the transcepts of the church.

Many of them have been employed on the estate for from twenty to thirty-five years.

Wedding March

Mr. Ernest Schelling, of New York, played the Loheng.in wedding march as the bridal party entered the church. During the betrothal and marriage ceremony the strains of "O, Perfect Love" came softly from the organ and after the benediction the seven fold amen, was sung by the full vested choir under the direction of James Alderson, organist of All Soul's.

Miss Vanderbilt entered with her mother, preceded by her maid of honor, Miss Rachel Strong, of Cleveland, Ohio, and two small flower girls, Helen Raoul, daughter of the president of Biltmore Forest Country Club, and Peggy Morgan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Morgan, of Biltmore.

She was accompanied to the altar by her mother, Mrs. Vanderbilt, who gave her in marriage, and Mr. Cecil attended by his best man, Mr. Hugh Tennant, of the British Embassy.

The betrothal ceremony was performed by Rev. A. G. Branwell Bennett, rector of All Soul's. The bride's uncle, the Reverend George Grenville Merrill, M. A. B. D., Oxen, of Stockbridge, Mass., solemnized the marriage and wore during the service a decoration conferred upon him by King Alexander, of Servia, it being the Order of the Cross of Merry for Dr. Merrill's service in Servia during the world war.

Right Reverand Junius M. Horner, Bishop of Western North Carolina pronounced the blessing.

The Bridesmaids

The eight bridesmaids included Miss Margaret Cecil, first cousin of the groom, England, Miss Muriel Vanderbilt, cousin of the bride, New York; Miss Louise Ross Todd of Louisville, Ky., niece of Madame Hauge, widow of the Norwegian minister to the United States; Miss Augusta McCagg, a cousin of the bride, and Miss Helen Moran of New York; Miss Caroline Story, Washington; Miss Rebecca Smith, Boston, and Miss Alyne Reynolds, Biltmore, N. C.

The eight ushers were largely of the small group of young diplomats known in Washington as the British bachelors who have dwelt together on Sixteenth Street. They were Captain F. L. Tottenham, R. N. Leander McCormick-Goodhart, Harold Sims, Geoffrey Thompson, all of the British Embassy; Somerville Tuck of the State Department, Washington; John Francis Brown, of Providence, R. I., cousin of the bride; Robert Cecil, cousin of the groom, and Benjamin Bernard of Winston-Salem.

Following an old English custom, as the bridal party came out of the church, forty-four children of the Biltmore Estate formed a double aisle down the lawn crossing branches of delicate spring blossoms overhead forming an arch for the wedding party to pass through.

The bride's gown was white satin, very straight, with long sleeves. Her bridal veil of tulle which was worn over the face when entering the church being four yards long. It was caught with orange blossoms from the Florida plantation of Mr C. D. Beadle, superintendent of Biltmore Estate. She carried a bridal bouquet of orchids and lilies of the valley made by the local florist, Middlemount Gardens. Her white satin slippers were ornamented each with a single orange blossom.

The maid of honor wore a Lanvin model of white organdie in bouffante style with very full skirt. Her large white Crin hat was trimmed with one yellow arum lily.

Japanese Silk

In striking contrast to the full fashioned gown of the maid of honor, the bridesmaids' gowns of soft green flowered Japanese silk were very narrow and straight. The tops were all white and almost sleeveless. Very small cloche untrimmed hats of white horsehair were worn. All of the attendants wore white kid shoes rimmed with black and white hose.

Their shower bouquets were spring flowers from the Biltmore Estate arranged by the superintendent in charge of the gardens and shrubbery.

Mrs. Vanderbilt, the bride's mother, wore a slender silhoutte model of pale green and gold crepe du chene with a small gold tissue turban. The flower girls wore fluffy white organdie dresses hanging full from the shoulders. Their hats were fascinating white straw poke bonnets and they carried minature replicas of the bridesmaids' bouquets.

Asheville Times April 29, 1924

Close to a thousand guests attended the reception and wedding breakfast at Biltmore House immediately following the church ceremony, and among the many notables present the employes and tenants of the Estate were honored guests.

Again white spring flowers from the woods were used throughout the stately and dignified rooms. Biltmore House has not been used in its entirety since the visit of Lord Grey in 1913. Its massive central doors flanked on either side by two huge marble lions have not been formally opened since that time until the present. The house is considered one of the most magnificent examples of French architecture.

Received Guests

Mrs Vanderbilt received her guests alone at the entrance to the Tapestry Room just beyond the graceful circular stairway. Just beyond her mother under a white bell composed of white carnations and white sweet peas placed in front of the fireplace, the bride stood with the groom to receive the congratulations of the guests.

The wedding breakfast, in buffet style, was served in the formal banquet hall, with its lofty walls and triple carved-stone fireplace. The bride's table was placed in the Circular Palm Room arranged in the form of a "C" around the beautiful fountain, which was playing, of the boy and the swan.

Seldom has there been such a distinguished gathering of guests at a private wedding. Among the relatives of the bride were Mr. Frederick Vanderbilt, her paternal uncle, with Mrs. Vanderbilt; Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, her aunt by marriage, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., also her aunt by marriage and Miss Muriel, her cousin; Mrs. Nicholas Brown of Providence, R. I., her maternal aunt and cousin John Francis Brown; The Reverend and Mrs. George Grenville Merrill, her mother's sister and brother-in-law and cousins, Miss Marjorie and Miss Natalia Merrill, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. McCagg and daughter Miss Augusta McCagg, and Miss Sue Dresser, cousins. Count Lazzlo Szechenyi, minister from Hungary and Countess Szechenyi, formerly Gladys Vanderbilt, a cousin. Also Henry White, former Ambassador to Great Britain and Mrs. White, Dr. and Mrs. Seward Webb, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Burden and Miss Burden and also Mrs. Florence Twombly.

Among the bridegroom's relatives came his father, Lord William Cecil and cousin Robert Cecil, and his cousin the Honorable Florence Amherst of England.

Notables Present

Among the notables from Washington who witnessed the ceremony were Sir Esme Howard, British Ambassador, the Spanish Ambassador and Madame Riano, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. C. G. Charlton and Captain M. G. Christie, all of the British Embassy, Mrfl and Mrs. Frederick Nano, of the Rumanian Legation. Mr. Raymond Baker, former director of the mint; Congressman and Mrs. John Philip Hall of Baltimore; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mr. and Mrs. John Henry Purdy, Mr. Foxhall Daingerfield, Mr. Winant Johnston, Mr. and Mrs Eldridge Jordan.

The guests from New York included Mr. Henry B. Anderson, the family counselor, Mr. Talbot Root, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Schelling, Mrs. Deering Howe, Mr. and Mrs. Edmond L. Baylies, Mr. and Mrs. Alan Robbins, Mr. Frank Markoe, Mr. and Mrs. Eric Burton, Mr. Lawrence Butler, Mr. Sam Pisa, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bacon, and Mrs Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hinckley, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Schieffin, Miss Dorothy King, Mr. Robert Chamberlin and Miss Chamberlin and Miss Ogilvie.

The Governor of North Carolina and Mrs. Cameron Morrison and Mr. C. H. Strong, of Cleveland, Ohio, were also guests.

After the reception the bride and groom departed for an extended tour abroad. The bride's going away gown was a smart tan cloth with V-shaped insert of brown from bodice to hem. The V-shaped collar ended with a long scarf of the cloth which when slung over the left shoulder presented a novel effect. The long coat slipped on when entering her car was a grey knitted French import elaborately embroidered in brown motifs. It was banded at the bottom, also collar and cuffs with breasts of white doves edged with brown. Costume was topped by a black straw cloche hat banded with similiar breasts.

Vanderbilt Heir

The bride is the youngest of the grandchildren of William H. Vanderbilt and the only child of George W. Vanderbilt, who was also the youngest of the grandchildren of Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt in this particular line. On her maternal side, she is a descendant of Peter Stuyvesant, the last Dutch Governor of what is now Manhattan.

On her 25th. birthday Miss Vanderbilt will inherit from her father the vast Biltmore Estate, the income from which has been hers since she attained the age of twenty-one.

The ceremony was performed in the picturesque Church of All Soul's erected by her father at Biltmore, the chancel of which was filled with a mass of lilies, dogwood and various white spring flowers all gathered from her own estate.

Returning to Biltmore in the early summer the couple will reside on the estate. Mr. Cecil has resigned from the diplomatic service and will assist the bride in the management of the estate where they will continue to develope the plans conceived by her father and so well executed and elaborated by her mother.

A copy of the will refutes the stories current that in order to secure her fortune, Miss Vanderbilt must make her residence at Biltmore. Much sentiment, without sentimentality, has run like a silver thread through the entire affair. The people of her own locality as well as other Americans like the idea that her love for the Old North State equals that of her mother and that it is from choice that she retains her American citizenship.

Many handsome gifts were received.

MAX HENRY CROHN

Max Crohn was starting from town to his Middlemount Gardens greenhouses on Haywood road at Sulphur Springs one cold winter night. A not-too-warmly clad man standing at the curb signalled him for a ride. Max stopped and the stranger got in the car.

As he drew near the end of his trip Max asked the stranger where he was going.

"I live up Spivey mountain a little piece."

"Well, that's not much further. I'll take you on home."

The passenger did not say a word until he signalled Mr. Crohn to stop. As he got out of the car, "Thank you, Mister. You're a Christian gentleman. I needed that ride."

"You're welcome," Max Crohn said, "but I'm not a Christian. I'm Jewish."

"Mister, I'm a minister of the Gospel, and I still say you are a Christian." He offered his hand, then walked off into the night.

In the basic sense of the word "Christian" that preacher was right. For above everything else, the Nazarene taught consideration for people less fortunate than ourselves, and true brotherly love. In Asheville I have many Jewish friends who practice markedly Christian charity. Max Crohn is one.

Thinking that Max might be a nickname, I asked my friend what his full name was.

"Max Henry Crohn."

"Then you are not orthodox. You are Reformed Jewish," I said.

"That's right. I'm a past president of the Beth-ha-Tephila congregation here, and also past president of Asheville Lodge 714, B'nai B'rith. But how did you know I was a Reformed Jew?"

"Because you have a middle name, Max. My now departed but no less beloved friend, the world famous impressario Roxy, told me no orthodox Jew ever had more than one given name."

"That's right, Tom. I'd never thought of it."

Max Crohn, for so he is widely known among the first citizens of Asheville, was born in Memphis, Tenn., Sept. 7, 1902. His black hair and flashing, black eyes, coupled with a charming boyishness, make him appear much younger than his 42 years. The enthusiasm which is a major characteristic of Max Crohn has proved him a valuable worker on such worthy civic duties as need to be done. There are few major local movements for good that have not benefitted by his abilities.

We were talking in the down town shop of Middlemount Gardens at 64 Patton avenue, Max and I. From time to time customers would enter, and Max would excuse himself to wait on them. Mr. C. S. Fletcher came in to return some huge jars borrowed by the Men's Garden club for their flower show. Then a lovely young lady entered to ask Max to help her decide the flowers for her coming wedding. "My mother will wear blue and the groom's mother will wear lavender," I heard her say. Max reached into the big glass-front refrigerator containing a myriad of blooms and took out a delicate, pure white flower, dainty as the girl herself. "This is a very rare blossom," he said.

At this point Mrs. Otto Buseck, aunt of Max Crohn and widow of the fondly-remembered founder of Middlemount Gardens, came in the store. Her affectionate greeting to the nephew who is no less than a son to her, was beautiful to see. She joined me and we chatted while Max was busy.

"Max is a good boy, Mr. Cushing," she said proudly. I learned that his father died when he was one year old. Young Max attended the public schools of Memphis, then went to work with a big plate glass company of that city. When he was 19 he came to Asheville to be associated with his uncle, Otto Buseck, at Middlemount. He has been there ever since; and on the death of Mr. Buseck in March, 1934, Max Crohn assumed full management of these famous greenhouses, which grow carnations for distribution to the entire southeast. Middlemount has developed one magnificent blossom in the carnation known as the "Middlemount Red." It is a dark red bloom, and very popular wherever it is shown.

Leadership ability is an inborn talent of Max Crohn. He is past president of the Southeastern Florists association and acting president for the duration of the war. It is interesting to note the system under which this association rotates its officers. The immedate past president automatically becomes first vice-president; so that, in an emergency, the organization has available a man of experience to take the chair. This happened in the florist group when its president went to war: Max Crohn became acting head again, and all runs smoothly. The system might well be borrowed by other organizations.

Mr. Crohn is past president of the Temple Brotherhood. He is a Kiwanian, an Elk, a member of Mt. Herman Lodge, Mason, and belongs to the Asheville Consistery of the Scottish Rite. A member of the Asheville Country Club, golf is his favorite recreation. I asked him how he played.

"Well, Tom—if a man plays under 80, they say he is neglecting his business. If he plays over 80, he is neglecting his golf. I guess I'm neglecting my golf," he said with a grin.

Certainly Max Crohn will neglect his personal pleasure if it interferes with what he should do in either business or civic interest. Or with his beautiful home life which, at 75 Mt. Vernon Circle, he shares with Mrs. Crohn and the children, Miriam and Max H. Jr., both students of Asheville schools.

New Career A-Blooming

After 56 years at Middlemount Flower Shop, Max Crohn is turning the business over to new owners. He will begin a new career as a full-time volunteer worker at local hospitals. (Staff Photo by Gary Fields.)

Retirement For Crohn Means Volunteer Service

Times

By BOB HAWKINS
Times Staff Writer

One morning when he was 18 years old Max Crohn showed up at the florist shop and was handed an assignment for the day: Take care of the Vanderbilt-Cecil wedding at the Biltmore House.

That was 56 years ago, but Crohn recalls vividly the trauma of the moment when he was called on to provide floral arrangements for the high society wedding.

Crohn prepares to retire later this month, turning over the business, Middlemount Flower Shop at 199 College St., to its new owners, Sam and Judith Morris.

"If there's one thing I want to stress," he declared, "it is that Middlemount Flower Shop will continue its tradition started many years ago."

A dapper figure among the blooms and greenery, Crohn is moving out of the stand, but he will enter the humanitarian adventure of volunteer worker for local hospitals.

"Since I was a boy I've been interested in medicine and hospitals, so now I'll devote full time to whatever jobs the hospitals can find for me to do," he said.

Mrs. Charlie Webb was the original president of Middlemount Gardens, Inc., and the Webbs, along with Crohn's uncle, Otto Buseck, established the current business Dec. 1, 1920. Crohn joined the firm in March the following year.

There were two florists in town back then; now there are 21. Providing flowers on order was considered a hobby in those early years, Crohn recalled, when the business census omitted flower shops from its listing.

Middlemount was among the first 100 members of Florists Transworld Delivery (FTD), a worldwide connection.

Crohn has been something of a lion in business and civic circles. He has been president of North Carolina Florists Association and served two terms as president of Western North Carolina Florists Association. He is a 50-year member of Asheville Kiwanis Club, and was one of the original four to start the Junior Chamber of Commerce here.

Crohn has two children by a former marriage, Max H. Crohn Jr., an attorney who is secretary of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. of Winston-Salem, and Mrs. Joseph Slavin of Chevy Chase, Md., and eight grandchildren.

He and his wife, Kathryn, live at 81 Lakeshore Dr. They plan to tour the Caribbean in April before he launches his career as full-time volunteer.

FLORISTS PICK ASHEVILLE FOR NEXT MEETING

Make Plans for Greater Flower Show; Elect New Officers.

Selection of Asheville as next year's convention city, inauguration of plans for a greater flower show and more extensive organization program, and election of officers for the coming year featured the closing session of the Southeastern Florists Association which has been in convention in Asheville since Monday morning.

The results of the election were as follows: John Wolf, Savannah, re-elected president; C. Leslie Whipp, Jacksonville, re-elected vice-president; Carl Schatzman, Macon, elected treasurer; and Max Crohn, Asheville, elected secretary.

The selection of Asheville for a second time as the convention city was made by the florists as a result of the unusual courtesy they have been extended while here, they said, and because of the sections unparalleled attractions.

The inclusion of Virginia in the association now composed of florists from Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana was also taken up at the meeting Tuesday.

Tuesday morning's session opened at 9 o'clock with a clinic for the study of diseased plants under the direction of Professor Z. P. Metcalf and Professor Glenn O. Randall of North Carolina State college, and Professor Arno H. Nehring of Cornell University. The plant clinic was continued for two hours during which various plant ailments were diagnosed and remedies and preventive measures prescribed.

At 11 o'clock a series of floral demonstrations and make-up illustrations were held under the direction of the president of the association, John Wolf, of Savannah, assisted by C. Leslie Whipp, vice-president, of Atlanta, and other members of the association. Wedding sprays, funeral wreaths and sprays, and arrangement of flowers for various occasions were taken up. Speed in arrangement for use in hurry-up orders was also discussed. The demonstrations ended shortly before one o'clock.

Elect Officers

The luncheon session of the convention which opened at 1 o'clock was featured by the election of officers for the association for the coming year and by the selection of next year's convention city. At the close of the luncheon, the convention rooms were thrown open to the public for an exhibition of flowers on display.

Among the features of the flower display, were a completely equipped twenty-five foot greenhouse erected by Lord and Burnham, hot house experts on the east porch of the Inn, a display of orchids of Judge W. A. Way, and the new Mrs. F. A. Pierson rose. Floral pottery, cut flowers, baskets, and potted plants of every description and in every combination have been placed throughout the hotel for the show and convention.

At the close of the exhibition of flowers the entire party of florists started on a sightseeing tour of Asheville and its immediate vicinity.

Three distinctive social events featured Monday evening's program. The first was the annual banquet of the association which was held at Kenilworth Inn at 7:30 o'clock. During the course of the dinner a loving cup was presented on behalf of the florists to H. E. Bates, of Greensboro, field secretary for the association, who is credited with its organization. A short address of presentation was made for the florists by Mayor John H. Cathey.

Reception Is Held

Following the banquet a reception was held in the ball room for the president of the association and after that the annual grand ball. Another round of social entertainment is scheduled for Tuesday night which will close the convention. A tea and organ recital will be held for the florists at Grove Park inn late Tuesday afternoon and at 7 o'clock at dinner to be given for them at Kenilworth Inn. Following the dinner the entire party will attend one of the Asheville theaters in a body.

Most of the florists will leave Asheville enroute for their homes Wednesday morning but late Tuesday a number had signified their intentions of remaining in the city a few days longer.

WORKING MEN HOLD THEIR FINAL RALLY

WORKINGMEN'S MEETING WELL ATTENDED.

Nominee Crook Pleads for Co-Operation With the Successful Candidates—Gives Views.

Enthusiastic in the belief that their ticket will win at today's election in West Asheville, members of the Workingmen's club held their last meeting and closed their active campaign at the Odd Fellows' hall last night. A good-sized crowd was present and several speeches were made, the principal speaker being Rev. J. L. Crook, candidate for mayor on the workingmen's ticket. Mr. Crook complimented the officers and active workers of the organization upon the splendid work which they have done, and urged them to work today with the same zeal that has characterized their efforts of the past two weeks. He predicted that success will crown their efforts today.

The speaker urged his friends, in the event of his defeat, to lend their support to the man who is elected mayor, that West Asheville may grow and prosper. Candidate Crook stated that regardless of which ticket is elected, the mayor and board of aldermen will have some difficulty in pleasing all of the people. It will be the duty of all good citizens to help the successful candidate to put into effect such laws as will assure the new town a safeguard to health and proper police protection. Mr. Crook advocated the passage of ordinances that will be beneficial and urged the enforcement of them. He assured his hearers that if his ticket is successful, the residents of the town will be consulted as to the laws which are to be made.

L. L. Lee made a short but interesting talk, in which he expressed the belief that Mr. Crook will, if elected, make a good mayor for West Asheville. He predicted a bright future for the new town, setting forth the advantages of its location.

Dr. J. G. Anderson, candidate for alderman on the "citizens'" ticket, was present last night, but made no statement other than to thank the officers and members of the Workingmen's club for the courtesies shown him.

H. C. Hugill, chairman of the club, made a short talk, in which he thanked his friends for the work which had been done.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1915.

ALDERMEN AND NEW MAYOR ARE SWORN IN

FIRST MEETING WILL BE HELD FRIDAY NIGHT.

Mayor J. L. Crook and Members of West Asheville Board of Aldermen Took Office at Noon Yesterday.

J. L. Crook, newly elected mayor of West Asheville, and the members of the new aldermanic board, took the oath of office yesterday at noon. Retiring Mayor J. L. Bright administered the oath to Mayor Crook, who in turn swore in the members of the aldermanic board, who were chosen at the general election held Tuesday.

At a conference of the new governing board which was held shortly afterwards, it was decided to hold the first meeting of the board Friday night, at which time the various committees will be named and a clerk appointed.

At this meeting it is understood, some action will be taken by the members of the new board on the matter of voting themselves and the mayor some compensation.

Although the members of the old board served without pay, the amount of business transacted by the aldermen and mayor as a result of the development and upbuilding of West Asheville has increased to such an extent that the administrative duties of the individual members of the board take up a great deal of their time.

ASHEVILLE MAN SAYS HE'S THE TALLEST MAN

"There's no man from South Carolina can come to Asheville and say he's the tallest man in the city," remarked J. L. Crook, mayor of West Asheville, with an aggrieved and belligerent look in his eye. The mayor had reference, he said, to a story in yesterday's Citizen about Chief of Police Noe, of Greenville, South Carolina.

Mayor Crook says he is a full measured inch taller than the big man from South Carolina, and what is more, he can prove it. He measures, he declares, a full six feet and eight inches in his socks, as against the South Carolinian's six feet seven inches. The mayor weighs only 190 pounds, however, while the chief of police tips the scale at 340 pounds.

DEATH CLAIMS MAYOR CROOK

Minister Was Head of West Asheville at Time of Consolidation

Rev. J. L. Crook, former mayor of West Asheville, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Dixon Watkins, 119 Montana avenue, Monday morning at 6:25. He was mayor of West Asheville at the time it was consolidated with greater Asheville and has played a prominent part in the affairs of the city.

Mr. Crook was born March 9, 1850. He married Miss Julia Israel in 1870, and is survived by four children, Troy Crook, of West Buncombe, Lyda Crook, Mrs. H. L. Owen and Mrs. Watkins all of West Asheville. He became a minister of the Methodist church South, at the age of 32, and was an active minister for 35 years.

The funeral will be conducted at two o'clock tomorrow afternoon at the West Asheville Wesleyan Methodist church, corner of Richmond and Pennsylvania avenues. Rev. E. W. Black, assisted by Rev. W. L. Colson, pastor of Balm Grove Methodist church, will conduct the services. Gallatin Roberts, former mayor of Asheville, will give a short address on the life of Mr. Crook.

Interment will take place in the West Asheville cemetery. Active pall-bearers are: J. R. Teague, W. B. Cathey, T. C. Andrews, R. V. Self, A. M. Hickle, H. H. Cathey. Honorary pall-bearers: H. B. Posey, John McElroy, M. L. Maney, John Clark, H. A. Bryson and W. L. Powell.

INTEREST IN THE FAIR INSUFFICIENT

Directors of Association Call a Meeting of Stockholders to Discuss Plans.

The directors of the Western North Carolina Fair association have called a meeting of the stockholders of the association, to be held in the commissioners' room at the county court house next Wednesday morning, for the purpose of discussing plans for the present year. It is declared in this formal call that insufficient support has been given the organization by those who should be the most directly interested; and, further, that unless this support can be obtained in sufficient measure to assure extensive agricultural and livestock exhibits at the next fair, the existence of the association may as well be terminated.

The directors signing this call are R. C. Crowell, E. D. Weaver, R. D. Buckner, W. B. Williamson, W. P. Whittington, J. A. Nichols, W. R. Whitson, Guy Weaver, C. Sawyer, A. E. Swayne, W. J. Cocke, C. R. Moore, B. Harris and C. A. Kluttz. Their letter to the stockholders follows:

"By reason of insufficient support on the part of those who should be interested, the work undertaken by this association has not accomplished the results that should have been realized. This in connection with the extremely unfavorable weather conditions which prevailed during our 1914 fair week, has caused the board of directors to decide that unless provision can be made for representative livestock and agricultural exhibits this year the existence of the association may as well be terminated.

"In order to secure an expression of view by those whom we must rely upon for co-operation, an urgent request is being extended to all citizens and particularly to farmers, stock raisers and fruit growers to attend the annual stockholders' meeting which will be held in the county commissioners' rooms at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning, January 13.

"Trusting that you will be present and will use your influence in arranging for a continuance of the important work which should be performed by this association, we are."

WISH TO INTEREST FARMERS IN FAIR

Continuation of W. N. C. Fair Here to Depend Largely on This Interest.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Western North Carolina Fair association was held in the commissioners' room at the county court house yesterday, President R. C. Crowell presiding. The meeting was called to order at 11 o'clock, and lasted until about 1:30, there being a large number of stockholders and others interested in an annual fair in Asheville present.

The object of the meeting was primarily to determine whether the fair is to be continued here as an annual institution, there having been quite a bit of dissatisfaction expressed lately that the people of the section have not given it proper support in the past. There was a long discussion of the matter today from every viewpoint, and it was finally decided to name President Crowell and E. D. Weaver as a committee of two to name persons in every township of the county to make a canvass among the farmers and enlist their interest in taking stock in the association. The subscriptions are to be taken conditional upon $1500 being raised in this manner.

It was then decided to call another meeting here within the next 60 days and hear reports on the success of this work. If sufficient interest has been aroused, the fair will be continued. It is believed that the undertaking will be altogether successful, as the farmers are anxious to have an annual fair here; and it is thought that they will be still more interested after securing stock in the association.

The annual report by Secretary-Treasurer D. Harris was read today by Acting Secretary Guy Weaver, in Mr. Harris' absence.

BRUCEMONT AREA IS BEAUTIFIED BY GARDEN CLUB

Mrs. W. K. Talley Leads Movement To Develop Circle In W. A.

"We're going to make Brucemont circle beautiful", said Mrs. W. K. Talley, two years ago, and today that circle is one of the most attractive residential sections in West Asheville.

Mrs. Talley was speaking to 35 women who had gathered at her home, 184 Brucemont circle, to form a garden club, and it was then and there that the Brucemont garden club was organized—"To stimulate the knowledge and love of gardening among amateurs; to aid in the protection of native birds; and to encourage civic planting."

Mrs. E. P. Barry was elected president; Mrs. Talley, first vice-president; Mrs. S. E. Horton, secretary; Mrs. Dalton, second vice-president; and Mrs. A. H. Sawyer, treasurer.

In the two years of its existence, the club has succeeded in making Brucemont circle attractive and has materially aided in the civic development of the remainder of West Asheville. In order to provide a direct entrance from Haywood street to the circle, a strip of land connecting Brucemont circle with Majestic avenue was purchased by the club last year and was paved by the city this spring. The organization succeeded in having two stone pillars erected at the entrance of the street and donated bronze nameplates. Efforts will be concentrated on beautifying this strip of land in the future.

A vacant lot on the street was transformed into a beautiful garden spot and playground for children of the neighborhood. Called "The Pines", this tract was planted with trees, shrubs and various type of blubs.

Every vacant lot in the section has been beautified in some manner by the organization. Club members have planted 12 tulip beds, 15 canna beds and iris have been planted on either side of the street so that in the spring the whole circle is a mass of the gay blossoms.

Through the influence of this active organization Burns Place was changed to Brucemont Place, and curbing was laid to protect the lawns of home owners. In a recent neighborhood beautification contest held by the city, Brucemont circle won first place. In this contest all homes on the street were taken into consideration.

The club assists other civic organizations in their public drives and is a member of the Biltmore Branch of the Needlework Guild of America. In the 1937 Rhododendron Festival the organization entered an automobile in the floral parade and members made corsages for chaperones of the sponsors. Mrs. Talley, who is now president of the club, was appointed by the city to assist in the city-wide clean-up campaign in which prizes were given for the most improvement shown in homes. Two prizes were awarded in the section of West Asheville of which Brucemont circle is a part.

Meets First Tuesday of Each Month

The Brucemont Garden club, with membership limited to residents of Brucemont circle, has its regular meeting the first Tuesday of each month in the homes of members. At each meeting a guest speaker is presented. Among recent speakers have been Mrs. E. S. Koon, director of the mountain district of the Carolina Garden Clubs; George C. Brown, principal of Vance school; Mrs. W. E. Vanon, member of an Asheville Garden club; Mrs. J. W. Shockley, and Mrs. S. R. Freeborn.

A topic of interest to amateur gardeners is usually discussed at the meetings, and during 1937 "Trees," "Planning the Home Grounds," "Spring Planting for Autumn Beauty," "Chrysanthemums," "Fall Planting," "Planting Bulbs," "Roses," "Iris," "Lilies," "Oriental Poppies," "Pansies," "Clematis," "Shrubs," "Wild Flowers," and "Pruning Trees" were among the subjects studied. Special attention is given to native flowers and whenever possible an unusual plant or flower is exhibited.

There are seven standing committees of the club: Program, press, civic, membership, exchange, exhibit and librarian-historian. The duty of the civic committee is "to encourage efforts to increase the landscape beauty of Brucemont circle (and the community) and to cooperate in all community efforts undertaken by the club. This committee was influential in forming the Brucemont Junior Garden club, a garden club for children of the neighborhood. The children have been active in beautifying their playground and have shown much interest in nature study.

The exchange committee meets twice yearly to exchange plants with members and anyone desiring different types of plants. The club has an active history committee and all happenings in any way connected with the organization are carefully recorded for reference.

Yearly awards are given to members having the most attractive tulip beds in the vacant lots; for the best garden fact presented during the year, and for the most interesting scrap book. Last year Mrs. R. E. Jarrett won the prize for the best garden fact, Mrs. Talley the tulip prize and Mrs. E. E. Moore, the prize for the best scrapbook.

The organization recently adopted a constitution and by-laws based on the Better Homes and Garden plan.

During 1938 the garden club plans to beautify the entrance to Brucemont place, to prune all trees on the street, and to plant dogwood trees and shrubs in the section. Special study will be given to soil cultivation. Affiliation with the State Federation of Women's clubs and assisting in the organization of other street-garden clubs will be considered.

Present officers of the club, in addition to Mrs. Talley, are: Mrs. Dalton, vice-president; Mrs. E. E. Moore, secretary; and Mrs. Sawyer, treasurer. The following were charter members: Mrs. J. H. Cheek, Mrs. C. L. Deming, Mrs. F. M. Gruver, Mrs. S. E. Horton, Mrs. H. A. Hudson, Mrs. A. G. Jarrett, Mrs. E. J. Jones, Mrs. H. J. Keever, Mrs H H. King, Mrs. W. T. McClure, Mrs. J. J. McSween, Mrs. Frank Mulvaney, Mrs. A. E. Randloff, Mrs. A. H. Sawyer, Mrs. W. C. Shaver, Mrs. J. E. Snipes, Mrs. G. M. Taylor, Mrs. T. W. Underwood, Mrs. B. H. Wilford, Mrs. J. Q. Porter, Mrs. C. M. Shaney, Mrs. J. K. Ballenger, Mrs. G. C. Brown, H. C. Allen, Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Talley, Mrs. Barry, and Mrs. Dalton.

SOCIAL NEWS
Women's Activities—Personal Mention

Mrs. W. K. Dalton Is Again Head Of Community Club

Mrs. W. K. Dalton was re-elected president of the West Asheville Community club at a meeting held yesterday afternoon at the Rhododendron clubhouse, West Asheville. In addition to an election there were two speakers, Mrs. John S. Forrest, president of the second district of the state federation of women's clubs, and Rabbi Alexander Kline, of the Beth-Ha-Tephilah temple.

Other officers of the club are Mrs. Curtis Baldwin, first vice-president; Mrs. Clay Sams, second vice-president; Miss Hattie Rollins, third vice-president; Mrs. Lee Davis, recording secretary; and Mrs. J. Reid Key, treasurer. Mrs. Baldwin and Mrs. Key are re-elected officers.

Mrs. Forrest spoke to the members on "Safety" and reminded them that this was safety week. She called attention to the convention of the federated clubs to be held in April at Wilmington and urged a large attendance.

Rabbi Kline's talk was on "The Ten Greatest Churches of the World". In his discussion, he mentioned the temple of Solomon at Jerusalem, the great Parthenon temple at Athens, St. Sophia at Constantinople, Westminster Abbey at London, Notre Dame de Paris, France, The Rheims cathedral, St. Peters cathedral at Rome, and St. Pauls at London. The speaker described something of the greatness of the structure and the beauty of these old and famous cathedrals.

Mrs. W. E. Thayer, program chairman, had charge of the events of the program. Mrs. Willis Cunningham played two piano selections during the afternoon. Mrs. Edward P. Barry, art chairman, announced the district exhibit to be held March 19 at the city hall art room.

Mrs. Dalton appointed Mrs. J. Reid Key and Mrs. John Ehle to be in charge of the sale of seals for the crippled children.

At the conclusion of the meeting the hostesses, Mrs. James A. Goforth, Mrs. Cunningham, Mrs. Roy Reid, and Mrs. R. E. Grissom, served refreshments.

WEST ASHEVILLE CLUBS DISCUSS CONTEST PLANS

Weede And Weir Speak At Meet Of 3 Civic Organizations

Approximately 100 persons attended a meeting held yesterday afternoon at the Rhododendron clubhouse in West Asheville for the purpose of stimulating interest in the beautification contest being sponsored by three West Asheville civic clubs.

Fred L Weede, manager of the Asheville chamber of commerce and Weldon Weir director of public works were the principal speakers. They stressed the necessity of beautifying the West Asheville section both for the purpose of making a favorable impression on visitors and of creating an attractive environment for those who live here.

Mrs Dalton Presides

Mrs W K Dalton general chairman of the beautification campaign, presided at the meeting. She commented briefly on the importance of the co-operation of West Asheville clubs, as well as individuals, in making the contest a success.

Presidents of four West Asheville Garden clubs were introduced and spoke briefly. They were: Mrs. W. O Talley, Brucemont Garden club; Mrs. Bertha Wenzlick, Dorchester Avenue Garden club; Mrs. R. G. Lewis, Han-Tana Garden club; and Mrs. G. A. Wall, Garden Circle Garden club.

Mrs. W. E. Ryon, chairman of the prize committee for the contest, explained judging, prize awards and other aspects of the contest.

Two original poems apropos of gardens and beautification were read by Mrs. Edward Barry.

Contest Closes April 15

The contest which is open to individuals and neighborhoods in West Asheville, will extend through April 15, but prizes will not be awarded until the first of September, during a garden show to be sponsored by the beautification committee.

Members of the beautification committee who were selected from the three clubs sponsoring the contest are Mrs Wall Anderson, Mrs Edward T Barry, Mrs Clay Sams, Mrs. Lee Davis, Mrs Curtis Baldwin, Mrs. Beaman Pinner, Mrs R L Nahiklian, L F Jarrett, W E Ryon, and O V Himes.

The clubs participating are the Men's club, the Junior Rhododendron club and the Community club.

West Asheville Flower Show Set For Saturday

The first annual West Asheville flower show will be held from noon until 9 p. m., next Saturday in the building formerly occupied by Barker's department store, corner of Haywood road and Hanover street, it was announced yesterday by Mrs. William K. Dalton, general chairman in charge of arrangements for the show.

Held as a climax to the beautification campaign held in that section during the spring and summer, the show is being sponsored by the three West Asheville civic clubs—the Community, Business Men's and Junior Rhododendron clubs.

Approximately $100 in prizes will be offered to individuals and groups having the most attractive displays at the show. A prize will also be given the garden club having the best cut flowers and plants on display. This prize is being given by the 10 garden clubs in West Asheville.

Much interest has been shown in beautification and flower growing in West Asheville as the result of the campaign. Residents of 20 streets have participated in the contest. Judging was completed during the past week.

Professional flower growers have been invited to enter displays in the show. Non-professional growers are invited to enter exhibits and to compete for the many prizes, ribbons and other winning awards. A special children's section will be included among the displays.

Mrs. Dalton is being assisted in the work by the following committees from the three clubs: Mrs. J. Wall Anderson, Mrs. Edward Barry, Mrs. Curtis Baldwin and Mrs Lee Davis, Community club; W. E Ryon, Lee E. Jarrett and O. V. Himes, Business Men's club, and Mrs. George Mitchell, Mrs. Beaman Pinner and Miss Evelyn Many, Junior Rhododendron club.

Any information pertaining to the show may be obtained from any member of the various committees. A small admission will be charged.

Launch West Asheville Beautification Contest

West Asheville's second annual beautification campaign was launched at a meeting at Rhododendron gardens yesterday afternoon with approximately 50 persons in attendance.

Persons present included representatives of the three civic clubs in that section—the West Asheville Community (women's) club, the Junior Rhododendron club and the West Asheville (men's) club—as well as members of the various garden clubs.

Among those making short talks were Mrs. W. E. Logan, Mrs. C. J. Ebbs, Mrs. Harold Glenn, president of the Junior Rhododendron club; W. E. Ryon, president of the men's club; O. V. Himes, of the men's club Vice-Mayor Lyons Lee, and City Manager Pat M. Burdette. Others also made brief remarks.

The campaign is to promote and encourage interest in the improvement and beautification of West Asheville.

Mrs. Logan expressed thanks to members of the garden clubs and the people of West Asheville generally for co-operating in last year's campaign, and to city officials for their assistance.

Mrs. Ebbs discussed improvement of Haywood road. She pointed out that it is one of the clubs' main projects and one that interests all. Groups join to beautify their own streets, she said, but Haywood road belongs improvement of the section, and offered the city's co-operation in this year's undertaking.

Mrs. W. K. Dalton, president of the West Asheville Community club and chairman of the inter-club committee in charge of the campaign, presided.

Entry blanks for those wishing to take part in a contest sponsored by the clubs in connection with the campaign are now ready for distribution, Mrs. Dalton said.

As a climax to the campaign a flower show will be held in the fall at which time prizes will be awarded in the contest.

THE NEWS PERSONALITY OF THE WEEK

MRS. W. K. DALTON

One of the compensations for knowing people is that every so often you run across a person who is enjoying life to the fullest. Such a person cannot escape under a bushel if he or she tried; their works are unmistakably clear. Such a person is Mrs. W. K. Dalton.

Mrs. Dalton seems to be a person who has always enjoyed life. If she were asked to explain this capacity, doubtless she would muse a few moments, and perhaps say it was because there is so much in life to bring real satisfaction. In this, she would be correct. But we suspect the real reason is that she has always sought the active and purposeful life. Anyway, she has ever chosen the useful role and has found happiness in the playing.

It is difficult, however, to say which activity brings to her the greatest delight, since she finds her interests as interesting as they are varied.

Also difficult is to know just where to begin in dealing with her activities. But there must be a beginning, regardless of the order in which the phases are treated.

Mrs. Dalton served as president of the Community Club for two terms, and during that time she also was chairman of the second district of the North Carolina Federation of Women's clubs. That she should be especially interested in the art program of any organization she is connected with is quite natural and understandable as we shall see a little later on.

Also while filling the Community Club chair, she organized the West Asheville Beautification campaign, which was sponsored by all of the three West Asheville clubs, and was chairman of the project for two years. As many recall, this project was one of the finest of its kind ever inaugurated in the city.

Mrs. Dalton is still active in the Community club, serving as historian of the organization.

For two years, 1940-1942, Mrs. Dalton was president of the Hall Fletcher Junior High school P. T. A., and is historian also of this organization. Her aptitude as a chronicler is another thing which seems to receive special recognition. She was historian last year for the Asheville Council of Parent Teacher associations.

Last year she headed the Vance P. T. A. and will be Madame President of that organization again the coming year.

Active in Red Cross work, she served as chairman of the West Asheville division for that great agent of relief and mercy for a number of years and is now on the board of the Buncombe County chapter.

In civilian defense activities, Mrs. Dalton is now serving as chairman of the West Asheville Citizens Service corps, which comprise six of the city's twenty-four zones. The Victory Garden project receives her attention, too. She and Mr. Dalton, in their spare time, are culturing garden plots near their home on Brucemont circle.

Also active in the needlework guild movement, she went to Philadelphia in 1941 to represent West Asheville at the annual convention of that national sewing body.

Mrs. Dalton is a member of Calvary Baptist church, where she has served as circle leader and general treasurer of the Women's Missionary society. She is a member of the Sodalitan class at Calvary, where she is also interested, and especially so, in cradle roll work, having worked as cradle roll visitor for a number of years. Her interest in religious matters, as in the case of a good many people, dates back to her early life, another fact which in a moment or so we shall more fully discuss.

Born and reared in the town of Waterloo, S. C., Mrs. Dalton is the former Miss Minnie Madden Winn, one of six children of H. David and Lucy Eugenia Madden Winn.

Besides Mrs. Dalton, three other of the children are still living: Mrs. Rex W. Lanford, who resides at the family home site in Waterloo; Mrs. C. D. Keller of Greenwood, S. C., and Erskine B. Winn, shoe merchant and president of the Greenwood Merchants' association.

The father, who was a pioneer merchant and civic leader, died in 1912. Two years later, young Miss Minnie graduated from Waterloo High school and the following fall entered Greenville Women's college. Her first year's education, however, was interrupted by five months' illness of typhoid fever, which like to have took the young woman's life. (She gratefully recalls, but doubtless with a knock on the proverbial wood, that she hasn't been ill since.)

Fully recovered and determined to make up for lost time, she resumed her college studies the following year, the end of which finding her having finished the course.

Then the mother moved to Greenwod so that one of the brothers might go to Lander college. The other, Erskine, entered the old Bally Military Institute.

Miss Minnie also studied two years at Lander, specializing in art, a study which she had begun at the women's institution in Greenville.

While at Lander, she won a scholarship in art to Cooper Union, a large art school of New York City.

After entering marital life, Mrs. Dalton spent much time in painting until home and children began to demand more of her time. She expects to take up painting again when the children have grown up and she is not so busy. As for the latter condition, we wonder when that will ever be, but we do hope for Mrs. Dalton the opportunity to be free to splash upon the canvas again.

Always interested in religious and civic activities she was leader in B. Y. P. U. work in Greenwood and taught Sunday school for five consecutive years at the First Baptist church there.

Also while in Greenwood, she organized the John O. Wilson chapter, Children of the Confederacy. The organization meeting took place in her home and she was leader of the chapter for several years. When the chapter was set up, Dr. Wilson, Confederate veteran, and for whom the chapter was named, was president of Lander college. At the time Mrs. Dalton was a member of the Robert A. Waller chapter, U. D. C. in Greenwood.

Mr. and Mrs. Dalton were married in 1921 in Greenwood. Mr. Dalton has been associated with the bookkeeping department of the Asheville Citizen-Times for a good many years. Mr. Dalton became connected with the accounting department of the old Asheville Times almost immediately upon coming to Asheville.

The Daltons' first child, William, now 19, was born in Greenwood. He is now an aviation cadet stationed at Winthrop college, Rock Hill, S. C. He entered the service last February while a Freshman at Clemson college.

The other three children were born here. Marilyn, age 15, will enter Lee Edwards Senior high this fall; Charles, 13, is a senior at Hall Fletcher, and Windal, 10, is a student at Vance.

This is the family that has kept Mrs. Dalton busy and, we guess, with no dull moments.

The Daltons moved to Asheville in the summer of 1926, and before the year was spent had built their home at 187 Brucemont circle, where they have resided ever since. They selected the site because they thought Brucemont circle the prettiest spot in Asheville. They still think so. Furthermore, they wanted others to think so, also—so with their neighbors they diligently worked, and with success, through the years to enhance the beauty of that residential horse shoe.

In 1935 with the assistance of a neighbor, Mrs. W. D. Talley, who now resides in Tennessee, Mrs. Dalton was instrumental in organizing the Brucemont Garden club, which, as is known, is one of the leading garden groups in the city. Since then Mrs. Dalton has served as president, vice-president, treasurer, and in practically all official capacities of the organization, and is now 1st vice-president of the garden group.

A past vice-president of the Asheville council of Garden clubs, Mrs. Dalton has just finished two years as secretary to the council. At present she is a member of the Garden Center committee and has served as judge in a number of flower and art exhibits. Indeed, her love for flowers is well known, and her aestheticism is matched only by her keen sense of clive duty.

Yes, here is one who finds so much in life to enjoy, because, perhaps, she finds so much to do and is able to do it. And we suspect that if she has any secret ambition — other than to paint again—it is that she may be able to continue in contributing to community welfare.

We are reminded of the old saying, "What you are speaks so loud I cannot hear what you say." That would apply to Mrs. Dalton. Further, what Mrs. Dalton is, speaks more eloquently than what we have to say here.

MEMORIAL TREES ARE PLANTED AT HALL FLETCHER

In observance of Arbor Day and in honor of Dr. Hall Fletcher, for whom Hall Fletcher junior high school was named, and C. B. Anderson, former principal, two trees were planted on the school grounds yesterday by the Parent-Teacher association.

Visitors at the school and the entire student body attended the ceremonies. Led by Wayne Fisher, a student of the school, a bugle call to colors was played while the audience stood to attention. Under direction of Miss Alma Kirstein, the Glee club sang "Trees."

Mrs. Carl Gossett introduced Mrs. W. K. Dalton, president of the association, who presented the school with the trees on behalf of the P. T. A. Miss Jane Smathers, granddaughter of Dr. Fletcher, made the acceptance speech, and the Rev. Paul N. Gresham, a relative of Mr. Anderson, accepted the trees. The ceremony yesterday was first in the P. T. A. movement to improve the school grounds.

MRS. W. K. DALTON (left) of Asheville received the gavel from Mrs. John R. Jones of Sylva at the department meeting of Gold Star Mothers held Wednesday in the American Legion Memorial Building in Brevard. Mrs. Dalton was elected president during the morning business meeting, along with other officers who represented five chapters in the state. The major address was given by Gen. John E. Sloan of Weaverville.

State Officers Elected

Mrs. Dalton Heads Gold Star Mothers

BREVARD, April 18—Mrs. W. K. Dalton, of Asheville, was elected president of the North Carolina Department of American Gold Star Mothers at the annual convention held in Brevard Wednesday.

She succeeds Mrs. John R. Jones, of Sylva, who presided at the all-day session in the American Legion Memorial building.

Maj. Gen. J. E. Sloan of Weaverville, cited lessons from history to impress the point that too many Americans take liberty for granted, and that it is something which has to be fought for to be maintained.

He told the audience the Gold Star Mothers is an outstanding group that appreciates the sacrifices which have been forced on Americans even after winning two world wars.

Gen. Sloan said Americans must be kept alert to the forces outside as well as inside the United States which are seeking to destroy the American system of government. All Americans, he said, must be ready to serve, as the necessity arises.

New department officers elected with Mrs. Dalton were Mrs. Alice W. Paxton, Brevard, first vice president; Mrs. R. S. Crawford, Asheville, second vice president; Mrs. Frank Allman, Sylva, corresponding secretary and treasurer; Mrs. Mae Choate, Asheville, chaplain; Mrs. E. V. Fowler, Brevard, sergeant-at-arms; and H. McFee, custodian of records; Mrs. G. T. Hampton, historian, and Mrs. Nora E. Ballew, parliamentarian, all of Asheville.

WOMAN OF THE WEEK

American Gold Star Mothers, Inc., is holding the 27th national convention through Wednesday in the Battery Park Hotel. One of the N. C. state department officers, the recording secretary, is Mrs. W. K. Dalton. She was the first president of Buncombe County Chapter, the first in North Carolina, and served two years as state president.

Since coming to Asheville from Greenwood, S. C., in 1926 Mrs. Dalton has been interested in many civic, cultural and religious activities. She and Mr. Dalton, who retired in 1956 as controlled and treasurer of the Asheville Citizen Times Company, live at 76 Brucemont Circle.

They are the parents of three sons and a daughter. Lt. William A. Dalton was co-pilot of a B-17 which was lost on his 19th mission over Germany in 1945. Lt. Comdr. Charles W. Dalton is serving on the aircraft carrier, U. S. S. Essex and Capt. Windal K. Dalton is an instructor at Randolph Air Force Base, San Antonio, Tex. The former Miss Marilyn Dalton is Mrs. Roy O. Jones of Atlanta, Ga. There are five grandchildren.

Mrs. Dalton is an artist, having studied four years at Greenville (S. C.) Woman's College, now Furman University and at Lander College in Greenwood. She has exhibited in many art shows and served as a judge.

She was co-organizer in 1937 of the Brucemont Garden Club, was twice its president and is now civic chairman. She has been an officer of Asheville Council of Garden Clubs and is an area chairman of the current city beautification campaign.

Formerly she was on the board of directors of Buncombe County Chapter, American Red Cross and has been West Asheville chairman for RC, Civil Defense and Easter Seal drives. For six years she acted as hospitality and membership chairman of the YWCA. Other activities were heading Vance and Hall Fletcher PTAs, the Community Club of Asheville, one of the oldest federated clubs in the city, and being art chairman of District 2, N. C. Federation of Women's Clubs.

At Calvary Baptist Church she has taught the Sodalitan Class for 10 years and headed the WMU three years. And politics has not escaped her attention, she has been Democratic registrar of Precinct 14 for 15 years. (Staff Photo by Bert Shipman)

Club's 50th Anniversary

The Community Club of Asheville observed its 50th anniversary at its recent meeting in West Asheville Community Center with 10 past presidents attending. Shown are, (L-R): Mrs. Leo Bagwell, president; Mrs. Harry Atkins, a past president and program chairman; Mrs. W. K. Dalton, past president and historian; and Mrs. D. I. Gross, charter member. Other past presidents attending included: Mrs. Curtis W. Baldwin, Mrs. J. A. Goforth, Mrs. H. B. Almon, Mrs. J. C. Grice, Mrs. L. F. Locke, Mrs. V. A. Forsyth. Mrs. Ernest Briggs of Burnsville, president of District II, North Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs, spoke and Mrs. Dalton gave the 50 year history of the club. Mrs. Atkins was program chairman and hostesses were club officers. Trophies, pictures, year books and newspaper articles were on display. The club was organized April 20, 1923, with 115 charter members and Mrs. Charles B. Anderson, its first president. It was federated in 1927. In 1964 its clubhouse was torn down to make way for a new highway, I-26, and later the property was sold to Aston Park Hospital for a new location of the hospital. The main project of the club is to furnish a room for the new hospital. Over its 50 year history, the club has worked for the betterment of the City of Asheville and will continue this effort, according to the president. (Staff Photo by Dick Mauldin)

Minnie Dalton

Minnie Dalton, 95, formerly of Asheville, died Wednesday in a Winston-Salem care center.

She was the wife of William K. Dalton, who retired in 1956 as controller and treasurer of the Asheville Citizen and Times.

She had lived in Greenwood, S.C., before moving to Asheville in 1926. She worked in several civic, cultural and religious activities. She was the first president of the Buncombe County Chapter of American Gold-Star Mothers Inc., the first in North Carolina, and served two years as state president.

She was an artist, having studied four years at Greenville, S.C., Women's College, now Furman University, and Lander College in Greenwood. Her work was exhibited in many art shows, and she also served as a judge.

She was co-organizer in 1937 of the Brucemont Garden Club; she had served twice as president and was civic chairman of the club. She was an officer of the Asheville Council of Garden Clubs and past area chairman of city beautification campaigns.

She was a former member of the board of directors of Buncombe County Chapter of the American Red Cross, West Asheville chairman for the Red Cross, Civil Defense and Easter Seal drives. For six years, she was hospitality and membership chairman of the YMCA. She also headed Vance and Hall Fletcher PTA's, the Community Club of Asheville, and was art chairman for District 2 of N.C. Federation of Women's Clubs. She was Democratic registrar of Precinct 14 for 15 years.

Surviving are two sons, retired Navy Cmdr. Charles W. Dalton of Madison Heights, Va., and retired Air Force Lt. Col. Windal K. Dalton of Las Vegas, Nev.; a daughter, Marilyn Jones of Atlanta; four grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Sunday in Calvary Baptist Church, where she was a member and teacher of the Sadolitan Class for 19 years. The Revs. Buddy Corbin and John Knight will officiate. Burial will be in Green Hills Cemetery.

The family will receive friends from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Saturday at Groce Funeral Home.

Logan Avenue Wins Beautification Prize In West Asheville

Awards Are Made At Annual Flower Show Of Community; O. V. Himes Is Winner Of Home Improvement Contest

Logan avenue won first prize of $25 for the West Asheville street making the greatest improvement in beautification during the spring and summer, it was announced last night at the close of the second annual West Asheville Flower show.

The show came as the climax of the second year of a five-year beautification campaign in West Asheville. The campaign and the show are sponsored by the three West Asheville clubs, the Community, the Men's, and the Junior Rhododendron clubs. Mrs. W. K. Dalton was chairman in charge of the show.

Second prize, of $10, for street improvement went to Brucemont circle, the judges remarking that Brucemont is the best kept street in the West Asheville section of the city.

Himes Wins Prize

For the greatest improvement in the grounds of a home, first prize of $15 went to O. V. Himes of Logan avenue, and the second prize of $10 to Mrs. Cornelius Leach of Louisiana avenue.

The flower show, held in the West Asheville Methodist church Sunday school rooms yesterday from 2 to 9 p. m., brought out a variety of blossoms which experts termed unusually fine, while the exhibits of the garden clubs were said to have shown exceptional originality and artistry.

First prize of $5 for the best garden club exhibit was awarded to the Logan Avenue club for its miniature garden—white house set well back from the street, reached by a flagstone walk, with flowers (real ones) bordering the green lawn, while white pines served as background and border for the whole.

Also Wins Loving Cup

The loving cup offered by the Council of Garden Clubs for outstanding achivement also went to the Logan Avenue Garden club. It will remain the club's property until the spring flower show, when it will again be awarded for outstanding achievement. It will become the permanent property of a club winning it three times.

The Blue Ridge club won second place in the garden club exhibit, and the Brucemont club, third. Honorable mention was accorded the exhibits of the Hantana and Westwood clubs.

Mrs. Maude E. Plemmons and Mrs. E. B. Roberts tied for the sweepstakes prize, offered to the individual scoring most points in the various groups.

In each of the various flower groups, a blue ribbon and a prize was awarded the first place winner; a red ribbon and a prize, the second place winner; and a white ribbon, the winner of third place. Winners of first, second, and third places follow:

DAMTOFT NAMED CLUB PRESIDENT

Other Officers Elected By West Asheville Club At Meeting

Walter J. Damtoft, Champion Fibre company official, was elected president of the West Asheville club for 1934 at the weekly meeting last night at the West Asheville Methodist church. He succeeds John Easton.

Other new officers are: O. E. Starnes, vice president; B. A. Darrosse, secretary; and A. E. Dunn, treasurer.

Newly elected directors are G. G. Morgan, M. W. Hamrick, S. J. Fortune, F. J. Austin, and Don C Young.

The club went on record as favoring the immediate erection of a high toll bridge across the French Broad river to connect West Asheville with Patton avenue. Don C. Young was requested to draw up resolutions to that effect and submit them to the city council and other public agencies endeavoring to have such a bridge approved by the public works administration.

W. E. Barker reported that the six pigs which the club gave to farm boys were thriving and that the pig committee expected to give a similar number away next April.

Local Girl Has Role In Movie

AC-T SN 6-6-90

By SUSAN GAMBRELL
Staff Writer

The casting director wanted someone they could play down, someone who could look, well, unpopular with her peers. It was a major role in the Lifetime cable network production of "Sudie and Simpson," based on Stone Mountain, Ga., author Sara Flanigan's 1986 novel, "Sudie."

The film dramatizes the 1940s-era tale of a 10-year-old white girl from a small Southern town and a black man who lives as a hermit in the woods.

Oscar winning actor Louis Gossett Jr. was cast as Simpson. Sara Gilbert, a star on "Roseanne," had the role of Sudie.

For the third leading role, that of Sudie's best friend, Mary Agnes, a West Asheville girl was chosen from a host of actresses from all over the country.

Paige Danahy, a 12-year-old student at Hall Fletcher Middle School who is active in local and regional theater, just completed filming last week and is excited about her film debut as Mary Agnes. Her parents, Valerie and Casey Danahy, are exuberant.

The road to stardom began when Catherine Brown, owner of Carolina Media Arts and Talent in Asheville, got a call from Chez casting.

"They wanted a young girl, one who could look younger than her age," said Brown, who is also Paige's agent. "The part she auditioned for is not the part she got. She got a much bigger role, the third lead in the movie."

Brown said when the casting agent described what he wanted, Paige immediately came to mind.

DANAHY

She had met Paige on the set of "Peace Child," a CATS Young Company production, in October 1989.

"She's very mature," Brown said of Paige. "She memorizes very well and follows directions well. She can do a lot more than just stage. She's been taking on-camera classes with Michael David McGuire at Backstage Studio in Mars Hill."

Brown took Paige and two other girls from this area to Atlanta for the try-outs. They called Paige back a second time, and the shooting began almost immediately.

"I came home and packed her things," said Mrs. Danahy, excitement in her voice. "We were there from April 30 through May 24, almost a month."

Paige had a private tutor for her school work, and she and her mother stayed in a hotel with the crew, which included Oscar-winning makeup artist Lynn Barber, who won an Academy Award this year for her work in "Driving Miss Daisy."

The hardest part now is the wait. The film won't be out until November or December.

"We're going to tape it, that's for sure," Mrs. Danahy said. "I'm real excited for her. Her dad's as proud as a peacock."

In the meantime, Paige said she's caught the acting bug and would love another movie role. Her picture has gone in for an NBC Movie of the Week, but she hasn't heard anything yet.

"I hope to keep doing this," she said. "If acting doesn't work, I'd like to be a lawyer."

BALLOON FLIGHTS TO FEATURE FAIR

"Dare Devil Jack," Famous Aeronaut, to Make Daily Ascensions Here.

Announcement is made today by Secretary D. Harris of the Western North Carolina Fair association that "Dare Devil Jack," a well known aeronaut of this country, will make daily balloon ascensions at the fair, which opens here next Tuesday morning, October 13, for four days. This of course, will be another of the big free attractions and promises to draw very largely during the four days of the exposition.

William E. Engelke and E. A. Medearis, pyrotechnical experts in the employ of Martin's Fireworks company, arrived here Sunday and are making arrangements for the big fireworks displays that will be shown at Riverside park each evening during the fair next week. The Martin people were at the Beaverdam fair in Wisconsin last week, and this week are in Milwaukee. Reports from all places where the exhibitions have been put on are to the effect that the attraction is drawing mammoth crowds, 45,000 people witnessing the fireworks the last day in Beaverdam.

Mrs. Olive Dargan's Latest Novel To Be Published Sept. 11

"A Stone Came Rolling Home," a novel by Olive Tilford Dargan, noted author who resides at 58 Balsam avenue, West Asheville, will appear September 11, it was learned yesterday from Mrs. Dargan who has just returned from New York City where she conferred with her publishers in regard to the publication of the book.

This is the first novel which Mrs. Dargan has written since "Call Home the Heart," which created widespread interest. "Call Home the Heart" appeared in February, 1932, under the pen name of Fielding Burke. "A Stone Came Rolling" will be published under the same pen name, Mrs. Dargan said.

Bly Emerson, a mill owner, is the leading character in "A Stone Came Rolling." The book is mainly concerned with the struggles of the mill owner to keep his business going. A few of the characters of "Call Home the Heart" appear in "A Stone Came Rolling." Included among these are Ishma Waycaster and her husband, Britt.

Langmans, Green and Company of New York will publish "A Stone Came Rolling."

Mrs. Dargan was named to the national committee of the Writers' congress which met recently in New York. Waldo Frank is chairman of the committee. The congress is now holding an international meeting in Paris.

During the greater part of the summer Mrs. Dargan will be occupied in collecting pictures of mountain people and subjects for a reprint of her book, "Highland Annals," which appeared in 1924. She plans to go into the mountains and take the pictures herself. Additional stories will be added to the reprint of "Highland Annals."

Except for a few weeks in the latter part of August when she plans to visit friends at Rye, Long Island, Mrs. Dargan will remain in Asheville and Western North Carolina this summer.

MRS. OLIVE T. DARGAN

Mrs. Dargan, was invited to be a member of the faculty of the Banners Elk School of English to be conducted for six weeks beginning July 25 at Banners Elk, but did not accept. However she plans to read some of her poems during sessions of the school which is in charge of Dr. Edwin Osgood Grover of Rollins college, Winter Park, Fla. She had been invited to take the place of Miss Jessie Rittenhouse, noted poet and author, on the faculty. The purpose of the school, which will have noted writers on the faculty, is to develop and gratify an interest in creative writing. Julia Peterkin will also read at some of the sessions.

Mrs. Dargan was in New York for two months.

OLIVE DARGAN'S NOVELS WRITTEN IN RUSTIC HOME

Authoress Has Workshop In Picturesque House Here

"Well, we have come to see Mrs. Daniel Boone!"

Friends of Olive Tilford Dargan, noted authoress and poet, jokingly greeted her in this manner when she first bought her rustic home on Balsam avenue in West Asheville. Then, the little mountain home, which has an interesting story of its own, had just passed into the hands of the new owner and was in need of repairs.

Was Pioneer Log Cabin

Bluebonnet lodge, as the writer has named her home, is a charming house at the end of Balsam avenue. The original portion of the home was a pioneer one-room log cabin which is said to be the oldest house yet standing within the city limits.

The one-room cabin came into prominence some years ago Rutherford P. Hayes, son of the nineteenth president of the United States, converted it into a comfortable rustic home for his aunt, who lived here awhile. The president's son, who came to Asheville early in 1900 for his health, remained here about 20 years.

On a ride while visiting in Asheville in 1925, Mrs. Dargan saw the little rustic home. Plans to go to England to reside were given up, for the little home under the two large pine trees seemed so restful that it made Great Britain appear rather formidable, she said.

She bought the place to make sure that she would return, and then after a few months' trip abroad she came to Asheville in 1926 to make her home. The old pioneer chimney is still standing and two more chimneys were added. She made the little home comfortable with improvements and added to its picturesqueness with two small balconies, one on the east side and the other on the west side.

Surrounded By Greenery

Bluebonnet lodge is surrounded by a wealth of greenery, including trumpet vines over the chimney, clematis, boxwoods, rhododendron, kalmia and masses of forsythia which practically conceal the rear of the house. Most of the expansive lawn is shaded by large pine trees, and not far away from the home beside a wooded path one finds the spring from which the pioneer occupants of the cabin obtained their water. On the grounds are pear and apple trees, the latter being especially popular with small boys in the neighborhood. The youngsters know that they may have the apples that fall on the ground and they also know that the good-natured writer will turn her back so that they may get others. The writer has a charming out-of-doors studio which she converted from the stable on the grounds.

It is in this setting that Mrs. Dargan has her workshop. It was here she produced "Call Home the Heart" popular novel of three years ago, and "A Stone Came Rolling," her newest book which will come out this fall with Longman, Green and Company as publishers.

Historical marker honors author

Many considered Olive Tilford Dargan 'the best portraitist of the Southern Appalachian people'

By Susan G. Reinhardt
STAFF WRITER

In 1925, a tiny, curly-haired woman less than 5 feet tall moved into a log house in West Asheville, on wooded farmland, that is now the site of a shopping area surrounding the post office on Patton Avenue.

Olive Tilford Dargan was born on a farm in Kentucky and blessed with an eager mind and intelligence. Widowed and middle-aged, she moved into the cabin, lugged her typewriter to a room upstairs, set it by a window from which she spent more than 40 years viewing the mountains, absorbing inspiration for her novels, volumes of poetry, short story collections and plays.

Hers was a legacy of work honored by many, a treasury of words that strived to find a voice for the oppressed, the working class, and make sense of a world that to Dargan often seemed senseless, misguided.

What Dargan left Asheville, and the rest of the world, was her heart, bound in the leather and paper that wrapped her

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES

WHO: Olive Tilford Dargan, well-known author who spent more than 40 years living in West Asheville, in a log home once owned by the son of former President Rutherford B. Hayes.

WHAT: Will be honored this spring with an historical marker to be placed near the site of her home at Haywood Road and Balsam Avenue.

BACKGROUND: Born in 1869 in Litchfield, Ky., daughter of school teachers. She attended Peabody College in Nashville, Tenn. She discovered Western North Carolina during a camping trip and said as a child she would one day live in the mountains.

Dargan entered Radcliffe College at 24 and studied economics and politics. There she met Louis Pegram Dargan, a Harvard senior from Darlington, S.C. and the man she married in 1898. He drowned in 1915 on a voyage to Cuba and Dargan sought refuge in the mountains, first living on a farm near Bryson City, then moving to the cabin in West Asheville.

Dargan, the daughter of school teachers and a precocious child who at 14 took charge of an entire school teaching students from age 6 to 20, found peace and inspiration in the log cabin at 58 Balsam Avenue. It was located on an estate once owned by Rutherford Platt Hayes, son of former President Rutherford B. Hayes, who had maintained the home for an aunt.

And though the cabin has long been gone, the land now home to commercial development on the fringe of Patton Avenue, Dargan will soon be immortalized in her old neighborhood.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE: Catherine Morris, who lives in the Falconhurst community, (name of Hayes' former estate), has been working to unearth some of West Asheville's most historical and notable people. She was notified last month that an historical marker in honor of the beloved poet and writer would be erected this spring.

"You should have seen me jumping up and down," said Morris, upon hearing the the news from the North Carolina Department of Cultural Resources. To qualify for a marker, Morris said, isn't easy. The subject must be considered of statewide importance, not just for local or regional accomplishments.

According to Rob Neufeld, local historian, Dargan is of national and world-wide significance, considered by many the best portraitist of the Southern Appalachian people.

"She combines a very honest, interesting-type view of people with true poetry," he said, "and she had a real sympathy for the oppressed people. It was a very unusual combination."

Dargan was deeply concerned with social problems, the ramifications of big business, mergers and the effects on the employer and employees. Her most significant novel, "Call Home the Heart," dealt with a mountain family whose venturesome daughter left the hills to go into the industrial world. The focus of the book was upon the mill strike in Gastonia, and not only was it the recipient of the Maxim Gorky award in 1932, but also a means to forward Dargan's beliefs.

It was followed by "A Stone Came Rolling," considered by many a novel of even greater merit, and "Sons of a Stranger (1947), which focused on men and women and mining in the early 1900s.

In this area, Dargan is perhaps best known by "Highland Annals," an account of the Southern mountaineers, published in 1925, a collection of sketches of the life in the Nantahala Mountains. The critics praised the work and Dargan received an honorary Doctor of Literature degree from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

During her life she received the Thomas Wolfe, Roanoke-Chowan and Oscar Arnold Young awards. In 1959, Dargan was honored as one of the nation's greatest poets by the Poetry Society in New York City.

Yet despite her distinguished and celebrated mind, Olive Dargan was a woman who dodged the limelight, preferring instead the attention be focused on the people about whom she wrote.

INSPIRATION: Gazing at the purple mountains, the setting beyond her window filled with blooms and trees, flowering shrubs and boxwoods, Dargan wrote about a society she saw as unjust. She was a modest woman who declined for years being noted in "Who's Who in America." Finally she gave in.

"If I have done anything of record," she said in the 1930s, "time will take care of it after I am dead, and if I haven't, time will take care of that too."

She preferred not hobnobbing with other literary greats, but instead using her genius to become a literary artist, hoping her works would be widely read so that those who entered her poetry and prose would discover the horrors, the crimes, the injustices and the shame in some human conditions.

This is what drove Dargan, who at 12 asked her father, "What's wrong with the world?"

Her desire was to bring awareness through works she left behind.

And now, after her death in 1968 at the age of 99, Dargan is being remembered again.

"This has excited the local historians," Neufeld said. "All of a sudden a tremendous aspect of local history was revealed, unburied."

Reprint of regional classic deserves reader applause

FROM MY HIGHEST HILL
By Olive Tilford Dargan
Published by University of Tennessee Press
$22.50 paperback, 336 pages, 50 illustrations

By Geoffrey Cantrell
REGIONAL EDITOR

Long out of print, "From My Highest Hill, Carolina Mountain Folks" finds new life as Western North Carolina concludes the 20th century, and time diminishes memories of what life here was once like.

First published in 1925 as "Highland Annals" and revised under its current title in 1941, the book was reissued by the University of Tennessee Press in October and can be found in local bookstores. The author, Olive Tilford Dargan, died at 99 years old in 1968.

"From My Highest Hill" is set in Almond, a small mountain community in western Swain County, where Dargan made her home after the turn of the century.

The novel attempts to dispel the "hillbilly" stereotype: lanky, lazy, inbred and suspicious of outsiders. Dargan does this through rich, involved characters who live, love, face the occasional crisis and maintain steadfast dignity. Dargan populates the book with people of resolve and determination – anything but stereotypical images of mountain folk.

Perhaps this was because Dargan wrote of what she knew. Not unlike Asheville's Thomas Wolfe, she tells her own story and that of her neighbors through thinly veiled fiction. Only the names have been changed – to protect the innocent – with a notable exception.

One of her neighbors, Jess Rose, was well known as a straightforward and honest man. Rose apparently was insistent that his name be used, and that a photograph of him be identified as such.

His portrait is one of 50 photographs illustrating "From My Highest Hill" all taken by Bayard Wootten, then a well-known, albeit rare, woman photographer, whose work is finding renewed recognition.

Dialogue is recreated with an accuracy not seen in other works, including Horace Kephart's "Our Southern Highlanders."

Today a four-lane highway is being built through Almond. But reading "From My Highest Hill" isn't merely an exercise in nostalgia. The story is fresh, the characters are believable. There is no author's ego at stake in this reissue, and UT Press is to be congratulated for the reprint.

Fiction, Plays, and Poetry
Asheville, North Carolina

Olive Tilford Dargan was born on a farm in Kentucky on January 11, 1869. Ten years later the family moved to the Missouri Ozarks, where her parents founded a school. At age fourteen, Olive became their assistant, teaching forty students in a one-room school ranging in ages from six to twenty. At seventeen, she won a scholarship to Peabody College and, upon graduation, taught in Arkansas and Texas before attending Radcliffe.

At Radcliffe she met Pegram Dargan, a South Carolina poet then a senior at Harvard. After a year's teaching in Nova Scotia, she returned to Boston and renewed her friendship with Dargan. When she moved to Blue Ridge, Georgia, to write, the poet followed her there, and they subsequently married and settled down in New York City.

It was there that Olive Tilford Dargan began her literary career in 1904 with the publication of poetic dramas and lyric poetry. While in college, she had gone on a camping trip to the mountains of North Carolina and had vowed to have a home there one day, a dream that was fulfilled in 1906 when the Dargans bought Horizon Farm on the Nantahala River in Swain County. Having dependable tenants allowed them to travel extensively, and Olive spent much of her time in England. There she completed a non-fiction work, The Welsh Pony, followed by her first book of mountain poetry, Path Flower and Other Verses.

When her husband drowned off the coast of Cuba in 1915, Dargan returned to the North Carolina mountains and spent most of her time there until the farmhouse burned in 1923. During this period, she published three distinctly different collections of poetry. The Cycle's Rim (1916), a collection of sonnets dedicated to her late husband, won a $500 prize from the Southern Society of New York. Lute and Furrow (1922) contained lyrical verse inspired by her love for the mountains, as does The Spotted Hawk (1958), which won the Roanoke-Chowan Poetry Award.

After moving to Asheville in 1925 she wrote the collection of short stories many consider her best work, Highland Annals, and three novels under the pen name Fielding Burke, as well as a final book of verse and a last short story collection. Dargan is widely considered to be one of the best authors ever to come out of the Appalachian South. Few have surpassed her in the description of mountain beauty or in her sympathy for the less fortunate.

Two of her novels revolve around the role of mountain migrants in the Gastonia Mill strike, and the third, Sons of the Stranger (1947), takes place in Colorado during a coal mine strike in which the National Guard machine-guns a tent city full of evicted miners. Call Home the Heart (1932) is the first of these novels, and generally considered the most powerful. Although published 58 years after her first book, Dargan's last, Innocent Bigamy and Other Stories, still revealed enormous talent. One of her most treasured accolades was an honorary degree bestowed upon her in 1925 by the University of North Carolina. She died on January 22, 1968, eleven days after her 99th birthday.

"A Proper Funeral"

We were on our way to see Uncle Nathe Ponder buried. Serena was as happy as she could be with decency, considering our solemn destination. She had not been away from home for several months, and her joyous reaction could be suppressed only intermittently. But, at any time, her laughter was pleasantly low of key, as if she were softly trying it out before subjecting you to the full flow that never came.

And Serena was infectious. I had set out with my mind meditatively intrenched on the going down of men into the grave; the passing of man himself, of earth, of suns, of systems, with no full-grown hope of any immortal salvage; but Serena, pulsingly aware in a significant world, soon restored me to stature as a member of a community bent on giving due honor to one whose days among them had been spent with the vividness that amounts to virtue among a people who look to life for their drama instead of the stage and the morning papers.

We had left home early because of Len's prediction that we should have to walk after reaching Red Hog Gap, the entrance to Silver Valley. "But we'll be in two miles o' the graveyard then," he said, "an' can pick it up in no time." Uncle Nathe's farm lay in Silver Valley township only four miles, by crow's wing, northwest of mine, but the descent over cliffs and crags was hazardous and we had set off in exactly the opposite direction, walking the two miles down to Beebread, where Arnold Weaver was waiting on the new highway with his car - the first automobile to become a local pride in our part of the mountains. We soon sailed over the few miles of highway and reached Scatter, the next railroad-station below Beebread, where we turned into the narrow mountain road leading to Uncle Nathe's country. Here we began to come upon people who were walking to the funeral, and it was here that our car, through Len's cordiality, became so firmly packed. He extended invitations until the seats, the floor, and the running-boards would hold no more. "You're payin' fer the whole car," he said, "an' might as well git yer money's worth."

We were bouncing heavily along over the rutty road when ahead of us we saw a young man whose brisk step was certainly not of the highlands. There were various unsuccessful conjectures as to his identity, and suddenly Len called out: "Hey, Arn, stop yer shooter! It's Ann Lindsay's boy!"

"He'd have to set 'tween yer big toe an' the long un," said Arn. "I ain't goin' to stop no more."

"But he's come all the way from C'lumby to be at Uncle Nathe's buryin'."

"He didn't walk only from Scatter."

"I'll jump out an' let him set in my place."

"You ain't got any place. You're settin' on the tip aidge o' nothin'."

But Arn stopped the car. "Here, Bake," said Len, "I'm gittin' out, an' you hop in. Reckon you know me?"

"Len Merlin!" cried the stranger. "You caught that fox yet?"

"No, he's waitin' fer ye."

"Can't get him this trip. Got to hurry back. Go on, Arn, with your baggage. I'm walking to rest myself. Been on the train since last night. I'll see you all over the hill."

His refusal of the "seat" was positive, and we moved on, but not far. We were climbing the hill leading to Red Hog Gap and Len's prediction came true. The car refused to take the last lap over the hill, though we gave it an opportunity to do its best, by dropping out and scattering as readily as overripe plums from a suddenly shaken bough. With good cheer we began our walk to the graveyard. When nearly there we were overtaken by Bake Lindsay, and Len picked up their broken conversation.

"What yer hurryin' to git back fer ? You ain't been in sence when?"

"Not since I was married," said Lindsay, "and that's five years. I started soon as I heard about Uncle Nathe."

"Is he really a nephew of Mr. Ponder ?" I asked of the woman walking nearest to me, for with the whole country calling him "uncle," the blood-kin were left without distinction.

"No, he ain't no nephew," she said in a tone that I had learned to recognize as a shut trail in Unakasia. The story was not for me, an outsider. Even Len and Serena had turned a gently impassive front to my very reasonable interest in Uncle Nathe's family history. But Serena now stepped up and said intimately: "Jest wait, Mis' Dolly. We'll go to dinner with Aunt Lizy Haynes. Uncle Nathe's half-brother, Ranz, is stayin' there, an he's shore to let loose after the buryin'. When Uncle Ranz lets loose it's something else, I'm tryin' to tell ye. They won't be any more questions to ast when he gits through." Then she moved over to Bake. "It's fine, yore comin' in, Bake," she said.

"Of course I wanted to be at the funeral, but," he explained honestly, "I've come mainly to get mother."

"She goin' back with you ?" cried half a dozen voices.

"She's promised to. I've been trying to get her to come out to me and Jenny ever since we've been married." Then his voice seemed to struggle a little. "Before we tied up, Jenny gave me her word that she'd be good to mother, and I know she'll keep it."

"You got any young-uns?" asked Len, and Bake said he had a little boy. They had named him Nathan.

"That tickled Uncle Nathe, I reckon," said the woman who had answered me the moment before. Then she hastened to cover her indiscretion. "'Course y'all have been on his place a long time, an' he's been mighty good to ye."

"He's been good to ever'body," said another.

"I reckon he has," said Bake, and we entered the graveyard. It was to be a Masonic funeral. Uncle Nathe's popularity would have drawn a large attendance, but the presence of the Fraternity made the occasion an event in Silver Valley's history. Nathan Ponder had been the only Freemason in his township, a member of the distant lodge in Carson, and for years he had not been in active attendance there, but he had left a request to be buried by the brethren, and they had gallantly responded.

"That's Elmer Jenkins," whispered Serena of a man who was prominent in the ceremony. "He's a lawyer, come up from South C'liny 'bout a year ago, 'count of his wife's health, an' settled in Carson."

"Looks like," said another voice, "that they could 'a' got along 'thout a furriner to tell 'em what to do."

"He's high up in the lodge," said Uncle Ranz Ponder, the half-brother of Uncle Nathe, "an' he seems mighty frien'ly."

The old and impressive service was solemnly conducted to the end, and there was a general breaking-up, amid a conflict of invitations for everybody to go home with everybody else for dinner.

"We'll go with Aunt Lizy," said Serena. "They's a lot been astin' me, but they ain't none of 'em pulled the buttons off my clo's tryin' to take me with 'em, an' I know we'll be full welcome at Aunt Lizy's. Uncle Ranz, he's her cousin, he'll be there, like I said."

So Mrs. Haynes's invitation was accepted. Serena and I were to stay until the next day but Len and the daughter, Lonie, were to return that evening to look after the children, the cows, and the chickens.

The brethren who had come out from Carson returned to town, with the exception of Lawyer Jenkins, who, probably was thinking of profitable affiliations with the remote but fertile valley. I observed him reading the headstones around the new-made grave, and it seemed to me that he was afflicted with a growing concern. He turned, with a question, to the man nearest him, who happened to be Len.

"Am I to understand that our good brother was married four times?"

"You shore air," said Len. "There lays four of as good wives as a man ever had. Them tombstones don't tell no lies. They's all 'fore my time, savin' Aunt Lindy, his last 'un, but I've hearn enough to know what they wuz."

"But four? Isn't it a little unusual?"

"Well, maybe it is, but Uncle Nathe wuzn't no hand to set at home by hissef."

At that moment, to Len's apparent relief, Aunt Lizy came up, and we found that Mr. Jenkins also had accepted her invitation. He walked with her husband Uncle Dan'l Haynes, and I gathered from drifting fragments of their conversation that Mr. Jenkins was still on the trail of Uncle Nathe's connubial history.

At the dinner-table he pleased all of the guests by introducing the topic from which they were politely holding back. "I have been learning from our kind host," he said, eying with favor his selected piece of fried chicken, "what this loss means to the community."

"Yes," some one responded, "it knocks all of us, losin' Nathe does."

"There is some property too, I believe. I trust there is harmony among the heirs."

"They're all behavin' fine," said Aunt Lizy, with some heartiness.

"Our brother was married several times, I understand. Did - er - all of his wives leave issue ?"

"Young-uns? No, Aunt Lindy never had any, ner Lu Siler, but Callie had a little feller that died - Rufe, they called him. An' Ponnie, his fust wife, left four, all livin' yit. They git along together fust-rate."

"I wonder what Ponnie would 'a' said," reflected Uncle Dan'l, "ef somebody had told her Nathe wouldn't be buried alongside o' her."

"Well," said Uncle Ranz, "I'd ruther not hear what Ponnie would 'a' said."

"I say it ought to 'a' been Lindy he wuz laid by," asserted Aunt Lizy. "She lived with him the longest an' worked the hardest."

"She didn't think a grain more o' him than Lu Siler did," returned Uncle Dan'l.

Fielding Burke [Olive Tilford Dargan]

By Jennifer Vencill

Just four years after the conclusion of the Civil War, in 1869, Grayson County, Kentucky, served as the birthplace of Olive Tilford Dargan to her abolitionist parents, Elisha Francis Tilford and Rebecca Day Tilford. Dargan followed in her father's footsteps and became an educator, but it is not for this employment that she is remembered (Davidson and Martin 233). Instead, Dargan is noted for her long and varied literary career that included published novels, short stories, poems, anecdotes, and dramas.

Educated first in her father's academy in Arkansas then at the George Peabody College for Teachers in Nashville, Tennessee, Dargan held teaching positions in Arkansas, Missouri, Texas and Canada. This career ended quickly, though, for when Dargan went to Radcliffe College in Cambridge, Massachusetts, to continue her education, she met her future husband Pegram Dargan. In 1898 the man from North Carolina and the girl from Kentucky were married. The two, both aspiring writers, moved to New York to pursue new careers. The couple moved again in 1906, this time to Almond, North Carolina, because of Pegram's health (Davidson and Martin 233). By this time, however, Dargan had begun her career as a lyrical dramatist, as two of her collections, Semiramis and Other Plays (1904) and Lords and Lovers and Other Dramas (1906), had been published. Relocating again, Dargan lived in London from 1911 until 1914, during which time another of her dramas and her first collection of lyric poetry, Path Flower and Other Verses, were published. Unfortunately the drama, The Mortal Gods, dealing with the oppression of the working class in modern industrial society, was not well received by critics (Mainiero 457). Dargan returned to the Appalachians in 1915 following her husband's death by drowning, where she lived and wrote in Almond and Asheville, North Carolina, for the remainder of her life.

The Cycle's Rim (1916) was Dargan's first work published after her return to the south. This collection of fifty-three sonnets, written as a memorial to one drowned at sea, received much praise and was considered to be of the quality of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's Sonnets from the Portuguese (Mainiero 457). Following the publishing of Flutter of the Gold Leaf, and other Plays (1922) with Dr. Frederic Peterson and Lute and Furrow (1922), Dargan was awarded an honorary doctorate in literature from the University of North Carolina (Who Was Who 169).

Highland Annals, published in 1924, marked a shift in Dargan's writing away from poetry and drama. The work, which was reprinted with photographs in 1941 as From My Highest Hill, revealed Dargan's tendencies toward the left wing of the political continuum (Davidson and Martin 234). The seemingly autobiographical sketches reveal the imperfections of the mountain people, including the vulnerability of the poor white woman and the threat of the exploitation of the cotton mill, while exhibiting the traditional features of southern local color writing. These characteristics include exhibitions of an appreciation of nature, use of extravagant humor, use of local language, and use of tall tales (Mainiero 457).

Despite twenty years worth of published work, Dargan's most influential contributions to the world of literature had yet to come. Dargan's left-wing political orientation was again revealed in Call Home the Heart, the tale of a North Carolina mountain girl, Ishma Waycaster. Ishma, in an attempt to gain freedom from the obligations piled upon her by her family, husband, and mountain life, flees with a lover to an urban, industrial area (Kunitz and Haycraft 348). It is here that Ishma witnesses the exploitation of textile workers and attempts to organize a labor union. She educates herself in and embraces the theories of Marxist socialism, but as a result is accused of being a communist. When it appears to Ishma that she has been defeated, she returns home to her husband and mountain life. Based on the 1929 mill strikes in Gastonia and Marion, North Carolina--also the subject of a novel by Sherwood Anderson--Call Home the Heart was published in 1932 under the pseudonym Fielding Burke (Davidson and Martin 234). Ishma's story is continued in a sequel published in 1935 entitled A Stone Came Rolling, again under the name Fielding Burke. In the continuation, Ishma's tendencies toward revolution are reaffirmed following the death of her husband (May 132). The two novels are considered more than political vehicles due to the complexity of Ishma's character and relationships (Davidson and Martin 234).

Moving away from the theme of feminism, but continuing with that of socialism, Dargan's third novel, Sons of the Stranger, was published in 1947. It features a male labor organizer and examines the labor movement in a mining community at the turn of the century (May 132). Again, Dargan used her pen name of Fielding Burke.

Dargan's final piece of published work was a return after thirty years to poetry. Her collection, The Spotted Hawk (1958), won three poetry awards, including the 1959 Roanoke-Chowan Award for poetry (Davidson and Martin 234).

Dargan, who considered herself to be a Marxist and a feminist and who was considered by others to be a champion of liberal causes, served as a charter member of the Poetry Society of America and honorary member of the Radcliffe Club in New York. When she died January 22, 1968, at the age of ninety-nine, the much decorated Dargan had amassed an amazing total of thirteen sizeable pieces of literature in four different forms (Who Was Who 169).

Review: The Heart of Revolution: The Ra Life and Novels of Olive Dargan

Kathy Cantley Ackerman. The Heart of Revolution: The Radical Life an of Olive Dargan. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press, 2004. 23 Hardback. $29.95.

If only for her longevity, Olive Tilford Dargan is a significant figure in Am letters. Born in 1869, she lived just one year short of a century and enjoy fifty-eight year publishing career. Her first book, Semiramis and Other Pl published by Scribners in 1904. Her final book, Innocent Bigamy and Ot Stories, was issued by John F. Blair in 1962. Though not prolific she was versatile, claiming plays, poetry, short stories, and novels among her fifte volumes. In mid-career she adopted a pseudonym, Fielding Burke, which used for each of her three novels, all proletarian and polemical works. Pe both her longevity and versatility have mitigated against a deserved critic reputation. Today she is remembered primarily for one novel and one co of short stories.

The addition of Kathy Ackerman's thoroughly researched and gracefully study is welcomed as the first full length book about this extraordinary lit figure. As her title indicates, she limits her attention to the Fielding Burke Call Home the Heart (1932), A Stone Came Rolling (1935), and Sons of Stranger (1947). Her ambitious thesis is that Dargan's work should be c in light of her "treatments of proletarianism, feminism, and race, with spe attention to the ways these issues intersect in the southern Appalachian biographical section that begins the work, Ackerman tells the anecdote o Dargan's working in Boston as a stenographer to a rubber manufacturer day he dictated two letters, one ordering the abrupt closing of a factory, t complaining about the upholstery of his yacht. Thus the inequalities of th capitalist industrial system were brought forcefully home to her. In 1904 I met Rose Pastor Stokes, a founding member of the American Communis who became one of her closest friends. Ackerman offers more than one suggestion as to why Dargan chose to use a non-gender specific pseud her three novels, but the most salient one is that they were so radical tha author feared reprisal in that politically charged era.

The question of why Ackerman did not simply use Fielding Burke as the answered by one of her primary tenets: that Dargan's radical inclinations long before she demonstrated them in the novels. For instance, in the

Though Dargan's college education included a year at Radcliffe and her jobs were in Nova Scotia, Boston, and New York, it was her move to App that launched her writing career. In 1925 she published her most succes book, Highland Annals (later reissued as From My Highest Hill). That coll short stories is based on her experiences in rural Appalachia and is gene genial retelling of her relationship with the mountain folk she encountere when she moved from the country to the town, her writing became more She was living in Asheville, North Carolina, in 1929, the year of cotton mi in nearby Gastonia and Marion, the events that provided her with specific material to embody her political stances and move to a new genre, the n

One of the most impressive aspects of Ackerman's book is her use of unpublished letters found in several collections throughout the country. D correspondence with Rose Stokes reveals that she actually went to Gast visited with the strikers, something she was able to do because of Rose's influence. In April 1929, Dargan wrote Rose, "I'm stamped 'middle-class' . . . But the strikers like me and make me feel like blood-kin—bless their bones!" Ackerman has found so much correspondence, in fact, that an e Dargan's letters would be a useful tool to Appalachian scholars.

Call Home the Heart is the literal center of Ackerman's study. She exami and to a lesser extent, the sequel, A Stone Came Rolling, in light of the proletarian movement in American letters, in comparison to other strike n the period and in the historical accounting of the events of the Gastonia s Ishma Waycaster, the protagonist of both novels, undergoes enormous c as she moves from her isolated mountain home of Cloudy Knob to the de populated and troubled Winbury. Ackerman devotes five of her nine chap the Gastonia novels, emphasizing Dargan's treatment of feminism, race, activism, and romance as they are demonstrated in the contrasting and conflicting issues of Ishma's life. Because Ishma, presented generally sympathetically, shows her revulsion to a black woman in one gripping s race relations becomes a particularly difficult problem. Ackerman points Dargan felt that the labor organizers underestimated the depth of racism South. Feminist attitudes are also counter-poised against the prevailing patriarchal practices of the time and Dargan's own celebration of the prir romantic love. It is to Ackerman's credit that she undertakes such a pleth complex issues in her study of the Gastonia novels.

The Heart of Revolution concludes with two other chapters, brief ones or a Stranger and on Dargan's reactions to the critics. Though they seem a in comparison with the full treatment of the earlier chapters, they are nev useful. Whatever organizational flaws the book might have, it is an impor addition to scholarship on the proletarian novels of the thirties, the issues feminism and racism in literature, and especially to our understanding of Tilford Dargan, a refined Victorian lady writer who, having become a con sympathizer, fought against social and economic oppression and champi ideal of a classless society. She deserves the attention that Ackerman's encourage.

Reprint of regional classic deserves reader applause

FROM MY HIGHEST HILL
By Olive Tilford Dargan
Published by University of Tennessee Press
$22.50 paperback, 336 pages, 50 illustrations

By Geoffrey Cantrell
REGIONAL EDITOR

Long out of print, "From My Highest Hill, Carolina Mountain Folks" finds new life as Western North Carolina concludes the 20th century, and time diminishes memories of what life here was once like.

First published in 1925 as "Highland Annals" and revised under its current title in 1941, the book was reissued by the University of Tennessee Press in October and can be found in local bookstores. The author, Olive Tilford Dargan, died at 99 years old in 1968.

"From My Highest Hill" is set in Almond, a small mountain community in western Swain County, where Dargan made her home after the turn of the century.

The novel attempts to dispel the "hillbilly" stereotype: lanky, lazy, inbred and suspicious of outsiders. Dargan does this through rich, involved characters who live, love, face the occasional crisis and maintain steadfast dignity. Dargan populates the book with people of resolve and determination – anything but stereotypical images of mountain folk.

Perhaps this was because Dargan wrote of what she knew. Not unlike Asheville's Thomas Wolfe, she tells her own story and that of her neighbors through thinly veiled fiction. Only the names have been changed – to protect the innocent – with a notable exception.

One of her neighbors, Jess Rose, was well known as a straightforward and honest man. Rose apparently was insistent that his name be used, and that a photograph of him be identified as such.

His portrait is one of 50 photographs illustrating "From My Highest Hill" all taken by Bayard Wootten, then a well-known, albeit rare, woman photographer, whose work is finding renewed recognition.

Dialogue is recreated with an accuracy not seen in other works, including Horace Kephart's "Our Southern Highlanders."

Today a four-lane highway is being built through Almond. But reading "From My Highest Hill" isn't merely an exercise in nostalgia. The story is fresh, the characters are believable. There is no author's ego at stake in this reissue, and UT Press is to be congratulated for the reprint.

Olive Tilford Dargan

(1869 -1968)

Fiction, Plays, and Poetry
Asheville, North Carolina

Olive Tilford Dargan was born on a farm in Kentucky on January 11, 1869. Ten years later the family moved to the Missouri Ozarks, where her parents founded a school. At age fourteen, Olive became their assistant, teaching forty students in a one-room school ranging in ages from six to twenty. At seventeen, she won a scholarship to Peabody College and, upon graduation, taught in Arkansas and Texas before attending Radcliffe.

At Radcliffe she met Pegram Dargan, a South Carolina poet then a senior at Harvard. After a year's teaching in Nova Scotia, she returned to Boston and renewed her friendship with Dargan. When she moved to Blue Ridge, Georgia, to write, the poet followed her there, and they subsequently married and settled down in New York City.

It was there that Olive Tilford Dargan began her literary career in 1904 with the publication of poetic dramas and lyric poetry. While in college, she had gone on a camping trip to the mountains of North Carolina and had vowed to have a home there one day, a dream that was fulfilled in 1906 when the Dargans bought Horizon Farm on the Nantahala River in Swain County. Having dependable tenants allowed them to travel extensively, and Olive spent much of her time in England. There she completed a non-fiction work, The Welsh Pony, followed by her first book of mountain poetry, Path Flower and Other Verses.

When her husband drowned off the coast of Cuba in 1915, Dargan returned to the North Carolina mountains and spent most of her time there until the farmhouse burned in 1923. During this period, she published three distinctly different collections of poetry. The Cycle's Rim (1916), a collection of sonnets dedicated to her late husband, won a $500 prize from the Southern Society of New York. Lute and Furrow (1922) contained lyrical verse inspired by her love for the mountains, as does The Spotted Hawk (1958), which won the Roanoke-Chowan Poetry Award.

After moving to Asheville in 1925 she wrote the collection of short stories many consider her best work, Highland Annals, and three novels under the pen name Fielding Burke, as well as a final book of verse and a last short story collection. Dargan is widely considered to be one of the best authors ever to come out of the Appalachian South. Few have surpassed her in the description of mountain beauty or in her sympathy for the less fortunate.

Two of her novels revolve around the role of mountain migrants in the Gastonia Mill strike, and the third, Sons of the Stranger (1947), takes place in Colorado during a coal mine strike in which the National Guard machine-guns a tent city full of evicted miners. Call Home the Heart (1932) is the first of these novels, and generally considered the most powerful. Although published 58 years after her first book, Dargan's last, Innocent Bigamy and Other Stories, still revealed enormous talent. One of her most treasured accolades was an honorary degree bestowed upon her in 1925 by the University of North Carolina. She died on January 22, 1968, eleven days after her 99th birthday.

"A Proper Funeral"

We were on our way to see Uncle Nathe Ponder buried. Serena was as happy as she could be with decency, considering our solemn destination. She had not been away from home for several months, and her joyous reaction could be suppressed only intermittently. But, at any time, her laughter was pleasantly low of key, as if she were softly trying it out before subjecting you to the full flow that never came.

And Serena was infectious. I had set out with my mind meditatively intrenched on the going down of men into the grave; the passing of man himself, of earth, of suns, of systems, with no full-grown hope of any immortal salvage; but Serena, pulsingly aware in a significant world, soon restored me to stature as a member of a community bent on giving due honor to one whose days among them had been spent with the vividness that amounts to virtue among a people who look to life for their drama instead of the stage and the morning papers.

We had left home early because of Len's prediction that we should have to walk after reaching Red Hog Gap, the entrance to Silver Valley. "But we'll be in two miles o' the graveyard then," he said, "an' can pick it up in no time." Uncle Nathe's farm lay in Silver Valley township only four miles, by crow's wing, northwest of mine, but the descent over cliffs and crags was hazardous and we had set off in exactly the opposite direction, walking the two miles down to Beebread, where Arnold Weaver was waiting on the new highway with his car - the first automobile to become a local pride in our part of the mountains. We soon sailed over the few miles of highway and reached Scatter, the next railroad-station below Beebread, where we turned into the narrow mountain road leading to Uncle Nathe's country. Here we began to come upon people who were walking to the funeral, and it was here that our car, through Len's cordiality, became so firmly packed. He extended invitations until the seats, the floor, and the running-boards would hold no more. "You're payin' fer the whole car," he said, "an' might as well git yer money's worth."

We were bouncing heavily along over the rutty road when ahead of us we saw a young man whose brisk step was certainly not of the highlands. There were various unsuccessful conjectures as to his identity, and suddenly Len called out: "Hey, Arn, stop yer shooter! It's Ann Lindsay's boy!"

"He'd have to set 'tween yer big toe an' the long un," said Arn. "I ain't goin' to stop no more."

"But he's come all the way from C'lumby to be at Uncle Nathe's buryin'."

"He didn't walk only from Scatter."

"I'll jump out an' let him set in my place."

"You ain't got any place. You're settin' on the tip aidge o' nothin'."

But Arn stopped the car. "Here, Bake," said Len, "I'm gittin' out, an' you hop in. Reckon you know me?"

"Len Merlin!" cried the stranger. "You caught that fox yet?"

"No, he's waitin' fer ye."

"Can't get him this trip. Got to hurry back. Go on, Arn, with your baggage. I'm walking to rest myself. Been on the train since last night. I'll see you all over the hill."

His refusal of the "seat" was positive, and we moved on, but not far. We were climbing the hill leading to Red Hog Gap and Len's prediction came true. The car refused to take the last lap over the hill, though we gave it an opportunity to do its best, by dropping out and scattering as readily as overripe plums from a suddenly shaken bough. With good cheer we began our walk to the graveyard. When nearly there we were overtaken by Bake Lindsay, and Len picked up their broken conversation.

"What yer hurryin' to git back fer ? You ain't been in sence when?"

"Not since I was married," said Lindsay, "and that's five years. I started soon as I heard about Uncle Nathe."

"Is he really a nephew of Mr. Ponder ?" I asked of the woman walking nearest to me, for with the whole country calling him "uncle," the blood-kin were left without distinction.

"No, he ain't no nephew," she said in a tone that I had learned to recognize as a shut trail in Unakasia. The story was not for me, an outsider. Even Len and Serena had turned a gently impassive front to my very reasonable interest in Uncle Nathe's family history. But Serena now stepped up and said intimately: "Jest wait, Mis' Dolly. We'll go to dinner with Aunt Lizy Haynes. Uncle Nathe's half-brother, Ranz, is stayin' there, an he's shore to let loose after the buryin'. When Uncle Ranz lets loose it's something else, I'm tryin' to tell ye. They won't be any more questions to ast when he gits through." Then she moved over to Bake. "It's fine, yore comin' in, Bake," she said.

"Of course I wanted to be at the funeral, but," he explained honestly, "I've come mainly to get mother."

"She goin' back with you ?" cried half a dozen voices.

"She's promised to. I've been trying to get her to come out to me and Jenny ever since we've been married." Then his voice seemed to struggle a little. "Before we tied up, Jenny gave me her word that she'd be good to mother, and I know she'll keep it."

"You got any young-uns?" asked Len, and Bake said he had a little boy. They had named him Nathan.

"That tickled Uncle Nathe, I reckon," said the woman who had answered me the moment before. Then she hastened to cover her indiscretion. "'Course y'all have been on his place a long time, an' he's been mighty good to ye."

"He's been good to ever'body," said another.

"I reckon he has," said Bake, and we entered the graveyard. It was to be a Masonic funeral. Uncle Nathe's popularity would have drawn a large attendance, but the presence of the Fraternity made the occasion an event in Silver Valley's history. Nathan Ponder had been the only Freemason in his township, a member of the distant lodge in Carson, and for years he had not been in active attendance there, but he had left a request to be buried by the brethren, and they had gallantly responded.

"That's Elmer Jenkins," whispered Serena of a man who was prominent in the ceremony. "He's a lawyer, come up from South C'liny 'bout a year ago, 'count of his wife's health, an' settled in Carson."

"Looks like," said another voice, "that they could 'a' got along 'thout a furriner to tell 'em what to do."

"He's high up in the lodge," said Uncle Ranz Ponder, the half-brother of Uncle Nathe, "an' he seems mighty frien'ly."

The old and impressive service was solemnly conducted to the end, and there was a general breaking-up, amid a conflict of invitations for everybody to go home with everybody else for dinner.

"We'll go with Aunt Lizy," said Serena. "They's a lot been astin' me, but they ain't none of 'em pulled the buttons off my clo's tryin' to take me with 'em, an' I know we'll be full welcome at Aunt Lizy's. Uncle Ranz, he's her cousin, he'll be there, like I said."

So Mrs. Haynes's invitation was accepted. Serena and I were to stay until the next day but Len and the daughter, Lonie, were to return that evening to look after the children, the cows, and the chickens.

The brethren who had come out from Carson returned to town, with the exception of Lawyer Jenkins, who, probably was thinking of profitable affiliations with the remote but fertile valley. I observed him reading the headstones around the new-made grave, and it seemed to me that he was afflicted with a growing concern. He turned, with a question, to the man nearest him, who happened to be Len.

"Am I to understand that our good brother was married four times?"

"You shore air," said Len. "There lays four of as good wives as a man ever had. Them tombstones don't tell no lies. They's all 'fore my time, savin' Aunt Lindy, his last 'un, but I've hearn enough to know what they wuz."

"But four? Isn't it a little unusual?"

"Well, maybe it is, but Uncle Nathe wuzn't no hand to set at home by hissef."

At that moment, to Len's apparent relief, Aunt Lizy came up, and we found that Mr. Jenkins also had accepted her invitation. He walked with her husband Uncle Dan'l Haynes, and I gathered from drifting fragments of their conversation that Mr. Jenkins was still on the trail of Uncle Nathe's connubial history.

At the dinner-table he pleased all of the guests by introducing the topic from which they were politely holding back. "I have been learning from our kind host," he said, eying with favor his selected piece of fried chicken, "what this loss means to the community."

"Yes," some one responded, "it knocks all of us, losin' Nathe does."

"There is some property too, I believe. I trust there is harmony among the heirs."

"They're all behavin' fine," said Aunt Lizy, with some heartiness.

"Our brother was married several times, I understand. Did - er - all of his wives leave issue ?"

"Young-uns? No, Aunt Lindy never had any, ner Lu Siler, but Callie had a little feller that died - Rufe, they called him. An' Ponnie, his fust wife, left four, all livin' yit. They git along together fust-rate."

"I wonder what Ponnie would 'a' said," reflected Uncle Dan'l, "ef somebody had told her Nathe wouldn't be buried alongside o' her."

"Well," said Uncle Ranz, "I'd ruther not hear what Ponnie would 'a' said."

"I say it ought to 'a' been Lindy he wuz laid by," asserted Aunt Lizy. "She lived with him the longest an' worked the hardest."

"She didn't think a grain more o' him than Lu Siler did," returned Uncle Dan'l.

Fielding Burke [Olive Tilford Dargan]

By Jennifer Vencill

Just four years after the conclusion of the Civil War, in 1869, Grayson County, Kentucky, served as the birthplace of Olive Tilford Dargan to her abolitionist parents, Elisha Francis Tilford and Rebecca Day Tilford. Dargan followed in her father's footsteps and became an educator, but it is not for this employment that she is remembered (Davidson and Martin 233). Instead, Dargan is noted for her long and varied literary career that included published novels, short stories, poems, anecdotes, and dramas.

Educated first in her father's academy in Arkansas then at the George Peabody College for Teachers in Nashville, Tennessee, Dargan held teaching positions in Arkansas, Missouri, Texas and Canada. This career ended quickly, though, for when Dargan went to Radcliffe College in Cambridge, Massachusetts, to continue her education, she met her future husband Pegram Dargan. In 1898 the man from North Carolina and the girl from Kentucky were married. The two, both aspiring writers, moved to New York to pursue new careers. The couple moved again in 1906, this time to Almond, North Carolina, because of Pegram's health (Davidson and Martin 233). By this time, however, Dargan had begun her career as a lyrical dramatist, as two of her collections, Semiramis and Other Plays (1904) and Lords and Lovers and Other Dramas (1906), had been published. Relocating again, Dargan lived in London from 1911 until 1914, during which time another of her dramas and her first collection of lyric poetry, Path Flower and Other Verses, were published. Unfortunately the drama, The Mortal Gods, dealing with the oppression of the working class in modern industrial society, was not well received by critics (Mainiero 457). Dargan returned to the Appalachians in 1915 following her husband's death by drowning, where she lived and wrote in Almond and Asheville, North Carolina, for the remainder of her life.

The Cycle's Rim (1916) was Dargan's first work published after her return to the south. This collection of fifty-three sonnets, written as a memorial to one drowned at sea, received much praise and was considered to be of the quality of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's Sonnets from the Portuguese (Mainiero 457). Following the publishing of Flutter of the Gold Leaf, and other Plays (1922) with Dr. Frederic Peterson and Lute and Furrow (1922), Dargan was awarded an honorary doctorate in literature from the University of North Carolina (Who Was Who 169).

Highland Annals, published in 1924, marked a shift in Dargan's writing away from poetry and drama. The work, which was reprinted with photographs in 1941 as From My Highest Hill, revealed Dargan's tendencies toward the left wing of the political continuum (Davidson and Martin 234). The seemingly autobiographical sketches reveal the imperfections of the mountain people, including the vulnerability of the poor white woman and the threat of the exploitation of the cotton mill, while exhibiting the traditional features of southern local color writing. These characteristics include exhibitions of an appreciation of nature, use of extravagant humor, use of local language, and use of tall tales (Mainiero 457).

Despite twenty years worth of published work, Dargan's most influential contributions to the world of literature had yet to come. Dargan's left-wing political orientation was again revealed in Call Home the Heart, the tale of a North Carolina mountain girl, Ishma Waycaster. Ishma, in an attempt to gain freedom from the obligations piled upon her by her family, husband, and mountain life, flees with a lover to an urban, industrial area (Kunitz and Haycraft 348). It is here that Ishma witnesses the exploitation of textile workers and attempts to organize a labor union. She educates herself in and embraces the theories of Marxist socialism, but as a result is accused of being a communist. When it appears to Ishma that she has been defeated, she returns home to her husband and mountain life. Based on the 1929 mill strikes in Gastonia and Marion, North Carolina--also the subject of a novel by Sherwood Anderson--Call Home the Heart was published in 1932 under the pseudonym Fielding Burke (Davidson and Martin 234). Ishma's story is continued in a sequel published in 1935 entitled A Stone Came Rolling, again under the name Fielding Burke. In the continuation, Ishma's tendencies toward revolution are reaffirmed following the death of her husband (May 132). The two novels are considered more than political vehicles due to the complexity of Ishma's character and relationships (Davidson and Martin 234).

Moving away from the theme of feminism, but continuing with that of socialism, Dargan's third novel, Sons of the Stranger, was published in 1947. It features a male labor organizer and examines the labor movement in a mining community at the turn of the century (May 132). Again, Dargan used her pen name of Fielding Burke.

Dargan's final piece of published work was a return after thirty years to poetry. Her collection, The Spotted Hawk (1958), won three poetry awards, including the 1959 Roanoke-Chowan Award for poetry (Davidson and Martin 234).

Dargan, who considered herself to be a Marxist and a feminist and who was considered by others to be a champion of liberal causes, served as a charter member of the Poetry Society of America and honorary member of the Radcliffe Club in New York. When she died January 22, 1968, at the age of ninety-nine, the much decorated Dargan had amassed an amazing total of thirteen sizeable pieces of literature in four different forms (Who Was Who 169).

Review: The Heart of Revolution: The Ra Life and Novels of Olive Dargan

Kathy Cantley Ackerman. The Heart of Revolution: The Radical Life an of Olive Dargan. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press, 2004. 23 Hardback. $29.95.

If only for her longevity, Olive Tilford Dargan is a significant figure in Am letters. Born in 1869, she lived just one year short of a century and enjoy fifty-eight year publishing career. Her first book, Semiramis and Other Pl published by Scribners in 1904. Her final book, Innocent Bigamy and Ot Stories, was issued by John F. Blair in 1962. Though not prolific she was versatile, claiming plays, poetry, short stories, and novels among her fifte volumes. In mid-career she adopted a pseudonym, Fielding Burke, which used for each of her three novels, all proletarian and polemical works. Pe both her longevity and versatility have mitigated against a deserved critic reputation. Today she is remembered primarily for one novel and one co of short stories.

The addition of Kathy Ackerman's thoroughly researched and gracefully study is welcomed as the first full length book about this extraordinary lit figure. As her title indicates, she limits her attention to the Fielding Burke Call Home the Heart (1932), A Stone Came Rolling (1935), and Sons of Stranger (1947). Her ambitious thesis is that Dargan's work should be c in light of her "treatments of proletarianism, feminism, and race, with spe attention to the ways these issues intersect in the southern Appalachian biographical section that begins the work, Ackerman tells the anecdote o Dargan's working in Boston as a stenographer to a rubber manufacturer day he dictated two letters, one ordering the abrupt closing of a factory, t complaining about the upholstery of his yacht. Thus the inequalities of th capitalist industrial system were brought forcefully home to her. In 1904 I met Rose Pastor Stokes, a founding member of the American Communis who became one of her closest friends. Ackerman offers more than one suggestion as to why Dargan chose to use a non-gender specific pseud her three novels, but the most salient one is that they were so radical tha author feared reprisal in that politically charged era.

The question of why Ackerman did not simply use Fielding Burke as the answered by one of her primary tenets: that Dargan's radical inclinations long before she demonstrated them in the novels. For instance, in the

Though Dargan's college education included a year at Radcliffe and her jobs were in Nova Scotia, Boston, and New York, it was her move to App that launched her writing career. In 1925 she published her most succes book, Highland Annals (later reissued as From My Highest Hill). That coll short stories is based on her experiences in rural Appalachia and is gene genial retelling of her relationship with the mountain folk she encountere when she moved from the country to the town, her writing became more She was living in Asheville, North Carolina, in 1929, the year of cotton mi in nearby Gastonia and Marion, the events that provided her with specific material to embody her political stances and move to a new genre, the n

One of the most impressive aspects of Ackerman's book is her use of unpublished letters found in several collections throughout the country. D correspondence with Rose Stokes reveals that she actually went to Gast visited with the strikers, something she was able to do because of Rose's influence. In April 1929, Dargan wrote Rose, "I'm stamped 'middle-class' . . . But the strikers like me and make me feel like blood-kin—bless their bones!" Ackerman has found so much correspondence, in fact, that an e Dargan's letters would be a useful tool to Appalachian scholars.

Call Home the Heart is the literal center of Ackerman's study. She exami and to a lesser extent, the sequel, A Stone Came Rolling, in light of the proletarian movement in American letters, in comparison to other strike n the period and in the historical accounting of the events of the Gastonia s Ishma Waycaster, the protagonist of both novels, undergoes enormous c as she moves from her isolated mountain home of Cloudy Knob to the de populated and troubled Winbury. Ackerman devotes five of her nine chap the Gastonia novels, emphasizing Dargan's treatment of feminism, race, activism, and romance as they are demonstrated in the contrasting and conflicting issues of Ishma's life. Because Ishma, presented generally sympathetically, shows her revulsion to a black woman in one gripping s race relations becomes a particularly difficult problem. Ackerman points Dargan felt that the labor organizers underestimated the depth of racism South. Feminist attitudes are also counter-poised against the prevailing patriarchal practices of the time and Dargan's own celebration of the prir romantic love. It is to Ackerman's credit that she undertakes such a pleth complex issues in her study of the Gastonia novels.

The Heart of Revolution concludes with two other chapters, brief ones or a Stranger and on Dargan's reactions to the critics. Though they seem a in comparison with the full treatment of the earlier chapters, they are nev useful. Whatever organizational flaws the book might have, it is an impor addition to scholarship on the proletarian novels of the thirties, the issues feminism and racism in literature, and especially to our understanding of Tilford Dargan, a refined Victorian lady writer who, having become a con sympathizer, fought against social and economic oppression and champi ideal of a classless society. She deserves the attention that Ackerman's encourage.

OLIVE TILFORD DARGAN

by George Brosi

Olive Tilford Dargan's great-grandmother, Susannah Whitely, was a Virginia aristocrat who married John Day and accompanied him to Kentucky. The youngest of their five daughters and twelve sons was Mordecai Yarnel Day, a farmer who preached that slavery was an abomination before the Lord. His daughter, Rebecca, married into another generations-old Kentucky family when she took Elisha Francis Tilford as her husband. Tilford owned a farm in Grayson County, Kentucky, but like his wife, also taught school. They had two boys and two girls. Olive was born on January 11, 1869.

In 1879 the Tilford's moved to Doniphan, in the Missouri Ozarks, where they founded a school. Three years later they set up another school near Warm Springs, Arkansas. At the age of fourteen, Olive Tilford taught a satellite one-room school four miles from her parents, responsible for forty "children" ranging in age from six to twenty and including two nephews of the notorious outlaw, Hildebrand! At the age of seventeen, she won a scholarship to Peabody College by getting the highest score in Arkansas on a competitive examination. During the two years it took her to graduate from Peabody, she accompanied friends on a camping trip to North Carolina and vowed, "If I ever own a home of my own, it will be in these mountains."

After graduation, Olive Tilford taught in Missouri and Texas. At the age of twenty-four she enrolled at Radcliffe College in Boston where she met Pegram Dargan, a South Carolina poet then a senior at Harvard University. After a year teaching in Nova Scotia, Tilford returned to Boston and renewed her friendship with Dargan. When she moved to Blue Ridge, Georgia, to write, Dargan followed her there. They were married on March 2, 1898, and settled in New York City. It was there that Olive Tilford Dargan began her literary career in 1904 with the publication of dramas written in verse. In 1906 the Dargans bought a large Nantahala River farm in Swain County, North Carolina. When Olive Dargan became pregnant, she stayed with friends in Connecticut. There her premature daughter died within hours of her birth. With dependable tenants to run the farm, the Dargans traveled extensively. Throughout much of the time from 1911 until 1914 Olive Dargan was in England. She completed a non-fiction work, The Welsh Pony, there in England and her first book of mountain poetry, Path Flower and Other Verses, was published simultaneously in both Britain and the United States. When Pegram Dargan drowned off the coast of Cuba, however, Olive Dargan returned to the farm in the North Carolina mountains and spent most of her time there until the farmhouse burned in 1923. During this period, she published three very different poetry collections.

Olive Tilford Dargan moved to Asheville, North Carolina, in 1925. It was there that she wrote the collection of short stories which many consider her best work, Highland Annals, and three proletarian novels under the pen name, Fielding Burke, as well as one final book of verse and one last short story collection. Two of her proletarian novels revolve around the role of mountain migrants in the Gastonia Mill strike, and the third takes place in Colorado during the notorious coal mine strike during which the National Guard attacked a tent city of evicted miners with machine guns. Call Home the Heart is the first of these novels, and generally considered the most powerful. The compelling lead character, Ish, is torn between three suitors each of whom represents an important dimension of life: art, politics, and survival. Although it was published 58 years after her first book, Dargan's last, Innocent Bigamy and Other Stories, still reveals both enormous talent in putting together words, inspired themes, and compelling plots. Olive Tilford Dargan died, at the age of 99, on January 22, 1968.

Olive Tilford Dargan was one of the very best authors ever to come out of the Appalachian South. Her writing is purposeful and meaningful. Few have surpassed her in the description of mountain beauty or in the ability to transmit a feel for human relationships.

West Asheville writer Dargan suffered for her sympathies

Visiting our past

Petite, empathetic and frail, author Olive Tilford Dargan bore the weight of her sympathies throughout her 99 years, dying in some obscurity in a nursing home in South Asheville in 1968. By the time she moved to a log cabin in West Asheville in 1925, having achieved high critical acclaim for her poems, plays and short stories, she was ready to embark on her first novel, "Call Home the Heart."

Rob Neufeld

"Call Home the Heart" followed her beloved mountain characters to mill work and labor strikes in Gastonia. The reputation that followed this kind of subject (novels about workers' issues were labeled proletarian then) dogged Dargan, who feared reprisals. She used a pen name, Fielding Burke, to protect herself, but an acquaintance who reviewed her book betrayed her and let her real name leak out.

She had said that if a friend revealed "what they must know I have taken great pains to conceal, I shall embarrass them with a public denial." When the unmasking occurred, Dargan merely flared, "I actually felt as if I wanted to meet him publicly and slap his (the reviewer's) face."

Never mind that the reviewer called "Call Home the Heart" stunning and that Jonathan Daniels in the Saturday Review of Literature said it was "the best novel yet written about the industrial conflict in contemporary America." Dargan was living in jittery times. Bubbles Marlowe, whose mother, Marie Dobbs Jones, had befriended Dargan in West Asheville, recalls how, at age 8, she had been accompanied to school by a "cowboy" whom Dargan had enlisted to protect her from kidnappers. Communism hadn't been the only scare blown out of proportion in the 1930s. The disappearance of Charles Lindbergh's son led even Marlowe's mother to look suspiciously at discarded mattresses, thinking they were clues to lurking criminals' hideouts.

In 1950, Dargan grew fearful again as Joseph McCarthy was rising in power. "Asheville is rapidly progressing backwards, with no one left in the vanguard to be talked to with safety," Dargan wrote a friend. A chaplain had been made to resign because he served as the secretary of the Peace Fellowship of Presbyterians.

Author Olive Tilford Dargan's grave marker in Green Hills Cemetery in West Asheville reflects the obscurity into which her once highly acclaimed career has fallen.

"And not a voice has been heard in protest," Dargan commented, adding, "I myself adopted the discretion of an oyster."

The politics obscures Dargan's value and intentions as a writer. Dorcas Carland, a West Asheville News reporter related in 1942 that "Plato, in his Sicilian days ... did not seem so important as old gran'pap, the head of the farm clan" to Dargan. In 1935, Anthony Buttitta in the Raleigh News & Observer quoted Dargan as saying, "Art to me has always been the feel and transmission of human experience," and workers' struggles lie closer to real experience "than the 'flutter of an eyelid,' which has occupied bourgeois writers for years and is considered by standpat critics as art."

Asheville Woman, 22, Will Get M. D. Degree

Miss Bertha M. Davis Will Realize Ambition At Early Age

"I want to be a doctor!"

Bertha M. Davis, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. L. E. Davis, 131 Brevard road, West Asheville, said it 12 years ago, when she was only 10. And she'll be Dr. Bertha M. Davis next June when she graduates from Medical College of Virginia at Richmond.

Her father was a dentist then—he has retired now—and he and Mrs. Davis tried to dissuade their youngest child from what they called "her notion."

But—"Lawyer, doctor, merchant, chief," Bertha would say. "I'm going to be a doctor."

Played "Physician"

Nothing her parents could say in favor of lawyers, merchants, trained nurses, locomotive engineers or stenographers altered Bertha's decision. When neighborhood youngsters "played house," she always was the "family physician."

Bertha's consuming ambition gave her keener interest in studying. She graduated from high school in Asheville, went to Carson-Newman college two years and attended University of North Carolina two years, getting a B. S. degree at the age of 18 as the youngest member of her class.

The two years at the state university were in pre-medical study. Miss Davis began her fourth year at the Richmond college this fall. She will receive an M. D. degree in general surgery and obstetrics.

Then she will go to the Sorbonne in Paris, France, for a year's study. She hasn't decided where she will locate after coming back to the States.

Despite her scholastic achievements—Miss Davis' grades always have been in the 90's—she is a "regular" girl. She was captain of her basketball squad in high school. She swims skillfully, is an expert horsewoman and an acrobatic dancer. She even manages to crowd in a game of golf now and then.

MISS BERTHA M. DAVIS

She has been the only girl in her class of 75 for the full four years at Richmond. Her mates thought enough of her to elect her vice president of the class, an Associated Press dispatch revealed Friday.

Miss—or Dr.—Davis is "just like the typical American girl," her married sisters say. The sisters are Mrs. G. D. Gardner, 18 Fairfax avenue, and Mrs. A. B. Stagg, Charlotte.

But she's going to make her sisters call her "doctor"—and then she'll be happy.

WEST ASHEVILLE GROUP IS GIVEN DRILL HONORS

Frank Davis Leads Six-Man Unit In Trials At Fire Tower.

Drill teams of the West Asheville auxiliary firemen, headed by Frank Davis, and the Merrimon avenue unit, headed by W. D. McLean, took top honors last night in time trials held at the Merrimon avenue fire station.

Under simulated conditions, the West Asheville team made up of six men, laid out enough hose to reach into the third story of the fire tower at the station and had water running in 58 seconds.

The Merrimon avenue team laid hose into the third story, connected it to a "Y" coupler and had water running on the second and fourth floors in two minutes and forty-five seconds.

Present at last night's drill were approximately 15 members of the Beacon auxiliary firemen's unit who practiced under Chief Bailey from 6:30 to 7:30 o'clock.

Other teams were led by George Graham, J. G. Neely, Charlie Starnes, Frank Barber, Frank Sherrill, Marshall Orr, Emmet Davis and S. Robins.

R. M. DEAVER DIES AT HOME OF DAUGHTER

Father of Mrs. L. B. McBrayer and Mrs. W. E. Logan Passes Away at the Age of 74 Years.

The many friends of R. M. Deaver, of this city, will be pained to learn of his death which occurred yesterday morning at 11 o'clock, at the home of Mrs. L. B. McBrayer, on Montford avenue. The deceased had been in ill health for a number of years and his death was not unexpected.

Mr. Deaver is survived by a wife and two daughters: Mrs. L. B. McBrayer and Mrs. W. E. Logan, of this city. He was seventy-four years of age and was married fifty years ago to Miss Sarah A. Rollins, who is a sister of Major W. W. Rollins, of Asheville. Two sisters survive Mr. Deaver, — Mrs. Hester Rollins, of Asheville, and Mrs. Matt McElroy, of Mars Hill.

Mr. Deaver had been a resident of Asheville for a number of years and until his health failed about eight years ago, he was one of the city's most prominent business men. Before a railroad was built through this city, he was the proprietor of a large stage coach line and was the first person in the state to substitute busses for stage coaches. He spent some time in Washington after 1881, having purchased land in that city.

The deceased was a member of the West End Baptist church and was an enthusiastic church worker. The funeral services will be conducted this afternoon at 3 o'clock at the home of Dr. L. B. McBrayer, by Rev. C. B. Waller, Rev. G. P. Hamrick and Rev. R. D. Cross. The following will act as pall bearers: Mayor J. E. Rankin, Judge J. D. Murphy, W. W. Whittington, J. M. Ingle, R. C. Crowell and J. M. Stoner.

COLORFUL COSTUMES were the hallmark of the fabulous "Dokie" band, organized back in the early 1920s with Joseph DeNardo as director. The band represented the Asheville unit of the D.O.K.K. Lodge, play unit of the Knights of Pythias. The photograph above was made when the band was at its peak.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

'Dokie' Band Had Fabulous Reputation

By C. R. SUMNER

Of all the bands that held forth in Asheville during the early 1920s, none has a more fabulous reputation than the famous "Dokie" band directed by Joseph DeNardo.

It boasted many fine musicians, some of whom were individual artists of top rank, thus giving the unit a high entertainment factor. The Dokie band was extremely popular but it appeared only on formal occasions. This tended to whet the appetite of the public still more for this colorful, brilliantly costumed unit.

The band represented the D.O.K.K. lodge, play unit of the Knights of Pythias, one of the city's strongest fraternal orders. Thus, having the backing of its lodge it was not so cramped in the matter of budget and could afford top bracket uniforms. The oriental motif gave ample opportunity in the matter of flashy costumes.

It was natural that such a band would visit other cities for conventions and gatherings connected with the lodge and that it would appear in many parades. That is exactly what happened and the unit won much acclaim on these trips.

Rolls of the Dokie band are unhappily somewhat sketchy and memories are frail devices for filling in the missing members. Here is a list of those who were connected with the unit:

Joe DeNardo, director, Fred Stone, Phil Williamson, Don Mosseller, Bill Post, Joe Johnson, Harry Novic, Adolph Marquardt, Jerry Davis, John Pat Bramlet, Arthur Dunn, Carl Setzer, Charles B. Glass, John Stewart, C. O. Briggs, Carol English, Sid Waddell, Cy Young, Harold MacDougal, Carl Fea???, C. C. Hawkins, Frank Davis, Ben Cramer, Henry Waddell, Lang Ashton and Fred Black.

Of all the bands that held forth in Asheville during the early 1920s, none has a more fabulous reputation than the famous "Dokie" band directed by Joseph DeNardo.

It boasted many fine musicians, some of whom were individual artists of top rank, thus giving the band a high entertainment factor. The Dokie band was extremely popular, but it appeared only on formal occasions. This tended to whet the appetite of the public still more for the colorful, brilliantly costumed band.

The band represented the D.O.K.K. lodge, play unit of the Knights of Pythias, one of the city's strongest fraternal orders. Thus, having the backing of its lodge, it was not so cramped on the matter of budget and could afford top bracket uniforms. The oriental motif gave ample opportunity in the matter of flashy costumes.

It was natural that such a band would visit other cities for conventions and gatherings connected with the lodge and that it would appear in many parades. That is exactly what happened and the unit won much acclaim on these trips.

Rolls of the Dokie band are unhappily somewhat sketchy and memories are frail devices for filling in the missing members. Here is a list of those who were connected with the unit:

Joe DeNardo, director; Fred Stone, Phil Williamson, Don Mosseller, Bill Post, Joe Johnson, Harry Novic, Adolph Marquardt, Jerry Davis, John Pat Bramlet, Arthur Dunn, Carl Setzer, Charles B. Glass, John Stewart, C.O. Briggs, Carol English, Sid Waddell, Cy Young, Harold, MacDougal, Carl Fea???, C.C. Hawkins, Frank Davis, Ben Cramer, Henry Waddell, Lang Ashton, and Fred Black.

Old time police officers

AT 9-9-87

Back in the 1930's, being an Asheville police officer wasn't an easy job. The hours were long, the downtown city streets were jammed with home folks and visitors, and police toiled without hope of pension. Still, this motorcycle force managed to look quite respectable. This photo was taken when Charles Dermid was still on a motorcycle, before he was named chief of police. See his story, 1A.

Charles Dermid remembers an Asheville of long ago

By Maggie Lauterer
Times Writer AT 9-9-87

It's hard to think about Asheville as it was when a young man with bright eyes and a clean-shaven face put on the badge of Asheville Police Chief for the first time.

Charles Dermid was 26 years old when he pinned his new badge on, the youngest police chief ever to take the responsiblity for law and order on the bustling streets of downtown Asheville.

And they were bustling back then. "You can't imagine how downtown Asheville was before the war," Dermid said, leaning back on the porch of his home in Woodfin last week as he recalled Asheville of 50 years ago. "Before the war, this town was crowded. There were no shopping centers, of course, and Patton Avenue was packed with people — packed!"

Dermid had moved to Asheville in 1913. As a teenager he began to work at the Recreation Park, 11 hours a day for $12.50 a week, with a $3 fee for board.

Dermid went on to Rollins College and then to Asheville Law School. "But the lawyers in this town were all starving then so I didn't even take the bar exam," he said. "They were looking for men for the police department. And they'd take anybody. Nobody wanted to do it. There was no pension plan, so they'd take old carpenters or bricklayers and make them policemen.

"Well, I joined the motorcyle department and did that until I had a bad accident and hurt my head pretty bad. That's why I didn't get drafted for the war."

When the police chief resigned, it was Charles Dermid who was appointed to take his place on February 5, 1937. The young man found he had his hands full.

"War was coming on," he remembered. "People were scared and a lot of them were unhappy with President Roosevelt, so when he came to town, we had to be extra careful."

Roosevelt came to Asheville twice, both times with his security in the hands of Dermid. "In 1939, he came to see his lady secretary (Marguerite LeHand), who was staying at St. Joseph Hospital. She had tuberculosis, you know. And then he went to see a member of his staff, Marvin McIntyre, who lived on Macon Avenue. Well, we didn't know when he'd be coming to McIntyre's house, so we had to have our men out there all day waiting for his car to pass."

When vice-presidential candidate Estes Kefauver came and made a speech on City-County Plaza, thousands of people turned out. I tried to think of every way of security I could. One of things I did was have two ten-foot ladders set up in the crowd and put photographers on them to take pictures. I figured that if anybody tried anything, we'd have pictures of them and one of our policeman could probably identify whoever it was."

Dermid's work apparently made an impression on the president's security men. He was asked to come to Roosevelt's inauguration in 1941 and help with security.

"I just about froze that day," he said, shaking his head. "We were told to not allow anybody to stand on a box. No photographs were to be taken, and if we saw anyone from our home town who had committed a felony, to take them into security. No one was allowed to go into top stories of buildings. There were uniformed men the entire length of the parade. But the parade was something. There were tanks rolling along, and it was the first time I ever saw a Flying Fortress."

When the U.S. became involved in World War II, one of the concerns were the Japanese left behind in the states. "They had all these Japanese diplomats they didn't want to leave unattended, so they brought them all here and lodged them in the Grove Park Inn. Our police force had to provide 24 hours surveillance for them. They weren't to leave the inn, couldn't go downtown, so the merchants downtown would take trucks of their merchandise up there and sell to the Japanese."

"Convoys came through here every day," Dermid recalled. "The Army hospital — Moore General Hospital — was out near Swannanoa, and here in town, the army took the fourth floor of the court house and had a communications wing and a weather wing."

With the Army came military police — 200 of them. One of Dermid's jobs was to keep the boys clean. When there was a break-out of venereal disease, Dermid's job was to find the female sources "and send them through the clinic."

"Here's a little story for you," Dermid said with a grin. "We had a new bunch of MP's come in. They put them up on a hotel at Broadway and College on the second floor. The boys came down with VD but we couldn't find the girls. Then we got a tip — the girls weren't on the streets — they were living on the third floor above the MP's."

But after the war, Asheville looked toward the future. In 1949, Dermid was appointed Director of Public Safety and later Director of Public Works. He remembers the decisions for growth in Asheville during that time — water lines running south; Patton, Biltmore, and Tunnel Roads widened to four lanes; and in 1959, when the county voted no, the city voting yes on a bond to build a modern airport.

During his employment by the city of Asheville, Dermid helped draw up the plans for giving pensions to city police and city employees, then later a pension plan for the state patrol.

Ironically, Dermid did not receive a pension from the city. In 1967, Dermid quit his city post to run for sheriff against Harry Clay. Dermid was defeated. He then took a job in the private sector.

Dermid's scrapbooks are filled with old black-and-white prints of Asheville through its development in the last 50 years and of the faces of men who brought about those changes. Among those men is the photographed image of a tall, dignified gentleman with a strong resemblance to slender young police chief of 1937.

They are the same. Charles Dermid.

Charles W. Dermid, former police chief, longtime Asheville public servant, dies

Charles W. Dermid, who became Asheville's youngest police chief in 1937 and went on to be the city's public safety and public works directors, died Monday in an Asheville hospital. He was 84.

Dermid, whose career as a public servant spanned nearly 30 years, started his government service as a student in the late 1920s, working the Ferris wheel and merry-go-round at Recreation Park.

At age 20, he was named manager of Rec Park, but soon moved to the police department to join an elite motorcycle squad known as "speed cops." While working foot patrol in West Asheville, checking the doors of every store from Beecham's Curve to Brevard Road, he decided to enter what was then a local institution – Claude Love's Law School, housed in the then-new Jackson Building.

Dermid finished law school in 1935, when he was 25. At age 26, he was appointed by the mayor as chief of police when then-chief W.J. Everett became ill.

"The secret is that everybody at the APD was 60 or older, and nobody wanted the job," Dermid joked in a 1992 interview.

Charles Dermid

After serving as police chief for 10 years, he became director of public safety, overseeing the work of the Asheville police and fire departments. He later became director of public works, overseeing the paving of many roads and building of others, including Town Mountain Road. He retired in 1966.

During his years as police chief, he was in charge of security for two visits by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, and was invited to Washington to help with security at Roosevelt's 1941 inauguration.

"Charlie had no enemies," said retired insurance executive E. Webb Ellis, who first met Dermid while both were working at Rec Park in the '20s.

"Everybody who knew Charlie Dermid liked him, and Charlie was good at everything he did," Ellis said. "He was a wonderful man and one of the best friends I ever had, and we maintained that friendship for every bit of 65 years."

Red Hoyle, long-time owner of Hoyle's office supplies in downtown Asheville, said he first met Dermid when Hoyle was "mascot" at the police and fire departments, at age 10 or 11.

"That was when the old fire department, City Hall and the City Market were all on the square," Hoyle said. "Charlie at that time was the head man under Weldon (Weir, long-time Asheville city manager) at the Recreation Department, and he hired us younguns up there at Rec Park in the summertime – I helped work on the merry-go-round.

"Charlie Dermid was real good to Red Hoyle back in those days – we worked as a team together, were a big family and all worked hard and loved each other," Hoyle said.

CHARLES W. DERMID

Charles W. Dermid, 84, of 35 Brookdale Road, died Monday, Oct. 31, 1994, in a local hospital.

A native of Henderson County, he was the son of the late Jefferson Davis and Anna Netherton Dermid and husband of Mary Aline Michael Dermid who died in 1981. He had been a resident of Asheville since 1913. He was a member of Central United Methodist Church where he was on the board of stewards for many years. He attended Asheville City Schools and was president of his senior class at Lee Edwards High School. He was a graduate of Rollins College, Winter Park, Fla., where he attended on athletic scholarship. He was president of the freshman and sophomore classes and member of Theta Kappa Nu Fraternity. He graduated from Asheville University Law School. He completed several FBI regional schools and the Institute of Government School in Chapel Hill.

Charles Dermid

He began employment with the City of Asheville in 1925 as a clerk with the Tax Department. He then became a Parks Department employee and later manager of the City Parks. He entered the Asheville Police Department in 1935. He served the City of Asheville as Chief of Police from 1937 to 1946, Director of Public Safety from 1946 to 1950, Director of Public Safety and Assistant Director of Public Works from 1950 to 1953, and served as Director of Public Works from 1959 until his retirement in 1966. There were a few years when he was not a city employee. During those years, he was personnel manager of International Resistance Company from 1953 to 1957 and an executive with White Transportation Co. from 1957 to 1959, and Transcarolina Concrete Co. at the time the expressway was built around Asheville.

He accepted an invitation to assist the Metropolitan Police at President Roosevelt's inauguration in 1941.

He was a charter member of the Junior Chamber of Commerce. He was active with the Chamber of Commerce, United Way, and the state committee for Organization of State Law Enforcement Benefit and Retirement Fund. He was chairman of the City Democratic precinct for 10 years and a member of the County Democratic Executive Committee for 10 years. He was the first vice-president of the North Carolina Police Executives Association.

Surviving to cherish his memory are his daughters and sons-in-law, Bette Dermid Owens and Philip H. Owens of Asheville, Mary Ann Dermid Byers and David F. Byers of Birmingham, Ala.; sisters, Lena Duckett of Greensboro, Harriett Carr of Greenville, S.C., Anne Bakke of Hendersonville, Frances Smith of Hialeah, Fla.; grandchildren, David Franklin Byers Jr., Charles Michael Byers, Mark Dermid Byers, Bradley Hartsell Byers, Audrey Aline Owens and Deborah Ann Owens; great-grandchildren, Hart, John, Laura, Michael, Sarah, Mark, Kathryn, Mary Caroline and Bradley.

Services will be at 1 p.m. Thursday at Groce Funeral Home with the Revs. T. Clifford Spencer and Eddie Morgan officiating. Burial will be in Calvary Episcopal Churchyard.

Pallbearers will be grandsons and John Culberson, Frank Buckner Jr., and David Buckner.

The family will receive friends 5:30 to 8 p.m. Wednesday at the funeral home.

Dermid, At 80, Believes 'Life Is Better Today'

Veteran Magistrate Is Still Carrying On His Business

A few years after the Civil War a small boy occasionally was permitted to accompany his father on wagon trips from their home in Henderson county to Asheville. They, and other wagoners, camped in the mud on the site of what is now Pack square.

J. D. Dermid, the small boy of the late sixties, recalled this yesterday with a reminiscent smile. Those trips were bright adventures in the life of the boy, and the smile betrayed Mr. Dermid's pleasure in the recollection.

But both memory and smile were gone in an instant, and he turned the conversation to present-day topics. For to Mr. Dermid, at 80, the past is merely a memory; he lives in the present, and looks to the future.

"People Don't Change"

"Life is beter now", he told an interviewer yesterday. "It was pretty rough then." He mused a moment, and then: "It's really wonderful the advances we have made since I was a boy, the conveniences and the advantages we have. Certainly it is a better world today."

"What about the people? Are they better?" he was asked.

"No, I don't believe they are. Human nature doesn't change much, you know."

J. D. DERMID

Mr. Dermid is 80 today. But if he finds his years a burden, he doesn't betray the fact. Almost never ill in his four score years, he stands tall and erect. His manner at his office at Haywood road and Louisiana avenue where he may be found six days a week—is pleasant, but brisk and business-like. He milks a cow night and morning, as he has done for some 60 years; and each summer finds him making a large garden at his home at 21 Allen street in West Asheville.

Has Married 1,250 Couples

A magistrate in Asheville for a quarter of a century, Mr. Dermid [illegible] married [illegible] less than 1,250 couples. Nobody who comes to his office (and prospective brides and grooms used to come to his home as well, and at all hours of the night) is turned away because he is poor. If a negro wants to get married and has only [illegible] Mr. Dermid [illegible] the knot. All over West Asheville he is known as a man of uncommon common sense, and hundreds come to him yearly for advice. Sometimes they seek the professional advice of the magistrate and pay a nominal fee for it; quite as often what they need is the counsel of Mr. Dermid the man, and they get that gratis.

Mr. Dermid notes with particular pride the growth of West Asheville. It was while he was a member of the board of aldermen of West Asheville (then a separate municipality) that Haywood road was paved and Aycock school was built. And he points proudly to today's maze of paved streets in that section of the city, and to its schools. It also was during his tenure as an alderman that West Asheville voted to become a part of Asheville proper.

Asheville Citizen March 27, 1941

Started Career As Teacher

"When I was a member of the board, West Asheville had only 5,000 inhabitants. Now it has 16,000," he recalled.

Starting his career as a teacher, Mr. Dermid taught for three years, then served a term as Henderson county superintendent of public instruction. Giving up school work for business, he opened a mercantile business in Hendersonville and operated it for 25 years. During that period he served a term on the town's board aldermen.

It was about 25 years ago that he moved to Asheville. He and his family first lived on Orchard street, and he had his office on Pack square. Soon, however, he bought a two-acre tract where he now lives; today the street is well lined with houses, and Mr. Dermid's little farm long since has been cut into city lots.

He is the father of 12 children, 10 of whom are living. His sons are Charles, Asheville's chief of police, J. D., Jr., employe of the Carolina Power and Light company and Trust, of El Paso, Texas. The seven daughters are Misses Annie Laura and Frances, who make their home with Mr. and Mrs. Dermid on Allen street; Mrs. Harriet Carr, Mrs. Marie Hudson, and Mrs. Helena Duckett, all of Asheville; Mrs. Frank Buckner of Weaverville; and Mrs. Clara Johnson of Kingsport, Tenn.

Children Plan Party

The children who live here plan to visit their father today, and take presents in celebration of the occasion.

There'll be a pound cake at the Dermid home, too.

The interviewer learned that just as he left Mr. Dermid's magistrate's and real estate office. Having said good-bye, the newspaperman turned again to ask about any birthday celebration, and was told about the pound cake and asked to come out and sample it.

Just then a client entered, and newspaper interview, birthday, and pound cake were forgotten. There was business to be transacted. No youthful, top flight executive ever made a mental transition more quickly and completely.

JOSEPH DENARDO JOINS STATION

Well Known Musician Will Handle Musical Programs

In announcing the appointment yesterday of Joseph DeNardo to a position as Director of Music on the studio staff of Radio Station WWNC, G. O. Shepherd, Station director, expressed himself as being greatly pleased with the arrangement that thus brings into the broadcasting organization a man of Mr. DeNardo's ability. Associated with many successful musical organizations, Mr. DeNardo's latest musical venture was the formation of the Shrine Band of Asheville. This band, making its first public appearances during the Shrine Ceremonial last week, was given high praise by those who know and appreciate quality in band music. A trumpet player of exceptional ability and an instructor of practically all band instruments, Mr. DeNardo is exceptionally well qualified to assume the important duties that will be his as musical director for the radio station.

Under his jurisdiction a fine musical program will be built. Gradually a capable studio orchestra will be developed. This organization is already started, having charge of the twice-weekly Radio Dealer's Hour which is heard from 1 until 2 o'clock each Tuesday and Friday afternoon. DeNardo will have charge of special orchestration work required for the proper presentation of what are known as "continuity programs." His offices will be with the Station office, at number 815 Flatiron Building, and the station studios will serve as his workshop. Working with the station director and with those who are creating "atmosphere" programs, he will devise unusual and effective musical effects which are expected to place Asheville's own radio station high in the esteem of listeners everywhere.

Assistant Director

In addition to Mr. DeNardo's appointment, Mr. Shepherd announced also the selection of an Assistant Program Director. Mr. William Winter has been appointed to this position and is already in charge of certain periods on the broadcasting schedule. His appointment came as the direct result of his work with the WWNC Vodvil Music-Comedy trio, Hetz and Hetz and Ross. During his work with this group it was found that he had an excellent voice for announcing. Several weeks of training, and his appointment is the result.

Mrs. Alice E. N. Hutchison, connected with Shepherd Advertising, Inc., is working also with the radio staff, being interested particularly in the creation of interesting plot or "continuity" programs and in the writing of all announcements.

Following the practice established by the larger stations, Mr Shepherd said that very soon there will be no such a thing as "ad lib" or "spur of the moment" announcing from WWNC. Announcers will be chosen for the speaking voice and diction and then required to stick strictly to the manuscript that will be prepared for each program by writers handling that kind of work.

With organization work practically complete, Station WWNC is expected now to present new and attractive features. The schedule followed at present, with programs beginning at noon each day and then leaving a break of some two or three hours after two o'clock, will be changed gradually as new and worthwhile features are developed, until the station will be "on the air" from 10 in the morning right on through the evening. This will not be done hurriedly, or at the expense of program quality.

Joseph D'Nardo to Conduct Symphony In Concert Series

Greensboro Daily News 1/31/37

Orchestra Plans Two Evening Concerts and Number of Matinee Programs During February—Conductor As Trumpeter Played For King Albert.

Symphony Leader

JOSEPH DeNARDO.

Joseph DeNardo, "the trumpeter who played for the king," will conduct the North Carolina Symphony orchestra in two evening concerts and a number of matinee programs in Greensboro during February. Program for the first evening concert, February 5, and for the matinees is being announced today.

Mr. DeNardo, a native of Italy but citizen of the United States, for a number of years has made his home in Asheville, where he is a former member of the music faculty of the high school. He, as a member of "Old Hickory," the famous 30th division, played the trumpet for King Albert of Belgium during the world war. As a child he was a favorite of Giuseppe Verdi, foremost opera composer, and tells of having sat on the knee of the famous musician whose whiskers he delighted in pulling.

The following program has been announced for February 5 at 8:30 o'clock in Aycock auditorium of Woman's college:

"Overture to 'Russlan and Ludmilla'" (Glinka); Symphony No. 4 "Andante sostenuto, Moderato con anima," "Scherzo, Pizzicato ostinato," and Finale, Allegro con fuoco" (Tshcaikowsky); "Mississippi Suite" including "Father of Waters," "Huckleberry Finn," "Old Creole Days" and "Mardi Gras" (Grofe); "Valse Triste" (Sibelius) and "Minute Waltz" (Chopin) and "Die Meistersinger" (Wagner).

Matinee Series.

The schedule and program for the series of matinee concerts being given in the Greensboro public schools with the co-operation of the music teachers of the schools has been announced as follows:

February 2, Senior high, with Herbert Hazleman; February 3, Gillespie Junior high, with Miss Eula Tuttle; February 9, Central Junior high, with Miss Dorothy Armstrong; February 11, Curry, with Miss Grace Van Dyke More; February 18, J. Van Lindley Junior high, with Mrs. Sarah Little; February 23, Aycock auditorium of Woman's college, a recital for all public school children of Greensboro, with Mrs. C. M. Bachtell, supervisor of music in the city schools, assisting.

The Junior high school programs will include five parts, first the "Overture to William Tell" (Rossini); second, "Symphony No. 8 in B Minor (Unfinished), Allegro moderato and Andante con moto" (Schubert); third, "American Bolero" (Brown); fourth, "Song of the Bayou" (Bloom); "Juba Dance" (Dett) and "Two Guitars" (Horlick); and fifth, "Tales from the Vienna Woods" (Strauss).

A special program at senior high school February 10 at 2:30 p. m. will include "Overture to William Tell" (Rossini); "American Bolero" (Brown); "Fourth Movement" from the "New World Symphony" (Dvorak); "Song of the Bayou" (Bloom); "Juba Dance" (Dett); "Danse Moronique" (Hazelman) and "Blue Danube Waltz (Strauss). Mr. DeNardo will conduct the first two selections and Herbert Hazelmann, of the high school music faculty and composer of "Dance Moronique" will conduct the other numbers.

Back at College.

At 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, February 16, the North Carolina symphony will play at Student's auditorium of Woman's college with special selections in commemoration of the anniversary of the American composer, MacDowell. The program will include "From an Indian Lodge," "Will o' the Wisp," "A Deserted Farm" and "Witches Dance" from the works of the American. Other selections will be "Overture to William Tell" (Rossini); "Symphony No. 8 in B Minor (Unfinished)" (Schubert); "Minuet from Don Giovanni" (Mozart); and "Natchez-on-the-Hill" (Powell).

A matinee program for all graded schools of the city will be given at Aycock auditorium of Woman's college February 23 as follows: "Overture to William Tell" (Rossini); "Peer Gynt Suite" including "Morning," "Ase's Death," "Anitra's Dance" and "In the Hall of the Mountain King" (Greig); "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" (Jessal); "Don Juan Minuet" (Mozart); "Pizzicato Polka" from "Sylva"; "Blue Danube Waltz" (Strauss) and "Grand March" from "Aida" (Verdi).

The second evening concert will be presented February 25 at Aycock auditorium in conjunction with the Greensboro civic ballet.

De Nardo

THE ANNUAL SPRING MUSIC FESTIVAL of Hall Fletcher Junior High School was presented Friday at 8 p. m. by the 120-voice choir and the band of the school. Directors for the concert were Mrs. Hugh T. Brank, choral director and Joe DeNardo, band director. Numbers included in the musical program were "The Star Spangled Banner," "Carolina In The Morning," "Joshua And The Battle of Jericho," "Dry Bones" and "The Battle Hymn Of The Republic."

JOSEPH DENARDO CHOSEN TO LEAD MUSIC PROJECT

Ash. Times - 3/24/38

Is Confirmed As Teacher, Musician For WPA Undertaking.

Joseph DeNardo, Asheville musician, has been confirmed as musician of a WPA community music project sponsored by the chamber of commerce here.

Erle Stapleton, state WPA music director, informed the chamber of commerce officials today that Mr. DeNardo's appointment has been confirmed.

Mr. DeNardo's work will consist of the group teaching of volunteer musicians, all public performances of the groups to be free. Mr. DeNardo already has an orchestra of 40 musicians under his training, and will direct a group of 102 boys comprising the drum and bugle corps of the Sons of the American Legion.

It is expected Mr. DeNardo will undertake the training of other groups so far as his time will permit, it was said at the chamber of commerce. Three other groups in and around Asheville are interested in similar set-ups, but they will have to be referred to Mr. Stapleton, it was explained.

Joe DeNardo To Be Honored For His Fine Work With School Bands In Asheville

Ash. Cit. 10-21-51

Joe DeNardo, who directs three high school bands, is going to be singled out Friday, October 26, between the halves at the Asheville-Salisbury football game in Memorial Stadium and asked to take a bow.

As everyone knows, DeNardo is a most modest fellow and the near miracles he has accomplished in training young musicians and whipping them into a snappy band have not changed him in the least.

Joe Sevier and members of the Student Council at Lee H. Edwards High School are behind the move to honor DeNardo for the fine work he has done with the students over a long period of years. he will probably be the most acutely unhappy man in the stadium when he steps out to take his bow because, as noted above, he is a modest sort of fellow. But the audience will love it, and what is more important, so will the students who are taking this opportunity to show their affection for him as their band leader. They are proud of what he has done for them and they want him and all the people in Asheville to know it.

A native of Italy, DeNardo completed his extensive musical education at the Conservatory of Naples. There he was a student of musical theory under Guelmo Luzzi and trumpet under Ferdinand Alessandra.

As a young man he came to the United States and when World War I got under way he was made leader of the 105th Engineers' Band. This unit was attached to the 30th Division and saw a lot of service.

After the war he came to Asheville and has lived here since, serving the community and various organizations at different times, but always with the same spirit of loyalty and tireless energy that still characterizes his work.

JOE DeNARDO

In 1922 he was married to Miss Tomsie Reeves, daughter of T. H. Reeves, for many years tax collector of Buncombe County. They have one daughter, May Jo, now Mrs. Richard Ford, who is herself a well-known musician and singer.

DeNardo has always had a lot of pleasure in teaching music to youngsters. As far back as 1933 he worked with the city school system here, continuing through 1935. During the depression years he headed a Federal Music project and was assistant director and then director of the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra.

He also directed the Asheville Municipal Band several years ago, and also headed the DeNardo Orchestra, an organization that played for many functions over a period of years.

The musical features of the Asheville Rhododendron Festival, particularly the Rhododendron Pageant, were built around the DeNardo genius, the directors leaning heavily on him for appropriate music for this popular event.

When the high school bands in Asheville faced an emergency in leadership DeNardo took over the load on a temporary basis. His undeniable skill in working with students was so quickly displayed that he has been retained.

His associates sometimes affectionately refer to him as the "Little Man Who Wasn't There" because he was in three other places. For the past six years he has directed the destinies of the Lee H. Edwards High School band, the David Millard Junior High School Band and the Hall Fletcher Junior High School Band and all have flourished under his leadership.

His first love is for his boys and girls and the affection in which they hold him has been demonstrated from time to time. When he calls they turn out to play for every sort of function imaginable, always cheerfully and with fine spirit.

There are some signs in the wind that steps must be taken to curtail these multiple appearances of the bands because they eat so heavily into the meager funds available to the bands.

The minimum cost of a parade is about $100 and if a rain occurs this can easily climb toward $500. Since most of the work the band does is free, it is easy to see what a hardship this imposes on the business management of the bands.

Raleigh Man Appointed

Joseph DeNardo, Schools' 'Mr. Music,' Is Retiring

Ash. Cit. 3-2-60

Joseph DeNardo, "Mr Music" in Asheville city schools and the city at large for the past 27 years, will retire as director of the schools' music program June 30, it was announced Tuesday by the City School Board.

At the same time, the board announced appointment of Edward Darrell Benson of Raleigh to succeed DeNardo. Benson is a former music instructor with New Bern and Fuquay Springs schools and has served as instructor with the summer school of the East Carolina College Music Department since 1953.

Benson will report for duty here March 15 and will work with DeNardo until June 30, at which time Benson will assume full responsibility for the city schools' music program.

A native of Italy, where he studied at the Conservatory of Naples, DeNardo came to Asheville shortly after World War I. From his arrival, he became a dynamic force in the city's musical life and served as organizer and director of numerous public and private musical enterprises.

He was named music director for Asheville city high schools in 1933, and served as director of the band of Lee H. Edwards High School and David Millard and Hall Fletcher junior high schools.

He became director of the Asheville Municipal Band in 1938 and formed and directed the DeNardo Orchestra, also in the 1930s. In the same period, he served for some five years as director of the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra and as assistant district supervisor of WPA music projects.

Other organizations he headed during his earlier career here included the Lions Club Band, American Business Club Saxaphone Orchestra, Kiwanis Club Band, Asheville Civic Orchestra and Sons of the Legion Drum and Bugle Corps.

He has been an instructor in composition, harmony and instrumental techniques, and is the author of a textbook on harmony.

DeNardo is a member of North Carolina Music Educators, N. C. Education Assn., National Education Assn., president of the Professional Musicians Assn. of Asheville of the American Federation of Musicians; a thirty-second degree Mason and a member of Trinity Episcopal Church.

He lives with his wife, the former Miss Tomcie Reeves, at 45 Caledonia Rd. They have one daughter, Mrs. Richard Ford of Asheville, and four grandchildren.

The school board approved DeNardo's retirement request "with great regret." In a statement on the retirement, E. C. Funderburk, city school superintendent, said:

"It has been a genuine pleasure to have known and to have worked with Joe DeNardo. Everyone appreciates the warmth of his personality and his genuine love for people—for students in particular.

"All of us think of him not only as a co-worker and a fine professional person but also as a personal friend.

"Joe DeNardo has already become a legendary figure. We are grateful of his long years of devoted service. In the years ahead we hope to use him in some part-time capacity, if he is willing."

"We wish for him all possible happiness in his retirement."

Benson, a native of Brattleboro, N. C., attended Rocky Mount city schools. He received a B.S. degree in music from East Carolina College in 1950 and a master's degree in music from Columbia University in 1952.

He was director of instrumental music in New Bern city schools from 1950 to 1952. From 1952 to 1959 he was director of instrumental and choral music at Fuquay Springs, where he also served as assistant principal and boys' counselor. Since 1953 he has been brass instructor and dance band director at the summer school of the Music Department of East Carolina College.

Funderburk said of Benson's appointment, "We feel most fortunate in securing his services to succeed Mr. DeNardo as band director of Lee Edwards and music coordinator of Asheville city schools. His fine educational background plus a wealth of teaching experience at elementary, high school and college levels makes him a natural. He is recognized not only for his music teaching ability but also for his knowledge of administration."

Benson is married to the former Miss Nanearle Gaither of Statesville. They have one son.

BOB TERRELL—Music Man

Joe DeNardo's pet subject is a simple one. "I want music to be a part of our education," he said. "It is so much a part of our culture, why shouldn't it occupy the same level in education as law or medicine?" A. Citizen 5/26/77

BOB TERRELL

DeNardo is 88, still very active in the community's music life, and still concerned about those he taught for 30 years in the Asheville city schools.

To them, he is "Mr. Music," the man who taught them not only how to play a horn and to march in the band, but to appreciate music as well.

The Asheville High School band, an excellent unit of 115 pieces under the direction of Ernest Black, will dedicate its annual Spring Concert to DeNardo and the late Madison Lennon, who directed the bands at Stephens-Lee High School for 25 years.

Lennon died last year, but DeNardo is still alive and strongly kicking, despite his age. He will attend the concert Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Asheville High School auditorium.

"We hope," said Black, the current AHS band director, "that many alumni from both directors' bands will attend and honor their directors."

Change His Teeth

We caught up with DeNardo, Malcolm Gamble and I, sitting in the lobby of the Bank of Asheville, chatting with a pretty girl. He led us up to his small, bright studio above Cagle Music Co. on Patton Avenue, climbing the stairs at a good clip.

Malcolm shot his picture while I asked questions. DeNardo held a gold trumpet, his favorite instrument. "Blow the horn," Malcolm said, wanting to get a picture of him with the horn at his lips.

"Blow the horn?" DeNardo said. "Wait a minute. I'll have to change my teeth." He has eating teeth and horn-blowing teeth. He also wears contact lenses to magnify his vision after cataract operations.

"I'm sorry old age caught up with me," said the man who obviously enjoys life. "But I'm still at it." He still teaches music, tutoring about a dozen students in private instruction.

He loves to talk music, and his favorite subject is the way music is handled in schools.

"To my mind," he said, "the music programs in schools should be in the curriculum as a required subject and treated like any other study, like language, biology, or history, for credits for college entrance.

"I would have music taught like any other subject. Not band classes. Not orchestra classes. But music classes. Music taught before instrument. Those who are not talented will drop by the way, but those with talent will continue. This would improve our bands, and especially improve music on the college level.

"We don't treat music for its full value in our schools. We treat it as an extra curricular thing. We use music for entertainment, for halftime shows. But we would have better bands, better music, when music is taught per se, with no gimmicks."

The Value Of Music

The value of music, DeNardo said, is not only invaluable to our nation's culture, but to world culture as well.

"My favorite saying," he said, "is 'Music speaks in many tongues, but its language is universal.' We could take a thousand musicians to Russia and get a good hand, but take a thousand soldiers and see what happens."

DeNardo was born in San Buono, Italy, a village at the foot of the Apinines Mountains. He came to America with his family soon after the assassination of President McKinley in 1901.

Joe DeNardo, Music Man

Asheville Citizen May 26, 1977

"I learned music at an early age," he said. "When I was ten, I earned a scholarship to study music in Germany. But I learned more music in this country than over there. Here I was free to ask questions and get right answers. Over there, you'd ask a question and get hit with a stick."

He traveled about the country here playing his trumpet. "There were silent movies then," he said, "and every theater had an orchestra. I played in many of them. I earned my way to pay for my education by playing the trumpet." He opened the Plaza Theater here by conducting its first orchestra.

"Asheville was known as the Music Capital of the South before World War I," he said. "Civic clubs formed bands. There were five or six here. Opera companies came here. The music here was outstanding. We have outstanding talent here now, as good as anywhere, but it's hard to make a living at music here. That's another reason I want to see more emphasis on it in the schools."

His Source Of Strength

DeNardo started teaching music at Asheville High School when the Great Depression struck. "There was no money to pay teachers," he said, "and I went over there to help hold things together. The first year I got $14 for my work, and it came through the courtesy of the Rotary Club."

He left for a while to help hold the North Carolina Symphony together, but soon was back at Asheville High. Lee H. Edwards was principal then. "I remember the commencement exercise of 1933," DeNardo said. "Mr. Edwards told me it would be his last commencement. It was. He died that year. He was a nice man. But how did he know he was going to die?"

DeNardo taught music and directed the band at Asheville High and in other city schools until his retirement in 1961. How many children did he teach? "That's a good question," he said. "Let's do some thinking. I never had less than 60 kids. Sixty-five would be a good average. You can figure it from that."

DeNardo's wife, also an accomplished musician and a gracious woman, was shot to death last December when a young woman attempted to hold up the beauty salon in which Mrs. DeNardo worked.

I thought readers might like to know how Mr. DeNardo is getting along now.

"I'm getting along very well," he said. "We have to take things philosophically. I'm having to live on a different plane of existence, but the best thing to do is to follow what Jesus left with us: let the dead take care of the dead and the living take care of the living.

"I could sit down and feel sorry for myself," he concluded, "but I want to be active and make a contribution to the community. To say that I don't feel sorrow wouldn't be right. I do. But pity gets nothing. We'll let the Lord take care of that. That's where I get my strength."

Joseph DeNardo Dies At Age 91

Joseph DeNardo, 91, of Vanderbilt Apts., formerly of Caledonia Road, died Friday in an Asheville hospital.

A native of Italy, he had lived in Asheville most of his life.

Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Virgil R. Gray of Mars Hill; a brother, Vernon DeNardo of Brandenton, Fla.; and three grandchildren.

Services will be held at 2 p.m. Monday at Trinity Episcopal Church where he was a member. Father John Tuton and Father J. Barney Hawkins will officiate. Burial will be in Riverside Cemetery.

He was a World War I Army veteran. He was a member of Mount Herman Lodge No. 118, a 33rd degree Scottish Rite, and had been a Mason for 60 years and a member of Scottish Rite Body for 50 years.

He was director of music for 27 years in the Asheville City Schools, where he was known as "Mr. Music." ACT 12/7/80

He conducted the 105th Engineers Band of the 1st National Guard in World War I.

He organized the first municipal band in Asheville in 1938 and formed and directed the DeNardo Orchestra in the 1930s. In that same period, he served for five years as director of the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra.

He also directed the Lions Club Band, American Business Club Saxaphone Orchestra, Kiwanis Club Band, Asheville Civic Orchestra and Sons of the Legion Drum and Bugle Corps.

JOSEPH DeNARDO

He was an instructor in composition, harmony and instrumental techniques and wrote a textbook on harmony.

He was a member of North Carolina Music Educators, North Carolina Education Association, National Education Association, and president of the Professional Musicians Association of Asheville.

He studied music at the San Sebastian Conservatory in Naples and came with his parents to America when he was 12 years old.

His wife, Lucy Tom DeNardo, died in 1976.

Dermid Warns Carrier Bridge Load Violators

Complaints have been received that trucks weighing considerably more than the one-ton limit set for the old Carrier Bridge have been using the bridge while the new one is under construction, Charles W. Dermid, Director of Public Safety, said yesterday.

He called attention to the fact that the law governing violation of posted orders about bridge capacity are strict, placing upon the owners of such vehicles civil responsibility for any damage occasioned by such violation.

"I am sure that the owners of big trucks do not want to incur such a risk and that they will instruct their drivers accordingly," Dermid said.

Retired Magistrate Was Native Of Henderson

J. D. Dermid, 86, retired magistrate and father of Charles W. Dermid, city director of public safety, died about 9:45 o'clock last night at his home, 21 Allen street, West Asheville, following a lengthy illness.

In addition to Charles Dermid, Mr. Dermid is survived by the widow, Mrs. Anna Netherton Dermid; another son, E. J. Dermid, of El Paso, Tex.; seven daughters, Mrs. L. H. Hudson, of Asheville; Mrs. R. E. Johnson, Kingsport, Tenn., Mrs. H. R. Duckett, Asheville, R. F. D. No. 4; Mrs. Frank Buckner, Weaverville; Mrs. Ernest Carr, Asheville; Miss Anne Dermid, Charlotte, and Mrs. John T. Smith, Asheville; a brother, L. T. Dermid, Hendersonville; a sister, Mrs. W. F. Dotson, also of Hendersonville; 15 grandchildren, and 11 great-grandchildren.

A native of Henderson county, Mr. Dermid attended Judson college, Hendersonville, and later taught school in that county for four years. Still later he was merchant in Henderson county for approximately 15 years.

Served As Commissioner

Mr. Dermid served as a city commissioner of Hendersonville for a term and also one term as chairman of the Henderson county board of education. He was deputy tax collector there for eight years.

Mr. Dermid moved with his family to Asheville October 25, 1913, where he first took up residence on Orchard street. He moved to the present home on Allen street two years later.

He was elected a member of the board of aldermen of the town of West Asheville about 1916. Some time later West Asheville, a separate municipality, voted to become a part of Asheville.

A magistrate here for a quarter of a century, Mr. Dermid once estimated he had married not less than 1,250 couples. Pleasant, brisk, and business like, he was never known to turn away prospective bride and bridegrooms because they lacked the money in which to pay him for services rendered.

In Real Estate Business

Mr. Dermid maintained offices on Haywood road at the intersection of Louisiana avenue where he dealt in the real estate business and served as justice of the peace.

In West Asheville and Asheville as well, he was known as a man of uncommon sense and hundreds came to him yearly for advice. It was during his term of office as alderman that West Asheville voted to become a part of Asheville.

Mr. Dermid was a member of Calvary Baptist church from the time it was first established on Hanover street in West Asheville and took an active part in church affairs.

Funeral services, for which arrangements were incomplete last night, will be conducted at Calvary Baptist church with interment in Calvary Episcopal church cemetery at Fletcher.

Dunn and Groce funeral home is in charge of arrangements.

HUGH P. DEVINE, FATALLY HURT IN FALL, DIES

Nightwatchman Discovered Injured At Dave Steel Co. Flagpole Base.

Cause of death of Hugh P. Devine, 40, of 57 Vermont avenue, second-shift nightwatchman at Dave Steel company, found critically injured at the base of the plant flagpole on East Haywood road about 11:30 o'clock last night, was reported by Dr. P. R. Terry, county coroner, as due to skull fractures caused by a fall at the flagpole.

Dr. Terry said the injured man was found by G. I. Calloway, third-shift watchman, after he reported for work. Joseph Dave, president of the company, reported Mr. Devine missing when he went to the plant about 9:45 o'clock last night. Mr. Devine was moved to a hospital, where he died at 4:25 o'clock this morning.

It was reported by relatives to Dr. Terry, the coroner said, that Mr. Devine was subject to epileptic attacks, but that these had been of a mild nature in recent months. It was reported at the police department that Mr. Devine was seen taking down the plant flag at sundown last evening and at the time the flag lines appeared to have become tangled.

Dr. Terry performed an autopsy at 5 o'clock this morning and said he found several skull fractures which, it was determined, were caused by the man's fall from the flagpole base on the building. It was believed Mr. Devine lost his footing and fell, or could have fallen due to an attack while taking down the flag.

Mr. Devine had been with the Dave Steel company some time. Dr. Terry pronounced death due to a cerebral hemorrhage. The police report shows that no foul play is suspected.

The body was taken this morning to the funeral home of Brownell-Dunn and Lovin. Funeral plans had not been made but members of the family said services and burial probably will be conducted Saturday.

Surviving are the mother, Mrs. Martha Devine, three sisters, the Misses Grace, Martha and Mary Devine, and two brothers, Henry and Morris Devine, all of Asheville.

Who Wouldn't Smile With These Pretty Dolls?

These young ladies are happy. Virginia Bailey, ten, daughter of Mr and Mrs. John V. Bailey, 148 Sand Hill Road, West Asheville.

FOURTEEN-YEAR-OLD JAME DeVORE, 272 Hazel Mill Road, not only doesn't count his chickens before they're hatched, but he doesn't count 'em until they've grown into healthy pullets. The Emma 4-H Club youth was one of the boys who were given 100 New Hampshire Red baby chicks six months ago. Out of that flock his ability as a poultryman saved and raised 88 into healthy birds, shown here with their master. That, according to the Buncombe County agent's office, is an excellent record for man or boy. If the average chick flock has a survival rate of 85 out of 100 it's doing very good. The West Asheville boy was one of 10 4-H Club youths selected to exhibit their birds in the annual Buncombe 4-H County Pullet Show and Sale. Volunteers mark NeighborWorks Week by fixing home

SPECIAL TO THE CITIZEN-TIMES

WEST ASHEVILLE — Neighborhood Housing Services of Asheville has been collaborating with other local nonprofits to assist Pearlie Mae Dixon, an 83-year-old Burton Street resident who has lived here for 55 years.

Since the beginning of the year, groups have been doing repairs and other jobs to bring her home up to livable standards. This week, her neighbors will clean out her basement to ready it for weatherization as part of a national effort called NeighborWorks Week.

Dixon contacted NHS at a local community meeting, asking for help to fix a gaping hole in the roof over her bathroom where birds had taken up residence. NHS is a local nonprofit whose mission is to provide affordable homeownership opportunities and strengthen neighborhoods. NHS has been working with the West Asheville Burton Street Community for the past year.

"I would have fixed it (the hole), but I'm just too old to fix the roof, and I am asking for help," Dixon said.

SPECIAL TO THE CITIZEN-TIMES

Pearlie Mae Dixon of West Asheville points toward her roof, which was repaired by volunteers from the Neighborhood of Asheville and other local nonprofit organizations.

Network of resources

NHS community outreach coordinator Barb Verni-Lau tapped into her network of nonprofit resources to repair the hole. After confirming that Dixon's income level qualified her for assistance, Verni-Lau contacted the emergency repair program at Mountain Housing Opportunities and the city of Asheville to have the hole repaired.

To continue the efforts, Verni-Lau contacted Community Action Opportunities Weatherization Services. Before the Community Action Program can weatherize Dixon's home, the basement has to be cleaned out; this is where the collective action of the community comes in — to ensure that the basement is clean and prepared for weatherization.

"This community collaboration gives Mrs. Dixon comprehensive services that no one agency can provide and community volunteers that neither of our agencies can provide," said Ben Watts, director of economic development for Community Action Opportunities.

> "This is one of the benefits of having a strong neighborhood association; we look out for one another and lend each other a hand when needed."
> TERESA McPHERSON, Burton community resident and NHS board member

Safety measures

The weatherization program will insulate the attic, floors, wall, pipes, water heater and stop air leaks. To ensure the air in the house is safe and healthy, volunteers will inspect Dixon's heating system and make the necessary tuneups to address carbon monoxide levels and combustion safety.

Burton Street's community effort begins at 9 a.m. Friday. Residents, volunteers from NHS, the Community Action Program and The Home Depot will work to clean out Dixon's basement and celebrate their work that evening with a community cookout at 6 p.m. at the Burton Street Community Peace Garden on Bryant Street.

"This is one of the benefits of having a strong neighborhood association; we look out for one another and lend each other a hand when needed," said Teresa McPherson, Burton community resident and NHS board member.

This community effort happens during the National Celebration of NeighborWorks Week this week. NHS and other chartered NeighborWorks organizations across the country will mobilize thousands of businesspeople, residents and government officials in a week of neighborhood change and awareness. They will rehabilitate and repair homes, paint and landscape properties, conduct neighborhood tours, recognize successful partnerships and host a number of events that educate, train and inform.

Helping families

In 2005, more than 18,000 families benefited from the week's activities nationwide.

"There is no way that I could do this on my own. This really shows a terrific help from my neighbors; it's reminiscent of what neighborhoods used to be when you could walk next door to borrow a cup of sugar and end up being invited in for dinner. This shows real community in Burton Street," Dixon said.

Lauri Newman, a Burton Street resident who has spearheaded the Peace Garden development, looks forward to this inaugural celebration at the Peace Garden.

"I think the celebration at the Peace Garden is the perfect ending to this cooperative effort for Mrs. Dixon; no longer will she share her residence with birds flying into her bathroom; now she can come here to enjoy watching the birds in the garden," she said.

For more information on NHS or how to participate in NeighborWorks Week, call Verni-Lau at 251-5054, Ext 26.

FIRE CHIEF SCORES SMALL WATER MAINS

Duckett Declares Serious Fire Narrowly Averted Yesterday Because of Lacking Pressure.

Smallness of water mains and scarcity of hydrant outlets during the fire which yesterday afternoon destroyed the house and contents of Mrs. Lizzie Mills, 135 Craven Street, valued at $2,000 brought about a condition which threatened a general holocaust which would possibly have wiped out a sizeable section of West Asheville, Fire Chief A. L. Duckett told a reporter for The Citizen last night.

The house could not have been saved, Chief Duckett said. No one was at home when the fire started and when the department reached the scene the blaze had gained too great headway. The delay caused in stretching lines of hose to the nearest hydrant, 800 feet away, and the feeble spurt of water that responded to firemen's efforts enabled the fire to spread and threaten two neighboring dwellings, the chief said.

The main in question is said to be two inches in diameter, on which was set a four-inch hydrant. The hose used measured two and half inches and the friction along the 800 feet used was so great as to nullify, practically, efforts to extinguish the fire. Mains in use through the city measure up to sixteen inches in some sections. Four inches, the chief stated, is considered much too small to be of any practical benefit.

URGES PREVENTION

Chief A. L. Duckett.

DUCKETT URGES PREVENTION OF FIRES IN CITY

Fire Chief Heading Drive To Educate Public On Fire Hazards.

Continuing the fire prevention campaign in connection with National Fire Prevention week which the Asheville firemen have launched, Chief A. L. Duckett spoke Wednesday at David Millard high school at 10:15 o'clock on fire prevention methods and the necessity of eliminating fire hazards.

Chief Duckett will make a similar address Thursday at the David Millard high school at the same hour. He will speak at the Rotary club meeting Thursday noon and at the Kiwanis club meeting Friday noon.

Friday night a fire school for forest rangers will be conducted by Chief Duckett and M. A. Mattoon, supervisor of Pisgah National forest.

Fire losses, according to Stacey W. Wade, state insurance commissioner, in a bulletin just issued, have for the first time in the state's history this year been lessened over the previous years. This is because of the efficiency of fire departments of the state, the hearty cooperation of the public in fire prevention, and the state firemen's association, the bulletin said.

In his speeches, Chief Duckett is urging co-operation of the public in cutting down fire losses. Fire losses in Asheville, he said, are being reduced as a result of such co-operation.

Fire Chief A. L. Duckett and Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins, representing the Asheville Community Chest, were principal speakers at the meeting of the Hall Fletcher Parent-Teacher association held at the school building Tuesday night. Chief Duckett spoke on fire prevention and Mrs. Gaskins spoke on community chest work.

Delegates to attend the state meeting of the parent-teacher associations, to be held at Charlotte, Nov. 8, 9 and 10, were named as follows: Mrs. W. A. Bell, Miss Rena Nichols and Mrs. George C. Osborn. A committee, with Mrs. H. A. Wells, chairman, was appointed to assist in providing costumes to be used in presentation of a play by high school students.

Mrs. J. G. Greenwood, president, presided at the meeting. A music program was rendered by Miss Irene, Miss Mary Louise and Miss Grace Logan.

DRIVE AGAINST FIRES STARTS; DUCKETT ACTIVE

Chief Keeps Firemen Busy Putting Up Fire Prevention Posters.

Fire Prevention week, observed throughout the country each year, as part of a vigorous campaign to stem fire losses, began Monday in Asheville. Firemen were busy during the morning, putting posters in shop windows and on street cars. Literature, dealing with the subject of fire prevention was distributed in the schools.

The main feature of the first day's program is an address to be broadcast from Station WWNC by Mayor Gallatin Roberts at 8:05 o'clock Monday night. The mayor's speech will be followed by a musical program in which the Central Methodist church quartet will take part.

Each night there will be a radio program, including an address and music.

The campaign will be waged chiefly in the schools, the civic clubs and in the industrial plants around Asheville. Each of the civic clubs has arranged a "fire prevention" program for its regular luncheon, and school principals have agreed to hold some sort of program in each school.

Booklets, dealing with the questions of school fires, were mailed Monday by the fire department to all members of the Parent-Teacher associations in Asheville.

Fire Chief Duckett, who is in charge of the week, announced he hoped to have seven days without a single fire in the city.

Fire Prevention Week To Open On October 8

Widespread Campaign Is Being Planned For Observance Here

A wide-spread campaign to educate the public more thoroughly on the importance of fire prevention and control, will be promoted in Asheville from October 8 to 14—National Fire Prevention Week.

Schools, civic clubs and the radio will be used to further the objectives of the event.

Chief A. L. Duckett, of the Asheville fire department, is in charge of the campaign here for the fire department and will work with committees from the Chamber of Commerce and other organizations.

Plan Essay Contest

An essay contest with five cash prizes will be conducted in the schools. The subject of the essays will be "How to Prevent Fires," and each must contain 200 words or less. All students from the fourth grade up are eligible to enter. The Asheville Fire and Casualty company is sponsoring the contest and the following prizes will be awarded: first, $15; second, $10; third, $5; fourth, $3 and fifth, $2. Last year more than 500 essays were submitted.

During the annual Asheville cooking school held recently at the Plaza theater, the fire department had several displays in the lobby of the theater. All fuse plugs that had been found "bridged" in Asheville homes were assembled and a contest conducted to guess how many plugs were in the pile.

Mrs. R. L. McMinn, 14 Central avenue; Mrs. E. F. Stepp, 44 Brevard road, Mrs. Arthur Kiser, 1,216 Haywood road; Miss Lila King, 17 Coleman avenue; Miss Dorothy Metcalf, 458 Pearson drive, and Mrs. D. L. Bishop, 183 Virginia avenue, were winners in this contest.

During the school fire prevention pamphlets were distributed to women attending the cooking demonstrations.

In order to carry the campaign into Asheville homes each student will be given home inspection blanks and these will be filled out and returned to the fire department. Similar blanks will be furnished owners of buildings and occupants of stores and offices in the city.

To Visit Schools

Officers of the fire department will visit the schools and will talk on general fire prevention work, fire drills and fire hazards. Plays on fire prevention will be given at many of the schools. Students will be instructed in the use of fire alarm boxes and shown how to turn in an alarm. A fire alarm box will be taken to the schools for the demonstration.

Fire prevention programs will be held at all civic clubs during the week and the fire department orchestra will broadcast over Station WWNC.

A dance will be held Thursday evening, October 5, at the central fire station, and proceeds will be used to defray expenses of the campaign here.

In 1932 Asheville won first place in the state in the contest put on by the National Board of Fire Underwriters and first place in the United States in the contest sponsored by the National Chamber of Commerce. The national body does not award a nation-wide prize, only prizes are to the individual states.

An electric sign, 34 feet long and two feet high, has been erected on top of the central fire station and reads "Fire Prevention Headquarters."

FIRE PREVENTION DAY TO BE OBSERVED HERE

SCHOOL CHILDREN WILL TAKE A BIG PART

Thorough Inspection of Entire City Is Being Made—Representative of Insurance Company Is Here.

In accordance with a proclamation issued by Governor T. W. Bickett, designating October 9 as fire prevention day, Fire Chief A. L. Duckett has planned to observe the day here by an inspection of the business district, and securing the cooperation of the school children in a thorough inspection of the entire city.

A series of addresses are now being made in the schools by a representative of the state insurance commissioner and representatives of the local fire department, instructing the children in their duties in carrying out the program. They will be asked to thoroughly inspect all fire hazards around their own premises and in their neighborhood and make a report of their findings to the local fire department, whic hwill in turn make investigations which are recommended and make plans for needed improvements.

Representatives from the fire department are at present making a close inspection of all fire hazards in the business and wholesale districts and their findings and recommendations will be turned in on the ninth.

School children are eagerly looking forward to the day. Since the ninth falls on next Saturday it will not in any way interfere with the regular school work, and much good is expected to be accomplished through the efforts of the schools.

A RECORD TO BE PROUD OF!

Asheville, through its Chamber of Commerce, is one of 600 cities entered in an annual national contest for competition in fire prevention. The accomplishments of each city is judged by the United States Chamber of Commerce. In this competition, Asheville, in class four in population, has won distinction as the following tabulation shows. The splendid work of the fire department, the carefulness of every citizen, and the observance of fire prevention week are the factors determining this honor.

1927---Honorable mention in nation, first in place in North Carolina.

1928---Fourth honor in nation, first place in North Carolina.

1929---Sixth honor in nation, first place in North Carolina.

1930---Fourth honor in nation, second place in North Carolina.

FIRE PREVENTION DAY WAS WELL OBSERVED

Colored Schools Visited Yesterday—Much Good Is Expected to Result From Program.

Fire prevention day program initiated Thursday by Fire Chief A. L. Duckett and other representatives of the fire department was carried out in the city schools throughout the latter part of the week and into the afternoon of yesterday.

A party composed of Mayor Roberts, J. H. Wood, Commissioner Fitzpatrick, Fire Chief A. L. Duckett and Miss Lee, a representative of the state insurance commision at Raleigh, visited the various colored schools of the city yesterday morning and made talks on fire prevention and its meaning to every individual. In the afternoon the colored Industrial institute on College street was visited and talks made on the same subject.

The best of co-operation was shown by business men of the city and as a rule conditions were found to be favorable. In a few cases repairs were recommended and the owners showed their willingness to do as was recommended.

School children, through their keen interest in the work trusted to them, did much good by inspection all fire hazards in their immediate neighborhoods, and reporting their findings to the fire department.

Asheville's fire record is good and co-operation with the fire department such as was shown last week, will do much toward keeping down the figures in fire loss.

Fire Prevention Honor Awarded To Asheville

First place in fire prevention in North Carolina has been awarded Asheville according to word received yesterday by A. L. Duckett, chief of the fire department, from T. Alfred Fleming, chairman of the fire prevention and clean-up committee of the National Fire Prevention association.

Asheville was ranked nationally along with 10 other cities in the highest class. To receive this distinction an award of more than 90 per cent in rating must be made. Asheville was the only North Carolina city to make the first 10.

Greensboro was second in North Carolina and Rocky Mount third. Cities other than Asheville placed in the first 11 were: Wichita, Kan., Prescott, Ariz., St. Louis, Mo., Berkeley, Cal., San Francisco, Cal., Fort Collins, Ocala, Fla., Savannah, Ga., Cincinnati, O., and Colfax, Va.

Chief Duckett was highly gratified at the showing Asheville made this year. He issued a warning about the danger of fire in Christmas decorations, temporary wiring for trees, and other fire hazards.

"The way to keep our fire loss down is not to take any chances whatever," he said.

Don't Give FIRE a Chance

Take No CHANCES

A PROCLAMATION

By The President of The United States of America

Disastrous fires destroy each year property of many kinds to a total greater than the whole value of all property in the Nation in the days of our forefathers. This loss seriously offsets our normal gain in national assets.

It is the simple obligation of every citizen to realize, knowing this, that a large proportion of these fires can be prevented by the exercise of proper care and by the use of appropriate fire-prevention measures.

I call special attention to the unfortunate fact that a very large percentage of fires in every part of the Nation is caused by acts of individual carelessness and that millions of dollars' worth of property could be preserved each year by the realization on the part of the individual of his or her responsibility to the community.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim and designate the week beginning October 7, 1934, as Fire Prevention Week, and I particularly urge State and municipal officials, civic and commercial organizations, school authorities, the clergy, and the press to emphasize the danger of and needless waste caused by fire and to encourage the study of ways and means whereby fire hazards and the disastrous consequences of fire may be prevented as far as possible.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this tenth day of September, in the year of our Lord, nineteen hundred and thirty-four, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fifty-ninth.

PROGRAMS TO BE GIVEN AT CIVIC CLUBS, SCHOOLS

Two Radio Broadcasts, Essay Contest And Parade Planned

Asheville will be made conscious this week of the hazards of fire and the methods of its prevention as the city joins with the nation in observance of fire prevention week.

October 9 is the anniversary of the great Chicago fire and it is the custom to observe the full week during which the day falls as fire prevention week.

"The annual loss from fire has averaged a half billion dollars annually for the past 10 years, add to this 10,000 lives sacrificed and 25,000 persons injured and you can see what America is paying each year in fire losses." Chief A. L. Duckett, of the Asheville fire department, said yesterday.

The doctrine of fire prevention will be spread to every part of the city by Chief Duckett, his men, and volunteers.

Cooperation Urged

Letters have been written urging cooperation and assistance during fire prevention week to principals of schools, presidents and secretaries of civic clubs, pastors of churches in the city, the executive secretaries of the Boy Scout and Girl Scout organizations, officials of parent-teacher associations, managers of the larger city stores, managers of city industrial plants, Radio Station WWNC and managers of all theaters.

There will be a parade tomorrow morning beginning at 10 o'clock at Vance street and covering the principal downtown thoroughfares. In the parade will be fire apparatus, sanitary trucks, policemen and representatives of business concerns.

Five hundred posters have been placed in store windows and on delivery trucks and five window displays showing some of the common fire hazards found in the home have been located in various parts of the city.

Broadcasts Planned

There will be two radio programs during the week, one presenting musical selections by the fire department's string band, and the other an address by City Manager P. M. Burdette and selections by the band.

Programs are to be given at all the city schools, composed of music by the fire department band, fire prevention talks, fire drill and plays given by the students.

There will be an essay contest on "Fire Prevention in the Home" for all school children above the fourth grade. Prizes are as follows: First, $15; second, $10; third, $5; fourth, $3; and fifth, $2. The money is being given by the Asheville fire and casualty insurance agents.

Issues Proclamation

Gov. Ehringhaus has issued the following proclamation on fire prevention week:

"Whereas, the destruction of life and property by fire is a matter of concern to everyone; and

"Whereas, the reduction of fire waste can be effected in direct proportion to the amount of care exercised by all people; and

"Whereas, the President of the United States for the benefit of the American people as a whole and with the view of arousing the people of the United States to the importance of eliminating our enormous fire waste, has proclaimed the week of October 6-12.

"Fire Prevention Week:

"Therefore, I, J. C. B. Ehringhaus, governor of the state of North Carolina, do hereby proclaim the week of October 6-12 fire prevention week in order that the people of this state in every community shall individually and through our various organizations, discover and correct existing fire hazards, promote measures of public and private protection, extend instruction in fire prevention among adults, as well as school children, and arouse the people generally to the need for habits of greater care, and to this end I appeal to our citizens to thoroughly cooperate with the various fire departments throughout the state and I request that every mayor issue a proclamation. I earnestly solicit the cooperation of chambers of commerce, civic and women's clubs, and the press."

Wells Urges Cooperation

Mayor R. M. Wells, of Asheville, yesterday issued the following proclamation calling attention to the week:

"This week has been designated as Fire Prevention Week throughout the United States, and I call upon the citizenship of our city to cooperate in this great work of conserving both life and property by ridding their premises of all useless and worthless inflammable material.

"In order to make the work thorough, the city will remove all such material free of cost, if placed on the street on the days already scheduled for the removal of garbage in your respective wards and streets.

"I, therefore, designate the week of October 6 to 12 as fire prevention week in accordance with the proclamation of our President and our governor and to that end I ask your cooperation with our state insurance department and our city officials to see to it that all schools, churches, theaters, hospitals, public buildings, factories, stores and hotels be inspected to see that every safeguard against fire is provided, and that exit facilities are sufficient in case of fire.

"I, therefore, issue this proclamation and do set aside and designate October 6 to 12 as fire prevention week in the city of Asheville, and do urge our people to observe it in obedience to our national and state laws."

NATIONAL FIRE PREVENTION WEEK

October 3rd -- 9th

CITY OBSERVES NATIONAL FIRE PREVENT'N WEEK

Concerted Drive Made By Asheville Fire Department To Educate The Public In Methods Of Fire Prevention

Under the leadership of Chief Lon C. Duckett, of the Asheville Fire Department, Asheville beginning today, lasting through next Saturday, will observe National Fire Prevention Week.

The week in Asheville will be full of actitvities for the Asheville Fire Department which carries on an extensive campaign in educating the public in precautions against fires, both in business houses and homes.

The department has already distributed scores of Fire Prevention Week posters around town. Several special windows have been installed, the aid of civic clubs and the Asheville Chamber of Commerce has been enlisted in the publicity campaign; firemen will appear at schools in carrying on the campaign.

"Fire prevention," Chief Duckett declared, "is one of the simplest things to accomplish imaginable. It consists in nothing more nor less than the exercise of what should be ordinary human care in the handling of inflamables and the care of one's premises."

"Any normally intelligent person, if he wishes and will take the time, can write a set of rules covering fire prevention."

Throng Attends Funeral Rites For A. L. Duckett

Ashe-City 4/17/39

A. L. Duckett, veteran Asheville fire chief who died Friday night at his home on Brownwood avenue, rode out of central fire station for the last time yesterday afternoon when a funeral hearse bore his body to the First Presbyterian church where funeral services were conducted.

For four hours yesterday, the body of Chief Duckett lay in state at central station and an estimated 3,000 persons—white and negro, young and old, of all ranks in life—filed by the casket of the man who had served the Asheville fire department for more than 40 years.

Firemen formed a guard of honor at the casket during the period the body lay in state. Scores of those who passed by the casket went away crying. Some tried to suppress their tears, others made no effort to restrain themselves.

As the body was being taken from the fire station to the church, the old fire bell in the belfry of the city hall was tolled 61 times, once for each year of Chief Duckett's life. The fire bell was used for years in the old city hall to summon the firemen in the volunteer days. Chief Duckett had probably answered the bell more than any other man in Asheville

Burial was in Green Hills cemetery. A part of the cemetery was formerly the farm on which Chief Duckett was born and where he spent his childhood.

Chief Duckett's last departure from the fire station was not accompanied by the sounding of sirens or the racing of motors of the big trucks. Firemen with bowed heads moved in a body after the hearse that held their beloved former chief, following him even in death as they had done in life for many years. This was their final tribute to the man who had led them for many years. Also in the procession following the hearse were about 40 members of the old Asheville volunteer fire department who had served in the ranks with Chief Duckett.

Along the route from the fire station to the church, many persons stood with bared heads as the procession passed. On the way to the cemetery, the procession passed the West Asheville sub-station. The fire truck there had been pulled to the door of the station and firemen on duty there were lined up at attention in front of the truck. As the hearse passed the station, the firemen saluted their former chief.

At the church, firemen and policemen in uniform formed a lane through which the body was taken into the church. Members of the Lions club, of which Mr. Duckett was a member, served as honorary pallbearers.

Active Pallbearers

Active pallbearers were C. T. Johnson, E. M. Israel, S. G. Bernard, A. G. Barnett, Seth J. Perkinson, F. S. Sluder, F. H. Sherrill and Roy J. Johnson.

Fire chiefs and firemen from three states attended the services. Floral tributes were received from fire departments throughout this section.

The red car used by Chief Duckett prior to his illness led the procession. It was driven by a uniformed fireman and by his side were Chief Duckett's fireman's white coat and white helmet. The car was draped in black cloth.

The Rev. R. F. Campbell, pastor emeritus of the First Presbyterian church; the Rev. W. C. Cravner, rector of All Souls Episcopal church; and the Rev. T. A. Groce, of Candler, officiated at the services.

Mr. Cravner opened the service with the reading of the 23rd Psalm. This was followed with prayer. Dr. Campbell read the scriptures and then offered prayer. A male quartet composed of Emmett Davis, Frank Hill, Paul Craig and Hal Rickman, sang "Crossing the Bar." Mr. Davis sang a solo, "Beautiful Isle."

Mr. Groce described Chief Duckett as a good citizen, an excellent public servant, a good father and a good Christian.

"I intend to talk from my heart at this service just as if Chief Duckett was at my side with his hand on my shoulder," the pastor said. "Chief Duckett several months ago asked me to talk out of my heart at his funeral if I outlived him.

Flowers Indicate Esteem

"The floral tributes banked around his casket and the gathering here of his friends indicates the high esteem in which Chief Duckett was held. No wonder Asheville today mourns the passing of this Christian man. It takes the passing of a man to make a community fully appreciate what he has done. Chief Duckett's services will long be appreciated.

"If ever Asheville is a clean city, it will be when we have men like Chief Duckett. When a man is clean in his home you can trust him. We say most of the good things about a man after he has gone. What they need is encouragement during life, not flowers at death. Time after time Chief Duckett talked to me during his last illness about how he longed to get back to 'his boys' at the fire department. He said he especially missed the Sunday Bible class lessons conducted at central station.

"He gave his very best to the citizens of Asheville. He always was interested in the church and its work. I am happy to tell his widow and children that he has left our church but has gone to the church triumphant. He has left te city of Asheville but as gone to the city above. I am sure the men of his department will carry on."

Chief Duckett, who had been connected with the Asheville fire department for more than 40 years, served as chief for 19 years. He was retired about a year ago with the rank of inspector because of illness.

He is survived by his widow, the former Miss Gertrude Wiggins, of Robbinsville, and five children, Edwin, Margaret, Christine and A. L. Duckett, Jr., all of Asheville, and Mrs. E. D. Mitchell, of Johnson City, Tenn.

The following out-of-town fire chiefs and firemen and other officials of the state fire marshal's office were here for the funeral:

Out-Of-Town Firemen

Ashe-Times 4/17/39

Answering his final call and leaving for the last time the central fire station, Alonzo L. Duckett, 40 years a fireman and 19 years chief of the Asheville department, was honored yesterday by all who knew him and was buried in ground on which he was born. now Green Hills cemetery in West Asheville.

Chief Duckett, retired to the station of inspector of the Asheville fire department for about a year, due to ill health, died at his home, 106 Brownwood avenue, West Asheville, Friday night. His body lay in state for four hours yesterday, and more than 3,000 persons, black and white and from all ranks in life, filed by the casket in the truck room of central fire station, opposite city-county plaza.

Firemen Stand Guard

Forming a guard of honor, firemen of the department stood by the casket from 11 o'clock yesterday morning until 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Many persons were seen openly crying as they passed the bier of the man who saved Asheville much in money and human life in his consistent campaign against fire. The fire department was his very heart and all of his life he worked for it and its honor and development.

A tribute, heard by thousands of Asheville persons who were unable to attend the funeral in person, was the sounding of the old fire bell in the belfry of the city hall as the body was being taken from the fire station to the First Presbyterian church, where the funeral rites were conducted at 2:30 o'clock. The old bell was tolled 61 times—once for each year of the chief's life—and the soft though penetrating echoes were heard throughout all of the eastern and northern parts of the city. The 61 soft soundings of the old bell was spaced eight to 10 seconds apart and the general effect on the quiet Sunday afternoon atmosphere was soothing.

This old bell was used for years in the old city hall to summon the firemen in the volunteer company days. Chief Duckett had answered it perhaps more than any other man in Asheville.

As Chief Duckett's body was being borne from the fire station, firemen, with bowed heads, moved in a body behind the hearse. There were about 40 members of the old Asheville volunteer fire department, who served with Chief Duckett in the early days here, in the funeral cortege.

Along the route from the fire station to the church, many persons stood with bared heads as the procession passed. On the way to the cemetery, the procession passed the West Asheville sub-station. The fire truck there had been pulled to the door of the station and firemen on duty there were lined up at attention in front of the truck. As the hearse passed the station, the firemen saluted their former chief.

At the church, firemen and policemen in uniform formed a lane through which the body was taken into the church. Members of the Lions club, of which Mr. Duckett was a member, served as honorary pallbearers.

Active Pallbearers

Active pallbearers were C. T. Johnson, E. M. Israel, S. G. Bernard, A. G. Barnett, Seth J. Perkinson, F. S. Sluder, F. H. Sherrill and Roy J. Johnson.

Fire chiefs and firemen from three states attended the services. Floral tributes were received from fire departments throughout this section.

The red car used by Chief Duckett prior to his illness led the procession. It was driven by a uniformed fireman and by his side were Chief Duckett's fireman's white coat and white helmet. The car was draped in black cloth.

The Rev. R. F. Campbell, pastor emeritus of the First Presbyterian church, the Rev. W. C. Cravner, rector of All Souls Episcopal church, and the Rev. T. A. Groce, of Candler, officiated at the services.

Mr. Cravner opened the service with the reading of the 23rd Psalm. This was followed with prayer. Dr. Campbell read the scriptures and then offered prayer. A male quartet composed of Emmett Davis, Frank Hill, Paul Craig and Hal Rickman, sang "Crossing the Bar." Mr. Davis sang a solo, "Beautiful Isle."

Praises Dead Chief

Mr. Groce described Chief Duckett as a good citizen, an excellent public servant, a good father and a good Christian.

"I intend to talk from my heart at this service just as if Chief Duckett was at my side with his hand on my shoulder," the pastor said. "Chief Duckett several months ago asked me to talk out of my heart at his funeral if I outlived him.

"The floral tributes banked around his casket and the gathering here of his friends indicates the high esteem in which Chief Duckett was held. No wonder Asheville today mourns the passing of this Christian man. It takes the passing of a man to make a community fully appreciate what he has done. Chief Duckett's services will long be appreciated.

"If ever Asheville is a clean city, it will be when we have men like Chief Duckett. When a man is clean in his home you can trust him. We say most of the good things about a man after he has gone. What they need is encouragement during life, not flowers at death. Time after time Chief Duckett talked to me during his last illness about how he longed to get back to 'his boys' at the fire department. He said he especially missed the Sunday Bible class lessons conducted at central station.

"He gave his very best to the citizens of Asheville. He always was interested in the church and its work. I am happy to tell his widow and children that he has left our church but has gone to the church triumphant. He has left te city of Asheville but as gone to the city above. I am sure the men of his department will carry on."

Was Chief 19 Years

Chief Duckett, who had been connected with the Asheville fire department for more than 40 years, served as chief for 19 years. He was retired about a year ago with the rank of inspector because of illness.

He is survived by his widow, the former Miss Gertrude Wiggins, of Robbinsville, and five children. Edwin, Margaret, Christine and A. L. Duckett, Jr., all of Asheville, and Mrs. E. D. Mitchell, of Johnson City, Tenn.

The following out-of-town fire chiefs and firemen and other officials of the state fire marshal's office were here for the funeral:

Chief John H. Monroe, of Savannah, Ga.; P. H. Wamble and D. S. Waters, Savannah; Chief Bolick, Marion; Chief Donald, of Greenville, S. C., Assistant Chief Kay, E. H. Turner and J. E. Poole, of Greenville; Chief Miller of Concord and Ira Wilkson, of Concord; Chief Brown, of Winston-Salem, Assistant Chief Holmes, Lieutenant Beasley, and Lum Shore, of Winston-Salem; Chief Red Gaither, of Statesville, C. R. Sharp, Zeb Holcombe and B. A. Kimmons, of Statesville; Chief Taylor, of Kannapolis.

Others At Funeral

Sherwood Brockwell, state fire marshal, Raleigh; Chief Holland, Raleigh; Chief Shaw, Greensboro; Chief Ribet, of Valdese, and Assistant Chief Anderson and Charlie Smith, Valdese; Chief Hildebrand and Chief Westmoreland, Canton; Chief E. M. Salley, Enka; Charlie Robinson, and Alan Mitchell, Enka; Chief McLaughen, of Gastonia, John Ferris, Caldwell Baker and Charles Long, Gastonia; Chief Palmer and Mrs. Palmer, Charlotte; Assistant Chief Charles and family, Charlotte; R. G. Basinger, Floyd Rosich, W. W. Rhyne, C. T. McCall, Jack Hall and Mrs. Walter Black, Charlotte; J. S. McGee, Atlanta; Harry Whitner and A. G. Moser, Hickory.

Floral tributes were received from the following fire departments outside Asheville:

Greensboro, Charlotte, High Point, Greenville, S. C., Salisbury, Durham, Southeastern Underwriters association, Kanapolis, Marion, Wilmington, Asheboro, New Bern, Wilson, Farmville, Winston-Salem, Enka, Shelby, Lexington, Knoxville, Tenn., Valdese, Canton, Morganton, Morehead City, Rocky Mount, and Sales Biltmore Bleacheries Fire Department.

CHIEF DUCKETT

Probably no man who ever lived in Asheville was more a part of the city's life than former Fire Chief, A. L. Duckett. One of those ageless people who never date or grow old, he spanned the days from the volunteer handreel company to the present period of streamlined equipment so gracefully, that up to the time of his retirement last year, no one ever thought of him in terms of years. Ashe-City-Times

Indeed, so young was "the Chief" in spirit that his frequent visits to the city schools on such errands as fire drills, fire inspection, and fire prevention rallies were more in the nature of a picnic, so greatly did the children love and enjoy their hero. Santa Claus could have been no more welcome had he arrived in person. 4/16/39

But a genial nature did not mean slack performance. Chief Duckett has built the local fire fighting organization up to the point where it has long been known as one of the best in the State. A city whose houses are largely frame in construction and which burns soft coal in considerable quantity could but have offered a serious problem to its fire chief. Yet how well he has met that problem we have all had occasion to observe. The Asheville department has been the recipient of numerous awards in the National Fire Prevention Week contests sponsored by a group of insurance underwriters.

Yet Chief Duckett was never too busy to take his place in the town's civic life. As a well-loved and admired churchman, a Mason and a member of civic clubs and organizations he was hailed everywhere as the good comrade, the genial companion. While acting as President of the North Carolina State Fireman's Association but a few years ago he accomplished splendid work in the founding of the State Fire College and Drill School. Training young firemen in the arts of saving life and property was ever a thrilling adventure to him, and one in which he took pride.

The passing of such a man in these troubled times will leave a vacant place in Asheville's roster of useful citizens which will be difficult to fill. His friends and the public will long remember his willing service and charming manner.

Body Of Duckett Will Lie In State Sunday At Fire Department

Death Claims Retired Chief Who Served As Fireman For 40 Years.

Ashe-Times 4/15/39

The body of Alonzo L. Duckett, for more than 40 years a fireman here and for 19 years chief of the fire department, who died at 10:07 o'clock last night at his home, 106 Brownwood avenue, will lie in state from 11 o'clock tomorrow morning until 2 o'clock in the afternoon in the truck room of the central fire station facing the city-county plaza.

Chief Duckett, largely responsible for the highly accredited fire department equipment and personnel of the present day, had been ill for the past year or more, and had been confined to his bed with high blood pressure for about seven months. He had been in an unconscious state for several days prior to his death. Chief Duckett was retired several months ago with the rank of inspector of the fire department.

Department In Mourning

The entire department was in mourning today with heavy black crepe drapes over the doors of all department stations in the city.

The funeral rites will be conducted at 2:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at the First Presbyterian church. Ministers officiating will be Dr. R. F. Campbell, pastor emeritus of the church; the Rev. C. Grier Davis, pastor of the church; the Rev. E. Gibson Davis, of Spartanburg, S. C., former pastor of the First Baptist church here; and the Rev. J. B. Grice, pastor of Calvary Baptist church. Burial will be in Riverside cemetery.

Pallbearers: S. G. Bernard, G. M. Israel, A. G. Barnett, Seth J. Perkinson, C. P. Johnson, F. S. Sluder, F. H. Sherrill and Roy J. Johnson.

Chief's Car In Cortege

The body was taken from the Brownell-Dunn funeral home at noon today to the home, where it will remain until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, when it will be taken to the central station of the fire department to lie in state.

In the funeral cortege, the department will be represented by the chief's automobile. On the seat beside the driver will be the chief's white coat and helmet.

Quiet, Unassuming

Chief Duckett was of a quiet and unassuming nature. His deep sincerity and love for his work impressed all with whom he came in contact. On annual fire prevention drives and other fire department activities, the entire city gave him and his "boys of the department" wholehearted co-operation. He was loved and respected by aged residents and school children alike. Under his guidance, the fire department has come into nation wide notice through its fine record in curbing fire waste here. During last year—Chief Duckett's final months of activity with the department—the city won second honors in the Interchamber Fire Waste contest, sponsored throughout the nation in more than 600 cities by the chamber of commerce of the United States. The city has won several honors in this contest in recent years.

Chief Duckett became a member of the hand reel company situated in the West End community in 1895, and joined the Asheville volunteer fire department the following year. With the exception of a two-year period when he worked for the Southern Railway, he had been connected with the department continuously until the time of his death.

Chief Duckett saw the department grow from the original volunteer system with 15 alarm boxes and a small five-circuit board, to one of the most competent fire fighting organizations in the country, with the present system of 149 alarm boxes and a 20-circuit board.

Ridge section near Emma, he first attended school in a log cabin in what is now West Asheville. Upon finishing school at the age of 13 he worked at a variety of occupations.

First he was employed in a brickyard at Emma and later he became light trimmer, attending the city lights of Asheville. He next went with a contracting firm and then held numerous positions with the Carolina Power and Light company.

While with the power company he operated a street car, worked on the power lines, installed equipment and handled many other jobs. At the time he left the company's employ he was line foreman.

Chief Duckett became an employe of the city during the administration of D. Hiden Ramsey as commissioner of public safety. He was city electrician and served as assistant fire chief under James H. Wood at the same time.

On January 23, 1920, he was appointed chief of the department to succeed Mr. Wood. He retired on December 9, 1938, with the title of inspector.

He was largely responsible for the paid fire departments being put on full time in April, 1924, and during his administration the city purchased most of the modern fire-fighting equipment it has today. He took great pride in the city's fire alarm system and built it up to one of the finest in the state.

At its annual convention in Morehead City in 1926 Chief Duckett was elected president of the North Carolina State Firemen's association and served in that capacity four years. During the time he headed the association he founded the North Carolina fire college and drill school.

Chief Duckett was a member and past president of the southeastern division of the Municipal Signal association. He was also a member of First Presbyterian church, the Lions club, the International association of Fire Chiefs and the North Carolina State Firemen's association. He was a 32nd degree Mason.

Chief Duckett had few interests outside of the fire department and his home. Fishing was one of these, however, and almost yearly he visited Chief John Monroe, of the Savannah, Ga., fire department for an annual fishing trip.

The chief commanded the highest respect and confidence of his men, and was considered more of a fatherly adviser than a boss.

Chief Duckett and Miss Gertrude Wiggins, of Robbinsville, were married February 22, 1912. The widow and the following five children survive: Edwin Duckett, Miss Margaret Duckett, Miss Christine Duckett and A. L. Duckett, Jr., all of Asheville, and Mrs. E. D. Mitchell, of Johnson City, Tenn.

ALONZO L. DUCKETT 4/15/39

In the list of faithful public servants whose devoted labors for this city's welfare and advancement have been to them as meat and drink, the name of Chief Duckett will always stand high.

For two decades this kindly tempered fire-fighter labored to spread among Asheville's citizens the doctrine that fire-prevention is better than fire-extinguishing. And the national honors that have come to the Fire Department under "Lon" Duckett's administration are proof of his enthusiasm, his ability, his talent for inspiring co-operation among his men and among the people.

Popular with the personnel of the department, well known and esteemed throughout the city, this efficient fire-fighter and fire-preventer's name will live long in Asheville.

PORTRAITS OF THE PAST

Red Hoyle and Chief Duckett

In 1923, when James "Red" Hoyle (pictured, right) was 9 years old, he sold the state edition of the Asheville Citizen, shouting "X-tree! X-tree!" from his post at the northeast corner of Pack Square.

He became a favorite of the Asheville Fire Department, across the street. "They made me their mascot and got rid of the dog," Hoyle liked to joke.

Fireman Roy Fisher taught Red to play the ukulele and participate in square dances hosted at the fire department. Chief A.L. Duckett (pictured, left) established the first paid department staff around the time of this photo.

As a paperboy, Hoyle also got to know Charlie Parker at First Union Bank.

"If I ever get a break in life," little Red said to Parker, "would you loan me some money?" Parker said yes and, 20 years later, came through, lending Hoyle $3,000 to establish his own typewriter supply business, which evolved into Hoyle Office Supplies on North Market Street.

The business, now called Hoyle Office Solutions, is run by his children in an Arden location.

WHEN ASKED IF WORK HARD LAUGHS

Work Began in May and Home Will Be Finished by October

Mrs. Deborah Erwood, of West Asheville, is an exemplification of the new woman.

The new movement for women has released from convention the activities of the gentler species and enlarged her sphere of activities and usefulness.

Seventy-five years ago the grandparents and great-grandparents of the present generation, especially among those of the more genteel classes, were hemmed in by a host of things that mustn't be done.

In the ante-bellum days when slavery flourished and Southern chivalry was in flower, the women of the South did little work. Negro women did the washing, cooking, and housekeeping. Negro men worked in the fields and did the heavier work. The gentlemen of the households did the supervising and managing while the women lived lives of ease and spent their energies in social life and its gayeties.

The great war of sections came; slavery was abolished, and many large fortunes of plantation owers were swept away. The entire social system of the South underwent a profound change. This change had drastic effects, some of the results of which we are now seeing. The South is no longer primarily an agricultural section; industries are growing and expanding and commerce is gaining by leaps and bounds.

In this change that has come over the South woman has found herself affected. Business and industry find that there are many places where women can be used to advantage, and thousands of women have gone out into the highways of life to fight for and seek fortune and fame.

The social, industrial and commercial changes of the past several decades have had their counterpart in the new spirit of freedom. Woman has won her fight in this country for suffrage. Gradually she has been lessening the gulf that separates her from the freedom to do that man possesses. She has experimented with life outside the household, at first diffidently, then more boldly, and many a woman has found it to her liking.

Today, woman stands nearly but not quite on the threshold of full partnership with man. Whether she will go forward into such a relationship is for the future to unfold.

Asheville has many women who are doing the unusual. In West Asheville on Middlemont Avenue, of Horney Heights, is a lady who is doing something extremely unusual. It will be noted, however, that the thing she is doing is a new form of an old desire of woman to have a nest of her own. To state it baldly, she is building a house all by herself. It is no tiny house either; it is a large five-room and bath affair, made of stone and wood and it took good, hard labor and skill to build it.

A Citizen representative visited the place Friday and a number of pictures were taken showing Mrs. Erwood in her overalls at work on her new home, which she is building for her husband, C. W. Erwood, a painter, and herself. Her home is almost in the woods; it is surrounded on three sides by magnificent trees.

It was about the first of May last, that Mrs. Erwood began work on the house. She has worked steadily at the job ever since and has a large part of it complete. She does not observe the strictest

Asheville Citizen-Times,
August 16, 1925

of hours, however, for she has other work to do at her home, which is close by. Two years ago Mrs. Erwood built their present home, a three-room house of the bungalow type. Later came the desire for a large home and Mrs. Erwood decided she would built it herself while her husband was away during the day plying his trade of painter.

Mrs. Erwood frankly says that she didn't dig all the basement for her new house, though she dug a good portion of it. The work of building the house, however, she did by herself, with the exception of the wiring and plumbing, which must be done by licensed experts.

By October 1, Mr. and Mrs. Erwood hope to have everything ready for moving into the new home. When completed the house will present a lovely appearance; in its present appearance it is very attractive. It is of a rustic design, built of mountain stone and pine logs. A large stone chimney graces one side of the house. A wide porch in front is completed but for the steps. Inside the house much work must yet be done though rapid progress is being made.

The house is upon a good size lot which has a frontage of 100 feet and a depth of 150 feet. A stone wall, built by Mrs. Erwood, separates the front yard from the street. The yard has been smoothed over and there is an appearance of orderliness about the entire place, reminding one of a good housekeeper.

Mrs. Erwood figures that the house is being built about $1,000 cheaper than it could have been built, for if regular labor had been employed for its construction. As it is, the house will probably cost around $2,000.

Mrs. Erwood greatly enjoys working on the house. When questioned about it she gave modest answers. She loves her housework, but she has enjoyed building the house more than anything she has done in a long time. She laughs when one hints that the work is difficult and says that "it is easy." She has a lot of quiet confidence in herself that one admires in anyone.

Asheville's Joe Eblen steps down after 70 years as a sports official

ASHEVILLE — There weren't many men around in the early 1940s — most were in Europe and Asia saving the free world — when 16-year-old Joe Eblen was asked to help referee high school football games in Roane Co., Tenn.

He must have liked it.

For the next 70 years, the finest man I've ever met has been on the field, on the court, behind home plate, in the press box — wherever he has been needed to help young people.

At 86, Joe, the founder of Eblen Charities, which has provided thousands of Western North Carolina families with millions of dollars of aid in more than 20 years of service to the community, is finally stepping down as an official.

Wasn't his idea.

Joe, who quit working as an onfield official in 2001 and since then has run the game clock for football games at Asheville High, was ready to grab his walking stick, negotiate the small mountain of steps it takes to get to the AHS press box, and do the same job he has performed since FDR was kicking Nazi butt.

"They fired me," Joe said with a laugh earlier this week. "You would think they would want a guy with a little experience on the job."

A little experience? This guy may have invented the whistle.

Of course, there was no firing. With a little nudge from family and friends, Joe realized that perhaps it was time to step down and let some other, younger guy — maybe a retiree in his 60s — get his chance on the clock.

Joe was called into work as a referee as a high school student when young men were in short supply.

"We would trade some of our coaches and players to officiate," he said. "We would work their games and they would work ours.

After college, Joe came back to Asheville in 1948 and never left.

While continuing to work as an official in the late 40s and early 50s, Joe coached football, basketball and baseball for the Mighty Mites, a program that combined Hall Fletcher and David Millard junior highs.

Joe won more than 500 games in the three sports in 10 years of coaching.

As an official, he did it all — football, basetball, basketball, pro boxing at the old Civic Auditorium and even an NFL scrimmage when the Atlanta Falcons trained here in the mid-60s.

"The Falcons took all of us down to Buck's on Tunnel Road after the game for a big steak dinner," Joe recalled.

Joe estimates he's officiated between 14,000 and 15,000 games, in between raising a family, running a business (Biltmore Oil) and doing his legendary charity work.

They've named a school after Joe; they should name the city after him to say thanks for the philanthropic work that is second to none in the history of this area.

Ask if a player, team or game stands out, and he answers the only way you expect him to.

"They all stood out," he said. "A lot of good games, good kids, good coaches."

And that's why he did it.

All Joe knows is to serve, to figure out ways to help and then deflect the credit to others.

He formed a WNC officials association decades ago that still serves as the booking and planning agency for high school sports.

"I liked working with kids, and I liked doing my service to help the programs and athletics," he said.

Joe was at Asheville High last night to watch some football and receive an award for his long years of service.

How do you say thank you to a man who has made thousands of lives better, who worked all week and then gave his nights

Wasn't his idea.

Joe, who quit working as an onfield official in 2001 and since then has run the game clock for football games at Asheville High, was ready to grab his walking stick, negotiate the small mountain of steps it takes to get to the AHS press box, and do the same job he has performed since FDR was kicking Nazi butt.

Eblen Charities founder Joe Eblen is stepping down as a high school sports official after 70 years. ERIN BRETHAUER/ERIN BRETHAUER

"They fired me," Joe said with a laugh earlier this week. "You would think they would want a guy with a little experience on the job."

A little experience? This guy may have invented the whistle.

Of course, there was no firing. With a little nudge from family and friends, Joe realized that perhaps it was time to step down and let some other, younger guy — maybe a retiree in his 60s — get his chance on the clock.

Joe was called into work as a referee as a high school student when young men were in short supply.

"We would trade some of our coaches and players to officiate," he said. "We would work their games and they would work ours.

After college, Joe came back to Asheville in 1948 and never left.

While continuing to work as an official in the late 40s and early 50s, Joe coached football, basketball and baseball for the Mighty Mites, a program that combined Hall Fletcher and David Millard junior highs.

Joe won more than 500 games in the three sports in 10 years of coaching.

As an official, he did it all — football, basetball, basketball, pro boxing at the old Civic Auditorium and even an NFL scrimmage when the Atlanta Falcons trained here in the mid-60s.

"The Falcons took all of us down to Buck's on Tunnel Road after the game for a big steak dinner," Joe recalled.

Joe estimates he's officiated between 14,000 and 15,000 games, in between raising a family, running a business (Biltmore Oil) and doing his legendary charity work.

They've named a school after Joe; they should name the city after him to say thanks for the philanthropic work that is second to none in the history of this area.

Ask if a player, team or game stands out, and he answers the only way you expect him to.

"They all stood out," he said. "A lot of good games, good kids, good coaches."

And that's why he did it.

All Joe knows is to serve, to figure out ways to help and then deflect the credit to others.

He formed a WNC officials association decades ago that still serves as the booking and planning agency for high school sports.

"I liked working with kids, and I liked doing my service to help the programs and athletics," he said.

Joe was at Asheville High last night to watch some football and receive an award for his long years of service.

How do you say thank you to a man who has made thousands of lives better, who worked all week and then gave his nights and weekends for 70 years because he wanted to give more?

"It was a great ride for me," he said. "I enjoyed it all."

Thanks, Joe. There will never be another like you.

Workers finishing Eblen school

New building to open Dec. 19; Koontz to follow in January

By Julie Ball
jball@citizen-times.com

ASHEVILLE — With opening day three weeks away, workers were busy Monday installing carpeting, painting and putting finishing touches on the new Joe P. Eblen Intermediate School.

"The Eblen staff is so excited to see finishing touches and know that the date is drawing near," Eblen Principal Melanie Collins said following a media tour of the new facility Monday.

The fifth- and sixth-grade school, near West Buncombe Elementary in the Erwin district, was supposed to open at the start of this school year, but weather and other delays pushed back the opening date. Officials now hope to open the school Dec. 19.

A second intermediate school in the Roberson district, the Charles T. Koontz Intermediate School, is two- three weeks behind the Eblen school, said Mike Cox, with the design firm Architectural Design Studio. School officials hope that school will be ready to open Jan. 9.

Any contractor penalties for the delays won't be determined until after the schools are completed, officials have said.

Weather and the loss of subcontractors contributed to delays. Workers also had to replace plywood installed around the roof monitors with a fire-retardant plywood.

OPEN: Both new schools designed for energy efficiency

School officials expect to begin moving desks and other equipment into the new Eblen school on Monday. Teachers have been packing items, and the maintenance staff will be moving those items sometime next week, Collins said.

Moving the furniture and other equipment will take about two weeks, according to Tim Fierle, director of facilities and planning for Buncombe County Schools.

When the school opens, the Eblen school will house 860 fifth- and sixth-graders. The school's capacity is about 920, Fierle said.

The school was built with "flexible space" that can be converted for other uses if needed, Fierle said.

"Where this school will be challenged really is the itinerant teachers, the specialists who come in. That's where those flexible spaces come in real handy," Fierle said.

The school was also built to accommodate two four-classroom additions in the future, if needed. Based on enrollment projections, however, it's unlikely those will be needed in the near future.

School officials say they will likely need additional parking for staff. In the short term, they plan to share parking with neighboring West Buncombe Elementary, Fierle said.

Find a photo gallery of the Eblen school at CITIZEN-TIMES.com.

"We're going to be challenged for parking, again with the number of staff folks this school requires. We will need to address that," Fierle said.

Parents will drop off students at the front of the school, and buses will use a separate drop-off point at the back of the school.

The sixth-grade side of the school includes lockers, while the fifth-graders have cubbyholes inside their classrooms.

Classrooms, the main office and media center are on the upper level, while the gym, cafeteria, art, music and other enrichment classrooms are on the bottom level. Those classes have access to an outdoor amphitheater.

Both the Eblen and Koontz schools have features designed to cut down on energy costs. The school system is seeking green building certification known as LEED, for Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design, for the buildings. Solar panels that can be seen on the roof near the front of the Eblen school will heat water for use in the kitchen and some restrooms.

The school also uses a series of roof monitors that let in natural light. Sensors in classrooms turn off lights automatically if a room is empty for a certain period of time.

One large cistern on the Eblen site can collect 55,000 gallons of rainwater from the roof to use in irrigation. A second smaller cistern collects water from the gym roof to use on the school garden.

School officials say the school itself is designed as a "learning lab." It will include equipment that will allow students and teachers to monitor energy use and water collection.

Using recycled materials is also part of the effort to gain LEED certification. Evidence of that can be found near the front entrance of the school. Rocks from a wall on the site of the original Valley Springs school were reused at both schools. Workers also recycled concrete from a Henderson County school project as fill for a road base.

To cut down on materials used as well as maintenance, most of the floors are polished concrete.

And to enhance security, the front doors are closed after students are dropped off. To get inside the school, visitors must go through the main office.

The school will hold open house nights for parents and tours for students next month.

Fifth-graders will tour the school, and their parents can attend an open house Dec. 15. Sixth-graders and their parents will get a look at the school Dec. 16.

DOZENS AND DOZENS OF POINSETTIAS bloom in in the home of Mrs. Lulu Edens of 56 Fairfax Ave.

Poinsettias Really Bloom Under Mrs. Edens' Care

By GERTRUDE RAMSEY
Citizen Staff Writer

Mrs. Lulu Edens has a hobby based on love—love of people, love of flowers, and love of Christmas.

This hobby has filled her house with dozens of poinsettias, which again this Christmas are blooming in splendor.

For a number of years a nurse at Aston Park Hospital, she is known and loved by hundreds of persons who have either been patients under her care, or had loved ones in the hospital.

Many times they have remembered her by sending poinsettias to her at Christmas. She has saved each plant. Others in her collection are those she has rescued from being discarded by patients leaving the hospital, taken home and cared for.

This Christmas they are all blooming as the results of her "tender, loving care."

Gradually the hobby has taken over the entire sunroom at her home on Fairfax Avenue, and bids fair to spill over into every other sunny window. Florists praise her ability to coax the plants into such glorious bloom year after year. She gives each plant a rest after the holidays and brings them into new growth in the spring and summer. By careful watering, feeding and sunning, she has them ready to bloom again in mid-December.

She annually entertains the Ladies Aid of Emmanuel Lutheran Church during this season, when her house is filled with red, pink and white blossoms, and often the poinsettias are used in the church.

Use Creativity As Springboard, Ehle Challenges His Home Town

Ash. Cit. 4-24-61

By BRUCE GOURLAY
Citizen Staff Writer

John M. Ehle Jr., who may very well keep Asheville on the literary map, offers his home town, state and country the challenge to use creativity as the means for looking and moving ahead.

The author, who returned to his native city from Chapel Hill last week to lecture in Pack Memorial Public Library in observance of National Library Week, recalled one of the most widely quoted passages in the Bible, "In the beginning, God created . . ."

The first thing God did was to create, Ehle said. So should we.

Ehle, who wrote the novels "Move Over Mountain" and "Kingstree Island," told of a conversation he had recently on a train, with a pessimistically inclined resident of Western North Carolina. A reply to Ehle's inquiry about present-day Asheville follows:

"Just a smutty town sitting on the Blue Ridge. Lotta lazy people up there. Nothing going on. Good water there, best in the world in fact, but there's nothing to eat."

Though not true, "I hope," Ehle said, it's quite a different picture than what it used to be.

"Back in the twenties, Asheville had a great spirit of progress. Chamber of Commerce folders said they were building the 'greatest city in the world.' Right in the folders it said that. Go around Western North Carolina today and you miss that spirit. The crash of 1929 took the gumption out of the whole thing," he asserted.

The writer told his library audience the story of an enthusiastic soul who would repeatedly ask his barber, "What have you created since I last saw you?"

At last, even if only to keep him quiet, the barber began to take an interest in creating things.

"And do you know what happened?" Ehle asked, "Pretty soon he began to cut hair much better than before." The spirit caught on, spread, and pretty soon that place was a better, more creative town, he said.

Wouldn't it be nice if schools wouldn't tell children what they can't do and encourage them to try what might seem impossible at first? Ehle contended. As far as writing is concerned, he said, you have to first be a writer in order to be a great writer.

The colleges, Ehle contends, turn out those who can spell creativity, who know what the word means, but can't use it:

"Colleges are more interested in turning out scholars. Hundreds of people are graduating from colleges in the arts, but we're still waiting for their contributions. Our young artists are lost in learning.

"The creative spirit tends to get lost in facts. The time was when the world looked to the United States for ideas. Now they chuck rocks at us."

Ehle said he knew a fellow from Yugoslavia, who said there are from 700 to 1,000 African Negroes in Yugoslav colleges. Thousands more are in other Balkan and Russian universities.

"At the University of North Carolina" (where Ehle is assistant director of the Communications Center) "we boast of our one African Negro prince exchange student."

There's nothing in history which tells us how to correct this situation, Ehle said. The speaker made it clear he believes we'll have to think of a new way of accomplishing new problems and facing new situations. ("I'm more interested in the future than in the past").

Turning back to Asheville, Ehle continued, "There's a lot of good folk music around Asheville. The school systems ought to go to work on finding and developing another artist like Sibelius."

"The artist clarifies, exaggerates, intensifies. That's what Thomas Wolfe did. The world profits from this," Ehle stated. "Sometimes the artist returns to the world what the world doesn't want to see. And that's good," Ehle says.

John Ehle (pronounced E-lee), a quiet and polite, yet frank, speaker whose writing talent has been described as "great," "understanding" and "beautiful," started work as a writer at the age of 17 when he served as a staff writer and announcer for Radio Station WISE in Asheville.

As a student at Lee H. Edwards High School, he was winner of local, state and national speaking awards. His military career with the U. S. Army in Europe during World War II was highlighted by the ruling, with 11 buddies, of a Czech town, consisting of 75 German prisoners and 1,000 German civilians, for a six-day period.

Following completion of college at UNC and two years of teaching writing at New York University, Ehle returned to the Communications Center at Chapel Hill where he teaches play writing for radio, TV and motion pictures.

John Ehle Remembers Asheville

THE NEWS AND OBSERVER, RALEIGH, N. C
Sunday Morning, September 24, 1961

By CHARLES CRAVEN.

LION ON THE HEARTH. By John Ehle. Harper and Brothers, New York. $4.95.

Asheville has inspired, or maybe provoked, a considerable body of literature about itself. And John Ehle's new book is not the first and probably will not be the last.

The book has in it a family of the raw mountainsides, where living was traditionally hard, where people were taciturn, religious and suspicious and where young men like Kin Collins, its central character, have brooded by the hearth.

In Asheville's Mold.

The almost natural thing to do upon reading "Lion on the Hearth" is to compare it with the works of Thomas Wolfe, also an Asheville writer.

But such comparisons seem an injustice to Mr. Ehle He is his own man. He has written his own story. To be sure there are parallels with Wolfe. That is, Ehle writes of the same clay, the same landscapes. And the people are something of the people of an Asheville that perhaps cannot really be seen—or sensed—unless the reader has lived in that "mountain metropolis." Perhaps towns are made by the cast of their people. Or perhaps people are molded by the towns they live in.

John Ehle sat down to deliberately write a story involving Asheville and Asheville people. Wolfe did the same thing. Only in this way is the work of the two writers similar.

Ehle is a young writer, just coming to his middle thirties. That's one of the features that makes him exciting. He's like a new fighter with a good knockout record but not yet really tested.

A Family From Life.

The author has woven in this book the trials, tribulations, avarices, and hates of the family known as King. There was Lottie, the mother, who bore her fifth son in middle age, and Kin, Paul, Matthew and Collins. Johnny was the fifth. His mother wanted him to be a preacher. There was Beth, the gentle, lovely niece of Caleb. Adored by Kin and loved by Collins.

Paul had the family store—its sustenance—in his fist. Matthew drank and sported with women. Kin brooded and went to school. Beth married a Roman Catholic."

Collins King had been the traveler and adventurer in the family. Now at 39 he is about to take his last journey. His young brother, Kin, and his father, Caleb, have come from Asheville to his hospital bed in Raleigh to take him home.

They have made a somber train trip across the dreary landscape of the Piedmont to reach him. They face a somber return trip with a wasted body clinging only faintly to life.

Like Ghosts From Time.

The time is the time of the depression of 1929 and the '30s. The Asheville landscape moves through the pages like the familiar ghost of a town: "Shortly after ten o'clock, Kin took the streetcar at the Square and rode down Patton Avenue past the fancy stores where the nicely dressed women and the suit-clothed men shopped and worked. The wheels rolling on the track seemed to say, 'Collins, Collins.' And he thought, Collins with the soul of gold, coming home. Coming home. Coming home.

John Ehle

A Lore of Lyricism

"The streetcar turned left at the foot of Patton Avenue and slid and scraped its way down the steep hill to the river."

There is a certain lyricism in the book—in the sentences and in the story. And for the Asheville native, there is this intangible kind of fascination.

The city of Asheville and its people haven't seemed to be stamped any more indelibly than other towns in the State with the kind of lore that makes literature. Yet the town and its people have become the subjects of the very sensitive and lyrical writing—John Ehle's being among this writing.

The book turns pages of gayety, humor, pain and the depression.

There could be criticism of Caleb's altruistic outlook toward the depressed mountainside farmer in the depression. Perhaps this quality seems unlikely.

He was willing to sacrifice profits, to bring his holdings to the brink of disaster by helping these forlorn mountain men who straggled to his store to trade their pitiful green apples (hidden in the basket by a layer of ripe ones).

Pleasure Creeps In, Too.

Paul was the more believable: "They come creepin' in here from the valleys, begging leniency . . . Well, what produce company is giving us lenience. They won't even pay their bills, those that already ain't declared they're bankrupt. Where we going to sell all these God-damn hams you're buying. I never seen so many hams. We're—deep in hams in this store. . ."

You read this book with pleasure and anticipation of more to come.

John Ehle, a native of Asheville, is a teacher of script writing for TV, radio and motion pictures at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

CHOICE BOOKS

The greatest epic of our region is a six-novel sequence by John Ehle that begins with "The Land Breakers" and concludes with "The Widow's Trial." This summer and fall, WNC's Together We Read community reading program will engage thousands of people in the appreciation of one of those novels: "The Road," a fictionalization of the building of the railroad in these mountains.

Rob Neufeld

This marks the fourth year of the Together We Read program in Western North Carolina. Previous books have included Wilma Dykeman's "The French Broad"; Fred Chappell's "Brighten the Corner Where You Are"; and Horace Kephart's "Our Southern Highlanders. "The Road" was chosen through a public vote. It's a winner.

"The Road" won the Sir Walter Raleigh Award for North Carolina fiction in 1967 and shares that honor with four other Ehle works. It may yet be made into a motion picture, as has Ehle's "Winter People" and "The Journey of August King."

"When I worked for (Governor) Terry Sanford," Ehle recalls about his 1962-64 service, "I asked the State Library if they would mind finding out what their records showed about this mountain. They found ... investigations about why so many people were dying up there, being killed by disease and explosions and other things (during railroad construction) ... I had a lot of information ... about 'The Road,' and I started writing it. I just started at the bottom of the mountain."

Most of those who had died were African-American convicts, highlighting Ehle's unparalleled coverage of African-American history in mountain literature. The convicts' boss in "The Road" is Weatherby Wright, a conscience-ridden and progress-driven engineer. Like his grandfather, Mooney Wright, pioneer hero of "The Land Breakers," Weatherby has some prodigious land-breaking to do.

Q&A with John Ehle, author of 'The Road'

By Rob Neufeld
CITIZEN-TIMES CORRESPONDENT

Question: How did you come to write a novel about the railroad in Western North Carolina?

Answer: Let me see — what year was it I wrote that? About 40 years ago? (laughs)

I didn't choose the railroad as a topic, and I was surprised when (the publisher) put a railroad on the cover. It was more the story of this mountain and having to grade a road on it. The fact that it was a railroad meant that it couldn't have more than a 10 percent grade. The road starts at the bottom and has to go up through the mud cuts and the tunnels; and the climax of the book would come when it emerged at the top. And so it was a natural story.

Q: You were raised in the area — how did that shape your life?

A: I went to what had been called Lee Edwards High School; and I went to Asheville Biltmore Junior College. I was an announcer at WISE radio. At 18, I could have stayed on as an announcer and pretended that my work was a national necessity, but I wanted to join the Army (as an infantry rifleman in World War II) ... which was most unlike Asheville.

Q: Did you retain ties with Asheville?

A: I went back to visit. My parents lived in Asheville until they each passed away. They're buried in Arden, which is a little bit strange because they didn't live in Arden. All my brothers and sisters and I had already moved to somewhere else. We all had used to go for drives on Sunday afternoons out of West Asheville to see how the other people lived in Grove Park and Biltmore Forest and Lakeview Park. My parents aspired to living in one of them, and before they passed away, they lived in all three, one after the other. But they found, on one Sunday afternoon, this beautiful Episcopal cemetery up there in Arden. (They're names were) John Marsden and Gladys Starnes Ehle.

Q: What had led you to become a writer?

A: Bertha Hunt was a teacher at Asheville High School. She taught forensic speech. My grandmother and my mother, too, had the idea that I should be a minister and that I would have to be able to make speeches. So I was registered for the speech class. On the first day, Mrs. Hunt said, "We are now going to assign each of you to make a speech." She gave us the topic and even gave us some of the information, and on Monday I went in with my little speech. I'd never written anything as far as I can remember. And I became a writer thanks to Bertha Hunt. Because my speech went over with the people, and my next one, too, and we just followed along. And finally, after the war, when I got to Chapel Hill, I registered for writing courses. I took eight different writing courses as an undergraduate and graduate student. Was there a compulsion? I don't know. It just turned out to be something I could do well.

Q: What was your first speech about?

A: Ferdinand the Bull

Q: Where did your confidence come from?

A: (Mrs. Hunt) sometimes talked for 30 to 45 minutes about what had happened in class that day. She rarely said anything during the class sessions. If there was anything to be said about English — punctuation or prepositions — she would assign the subject to one of the students to come up and make a speech about it, which worked out just beautifully. And where was Bertha Hunt meanwhile? She had put her desk at the back of the room so that she could watch the students perform. Did she ever criticize anybody? Not to my knowledge. Did she ever tell them how to write a speech or make a speech? Not to my knowledge. She didn't even call the roll. She had a student call the roll. Never did I receive anything but encouragement. She had debate teams. She told us what the national topic was. We went to Kentucky, to Florida ... and we won. All those students who had had a lot of instruction, we beat 'em. So I became a writer thanks to Bertha Hunt and the teachers at Chapel Hill.

Q: What happened at Chapel Hill?

A: Having worked at WISE, when I got to Chapel Hill ... I asked Bill Clemmons (former principal at Asheville High School) what I should major in, and he said, "Why don't you major in radio?" So I did. I majored in radio, television, and motion pictures ... and took a master's degree in drama.

Q: How did radio drama lead to novel writing?

A: Paul Green (Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright and retired UNC professor) had been one of the consultants on a radio series I did called "American Adventure" — 26 half-hour plays. Paul said, "Are you going to keep writing radio plays or are you going to write a novel? I wrote a short story and sent it off to magazines. It did come back from one, and somebody had written "sorry" on the bottom. I didn't know if that was a critical comment, or if they were sorry they couldn't publish it. And Paul said, "Let me see it." I took it over to him and he said, "That will make a good first chapter. Now write the next two." And so I did, and he said, "That's fine. Now write an outline of the remainder." And I did and took it out there. He said, "That's fine. Now write it." (The result was "Move Over, Mountain.")

Rob Neufeld/SPECIAL TO THE CITIZEN-TIMES
John Ehle talks about old times, becoming a writer and how his book "The Road" came to pass.

Q: How much of "The Road" is documentation and how much is fiction?

A: A great deal of research was done. When I worked for Terry Sanford, when he was governor, I asked the State Library if they would mind finding out what their records showed about this mountain. I had a lot of information when I left Raleigh. But then friends of mine were arrested in the civil rights movement, and I was unable to do anything but write about them in a book called "The Free Men."

When that was finished, I had all this stuff about "The Road," and I started writing it. I just started at the bottom of the mountain. The prisoners were almost all black. The word would go out in eastern North Carolina that they needed more laborers for the railroad, and so they would find them — in the courtroom. It was too bad.

I wasn't sure about the women prisoners, and I must admit, I didn't have much evidence of that. Now, the story about the little boy getting into the contest about blowing up a chestnut tree: I just made that up. And the preacher at the end gives what I think is a very good sermon to the prisoners. The mountain girl, I'm afraid, was pretty much carried over from some kind of tradition.

Q: What are your thoughts about mountain women?

A: The only mountain lady I ever knew really well was my grandmother, Lily Starnes, who was perceptive and intelligent and used to write me letters. She read the newspaper every morning. She kept up with the politics of the day. She had (Franklin Delano) Roosevelt's picture in her bedroom sitting room — along with one of Jesus; and one of her husband, who had passed away. She lived in Emma. Her father was a dairyman.

Q: A lot of your fiction is based on good research. How do you do it?

A: I did a lot of research on the mountain people before writing "The Land Breakers" ... everything I could find. I made a card catalog, which I still have, and it is quite a large thing with different subjects ... bear hunting, women's work, men's work, farming, hog raising and so forth.

Q: That's an inspiration to students and writers. Do you have anything else you'd like to say to students?

A: If any schoolchild can think of a way I could have made "The Road" better, I'll certainly consider it.

Novelist John Ehle to be honored at WCU

CULLOWHEE — Novelist John Ehle, whose book "The Road" is being featured throughout Western North Carolina by the "Together We Read" program, will participate in a Western Carolina University celebration of his contributions to the region and the state on Wednesday.

The free celebration, at 7 p.m. in the Coulter Auditorium, includes a discussion about Ehle's work in fiction, film, drama, history and statesmanship, followed by a question-and-answer session.

Ehle, who grew up in Asheville, published his first novel, "Move Over Mountain," in 1957 and went on to publish 11 novels and six non-fiction books. He also wrote two screenplays and two movies, "The Journey of August King" and "The Winter People." Most of his fiction is set in the mountains of North Carolina.

For more information about the event, contact the English department at 227-7264.

The Journey of John Ehle

John Ehle: N.C. mountains shape author's work without confining it

John Ehle has had a life-long love affair with the North Carolina mountains _ the backdrop for most of his fiction, including "The Journey of August King."

~~~~~~~~~~~

John Ehle was born in Asheville in 1925 and grew up hearing mountain stories from mountain people.

His Aunt Lucy remembered many of the people who became characters in the novels of Thomas Wolfe, an Asheville native who was master at blending fantasy and fact.

But despite his early exposure to Appalachian stories, Ehle - whose 1971 novel, "The Journey of August King," has been rereleased and made into a movie out on video this month - didn't become seriously interested in writing until he reached high school.

"I started writing speeches in high school," he recalls, "and I learned to my astonishment that my first speech was successful. The topic was a movie, 'Ferdinand the Bull.'"

Always an avid reader - of Uncle Wiggly stories, the Bible, Dickens, anything he could get his hands on - Ehle traveled extensively with his high school debate team, from Kentucky to Florida, honing his writing and speaking skills as he went, beginning the long apprenticeship required of all successful writers.

Curiously, Thomas Wolfe was off-limits to him as a boy. "My mother had a copy of 'Look Homeward, Angel,'" Ehle says, "and I asked her if I could read it. She said, 'No, it's a dirty book.' So I did not read Thomas Wolfe at all until I was in my 40s. And then I read just about everything by him. He's an amazing writer."

After serving in the infantry late in World War II, both in Europe and Japan, Ehle earned a bachelor's degree in English at UNC-Chapel Hill in 1949. He then went to work at the university, writing documentary film scripts and radio plays while trying his hand at short fiction. He did not enjoy instantaneous success. One short story was returned by a New York publisher with a form-letter rejection and a terse, hand -written note: "Sorry."

But Ehle kept plugging. His friend Paul Green, the Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright, convinced Ehle that one of his rejected short stories was actually the first chapter of a novel. He persuaded Ehle to write two more chapters, then an outline.

Eventually it mushroomed into a novel and, with Green's help, got into the hands of an editor at William Morrow. It took that editor just 24 hours to make an offer on the book, the story of the travails of a black family in a fictional North Carolina town that sharply resembles Chapel Hill.

"Move Over, Mountain" was published in 1957 to excellent reviews. And John Ehle was on his way.

His second novel, "Kingstree Island," set on the North Carolina coast, was published two years later. Since then he has published nine more novels, most of them set in the North Carolina mountains, where Ehle feels most at home to this day.

' just felt more comfortable writing about people in the mountains than I felt writing about people in the Piedmont or on the coast," he says. "It was just more natural. Most of my books start with a place, then a person. The two have to be together. The place shapes the person. I think that's particularly true in the mountains (because) the mountains limit the action to what goes on in that valley. The mountains cup the action."

But Ehle has not allowed himself to become trapped by those mountains - or by a single literary form. He has written non-fiction books on wide-ranging topics, including the civil rights struggle in Chapel Hill in the early 1960s, the forced westward march of the Cherokee Indians, a biography of Frank Porter Graham, even an appreciation of the wines and cheeses of England and France, with ruminations on the abundant joys of Irish whiskey.

He also has taught writing in Chapel Hill, worked for the Ford Foundation in New York and served as a cultural adviser to Gov. Terry Sanford from 1962 to 1964. It was then that Ehle came up with the inspiration for the Governor's School, the N.C. School of the Arts and the nation's first statewide anti-poverty program, the N.C. Fund, all of which led Newsweek magazine to dub him a "one-man think tank."

"All of them were my babies," he says with evident pride. "It was fun to see them get developed."

Along the way Ehle has won a truckload of literary awards - including five Walter Raleigh Prizes for fiction and the N.C. Award for Literature - as well as several honorary degrees and countless kind words.

"I like just about everything John writes, especially his fiction," says Buzz Wyeth, who, as a young editor at Harper & Brothers, published Ehle's "Lion on the Hearth" in 1961, beginning a working relationship that lasted almost 20 years. Wyeth also edited "The Journey of August King."

"It was right in the tradition of the stories in his previous books - the mountain country, the mores and characters of that place," Wyeth says. "I thought it had a potential to appeal to a lot of readers."

Ehle appealed to Wyeth from the outset.

"I was sent as a young editor down to Chapel Hill to do some prospecting," Wyeth recalls. "Paul Green gave a dinner for me at the Carolina Inn, and one of the guests there that evening was John Ehle. After the dinner, John and I moseyed off and ended up killing most of a bottle of bourbon together. After that we were very close friends."

Marshall De Bruhl, a fellow Asheville native, edited Ehle's 1968 non-fiction book, "Trail of Tears: The Rise and Fall of the Cherokee Nation."

"What I wanted was to have a novelist's sensibility on a non-fiction book," says de Bruhl, then an editor at Doubleday's Anchor Books. "He really hit on the right approach to the story. Perhaps only a novelist would have hit on that - so my instincts were correct."

The book has sold a robust 180,000 copies over the past quarter century. After modest sales on his first three novels, his fourth, "The Land Breakers," was a main selection of the Literary Guild. It sold a stunning 120,000 hardback copies in Holland, which prompts Ehle to speculate, "I think they stuffed them in the dikes." Every one of his novels, except his debut, has come out in paperback as well as hardback.

"'August King' is one of my favorite books," de Bruhl adds. "I'm a Southerner. These people were anti-slavery, and that attracted me to the story. I'm a kind of sucker for the evocation of the mountains. They didn't mess up the film - they didn't make a big interracial love match, which would have been impossible in those days. I was very moved by the film. Jason Patric is terrific - whoever coached him with the accent did a great job."

Fred Chappell, an acclaimed writer who also grew up in the North Carolina mountains and now teaches at UNCG, says of "The Journey of August King": "It's a strong book, with fairly short scenes that move right along. It should translate very easily to the screen. It's very vivid. He knows what he's talking about - it's not phony stuff, but it's not dogged realism, either. He has a real streak of adventure and action that I've always admired."

Ehle and Chappell became acquainted in the early 1960s, when they were working in the civil rights movement in Chapel Hill and Durham, respectively.

"We go back a long ways together," Chappell says. "John was very instrumental in demonstrations. He was one of the people who helped keep the lid on the situation. The rural people were against civil rights - the town (of Chapel Hill) was, too, for that matter. He worked with the police, university officials, the NAACP, whoever was around. Everybody knew he was somebody sensible because passions were running pretty high."

Ehle's civil rights activism, like just about everything else he has done, led to a book. "The Free Men" is his 1965 account of the boycott of Chapel Hill businesses that refused to serve black people, a volatile subject that inspired strong feelings - "from high plaudits to near-absolute and sometimes bitter condemnation," according to the Greensboro Daily News.

Like many others familiar with Ehle's work, Chappell feels Ehle deserves a wider, national reputation but has been denied it because he has chosen to write about a specific place, those lilting North Carolina mountains.

"It's true that if you come from a specific place, then you're regarded as a regional writer," Chappell says. With a rueful chuckle, he adds, "If you come from New York, on the other hand, you're universal."

Of the remarkable people Ehle has met in his 70 years, Frank Porter Graham stands above all the others.

"He was a wonderful fellow, an absolute knockout," Ehle says of Graham, who served as president of the Consolidated University of North Carolina from 1932 to 1949, then in the U.S. Senate for two years, and finally as a mediator at the United Nations in the 1950s.

Ehle became acquainted with Graham in the late 1940s during his undergraduate years in Chapel Hill. Ehle visited Graham's home one Sunday afternoon - and promptly got into an argument about where N.C. Memorial Hospital should be built. Graham, naturally, favored Chapel Hill. Ehle thought Asheville or Charlotte would have been more suitable.

"Dr. Graham always liked people who had opinions - including people whose opinions didn't jibe with his own," Ehle says. "I'd always known I was going to write a book about Dr. Graham. He came up to me at a reception once and asked if I would consider writing a book about him. I left that out of the book because it was so out of character."

Ehle remembers Graham not as a self-promoter, but as "an outright genius," a tireless champion of the university, a defender of civil rights, freedom of speech and the working man.

The two men saw each other frequently in New York in the 1950s, when Ehle was working at the Ford Foundation and Graham was at the U.N. mediating India's and Pakistan's claims to Kashmir.

"It took an eternity to get from his office to lunch," Ehle recalls. "He seemed to know everybody. Guards, doormen, secretaries - they seemed to sparkle when he was around. I uncovered some wonderful stories about him. He would lend people money if they needed it. He would go to funerals up in Harlem, wherever."

And he would go to parties. Ehle particularly remembers the ones thrown by Al Lowenstein, a Chapel Hill grad who later became a virulent critic of the Vietnam War and was instrumental in driving Lyndon Johnson from the presidency.

"Al's idea of an hors d'oeuvres table for 150 people was a box of crackers and a quarter pound of cheese," Ehle says with a laugh. "At Al's parties, Dr. Graham would stand up in the middle of the room. He could talk, and he could listen. He was mostly interested in what you were doing and what he could do to help."

In 1967 Ehle married Rosemary Harris on the porch of his 19th-century cabin near Penland. An English actress acclaimed on both sides of the Atlantic, Harris has won a Tony Award, an Emmy, and an Academy Award nomination as Best Supporting Actress for her role as T.S. Eliot's mother-in-law in the 1995 feature film, "Tom and Viv." She recently finished filming "Death of a Salesman" for British television.

Ehle and Harris have one daughter, Jennifer. The 26-year-old actress is also in England, where she recently played Elizabeth Bennett in a six-hour BBC production of Jane Austen's "Pride and Prejudice." It won critical raves when it was shown this year on the Arts & Entertainment network.

Ehle recently visited his wife and daughter in England. "I told Jennifer at her 26th birthday party that I wish she had been twins," Ehle says. "I'd like to have two of her. Her career is a treasure to me."

Much as his own life has been a treasure.

"Yes, I have led a rich life," Ehle says. "There have been many facets to it. I've enjoyed every year of it - and most every day."

EARL WILSON ELLER

Earl Wilson Eller, city councilman of Asheville, head of the Asheville Packing company, and prominent American Legionnaire, was born in Tracey City, Tenn., July 11, 1893; but life as it really is lived began for him in September, 1917, when he enlisted in the 81st Infantry Division for World War I.

More than a year in the combat fields of France, and then the Armistice, with Earl Eller's regiment under heavy fire in the Meuse-Argonne. Earl doesn't like to talk about that. He doesn't like to remember that 12 men of his company were killed and 45 badly wounded that last morning of World War I. More than anything else, he hates to recall that his very best soldier buddy was killed that day, so uselessly and almost beside him.

But Earl Wilson Eller learned a lot from even the horrible days of that November twenty-five years ago. Above everything else, he learned to understand his fellow man; and it is this sympathetic understanding that is the major guiding force in almost everything Earl Eller does. It has made him an outstanding worker in the civic interests of Kiffin Rockwell post of the American Legion, to which Mr. Eller devotes much of his spare time. Until recently he has served in many capacities in the Legion and is at present a member of the executive committee of Kiffin Rockwell post.

Thomas N. Eller, father of Earl, moved to Asheville from Tennessee when Earl was nine years old. Mr. Eller was a machinist and round-house foreman for the Southern Railway. Earl completed his public school work in this city and then, following in the footsteps of his father, went to work with the Southern Railway. When World War I began, Earl was a railway fireman, and would have been exempted from military service; but Earl Eller is not one to permit himself to be exempted from doing what he feels to be his duty. He enlisted, even though he had married Miss Jo Zimmerman only three months before. The Ellers live at 2 Windsor Road, Lake View Park. They have one daughter, Margaret, popular student at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

After returning from France, Earl Eller went back to work for the railroad; but in 1921, under the rapid changing conditions following the war, he joined his father-in-law, F. Zimmerman, owner of the Asheville Packing company, and has been there since. Earl Wilson Eller learned the meat packing business the hard way, by doing every job in the establishment until he had mastered it. This in itself may account for the friendly, family-like impression a visitor gets at the Asheville Packing company, which Earl Eller has headed since 1936; Earl knows every job of every man in the place because he has done them all; so his understanding of the people who work for him is not based on theory; and his helpers know that Earl knows their problems.

Asked if the present war had increased his packing business as it has other lines, Earl grinned and replied with another question, "You know about rationing, don't you Tom? Well, we have it too." But then, Earl Eller never was a man to want to get rich quickly or otherwise. "All I want to do is make a comfortable living for my family, with some left over to share with the ones who have less." And this attitude he proves by always being one of the first to "kick in" when the Legion has some worthy cause to help.

Earl Wilson Eller belongs to the Rotary club, the American Legion, the Forty and Eight. He is a Baptist by faith. On Feb. 11, 1943, the City Council of Asheville elected him to fill the vacancy on the Council caused by the resignation of Mr. Howard Etheridge; and on May 13, 1943, Mr. Eller was continued in that important office by the vote of the people. With such men as Earl Eller seeing to Asheville's affairs, its citizens may rest assured that the business of the municipality is in good hands.

The Asheville Packing company, of which Mr. Eller is sole owner, is much like the man himself. Important, but not spectacular. It carries the unusual "Grade A" certificate of the State Health Department, under whose close supervision it operates, and that means the Asheville Packing company is clean even as its boss, Earl Wilson Eller, is a clean, fine man—inside and out.

Asheville Man, Active In Public Life, Has Reported Many Cases

MARSHALL, Feb. 13. (Special)—Arthur Emerson Eve, a rather diminutive man with iron grey hair and smiling blue eyes, who during the past 30 years or so has observed in the old courthouse of Madison, at Marshall, and elsewhere in Western North Carolina as much or more of the real drama of the law than any lawyer practicing in the same territory, is scheduled to return here on Washington's birthday anniversary, February 22, to report another session of the criminal court.

He is a real student of the law, the people and the courts, this man who has his home near Asheville, his "at home" office in that city, and his "traveling office" wherever duty may take him into the courtrooms of the various counties in the mountains. Many years ago he read law in an office in Brunsick, Georgia, and in that State he was admitted to the bar. He practiced his profession for four years in that beautiful sea coast town and then decided to become a court reporter.

Reported Famous Trials

Mr. Eve has reported many of the most sensational and famous murder trials in the history of Madison and other counties.

His notes, carefully filed away over a period of 30 years or more, tell in graphic form the verbatum language of witnesses and defendants the history of these legal battles out of which some men have emerged free while others have gone to te - penitentiary. He knows and counts as his friends, judges, attorneys, Superior Court clerks and citizens, numbering many hundreds in the counties of Madison, Transylvania, Henderson, Buncombe, Gaston, and others where he has gone to keep the records of evidence since many years ago. Many of the most important trials he has covered have taken place in Marshall, and for many years he has been a familiar figure here in the courtroom, on the streets and at the French Broad hotel where he makes his home when court is in session.

Mr. Eve was born in Washington county, Virginia, October 12, 1869, the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Eve. His father was a captain in the Confederate army, serving under General Winder, an aide to the famous and beloved Stonewall Jackson. When he was six months old his parents moved to Asheville to make their home so Mr. Eve tells his friends he is entirely a citizen of Buncombe county. His mother before her marriage was Miss Kate Emerson Reese, daughter of Dr. Joseph B. M. Reese, of Jefferson City, Tenn.

Excepting six years spent in Georgia and a brief absence in Washington, D. C., where at the age of 16 years he was a stenographer in the office of R. G. U. Drenfort, former commissioner of patents, he has lived in Buncombe county all his life.

Began Career Early

When he was 17, Mr. Eve returned from Washington and was employed as a stenographer in the offices of Glenn and West, who at that time were Asheville's largest insurance and real estate operators. In 1893 when a financial crash swept the city, he went to Atlanta and shortly afterwards went on to Brunswick where he was engaged by a law firm. In that office he read law and was later admitted to the bar. There he met William M. Toomer, then the official court reporter of the Brunswick circuit, and became interested in that profession. He substituted for Mr. Toomer and soon decided to follow the profession himself. Mr. Toomer was a nephew of Dr. A. Toomer Porter, of Asheville, a noted minister in the Episcopal church.

ARTHUR E. EVE

Returning to Asheville Mr. Eve became a full fledged court reporter. Later he branched off into other activities. During the administration of the late President Woodrow Wilson he was made a deputy collector of internal revenue and shortly afterwards was promoted to the position of deputy collector in charge of a division of 16 Western North Carolina counties. When Warren G. Harding was president in 1924, Mr. Eve was requested to retain his position. However, he resigned a year later, and opened an office in Asheville where he engaged in public tax work in advisory and other capacities, specializing in income, estate and inheritance taxes. He is still conducting this business. Also, for 12 years he has reported the Federal Trade commission hearings in Western North Carolina, Northern South Carolina, and North Georgia.

On June 15, 1910, he was married to Miss Myrtle McGehee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. L. McGehee, of Guilford, N. C. They have three sons, Arthur, a stenographer and office worker, Joseph, employed by the Publix-Bamford Theaters, both of Asheville, and Edward, who is in the United States Navy. Their home is in Riverside Heights, about three miles from Asheville.

Active In Public Life

Mr. Eve is a former vice president of the National Association of Shorthand Reporters and was responsible for the association meeting in Asheville in 1908. He is an elder in the Presbyterian church at Bingham Heights and has been a member of the church for more than 45 years. He has held many offices in the Sons of Confederate Veterans, his last commission from Richmond being for the position of First Assistant Adjutant General. He also is a former State inspector of the Sons of Confederate Veterans.

In addition to Mr. Eve's father, two other ancestors of the Eve family have unusual military records. These two men, both great-great grandfathers of Mrs. Eve, were killed in the Battle of Guilford Courthouse their serving under General Nathaniel Greene and are buried there. Memorials have been erected at both graves in this historic old cemetery.

Mr. Eve's father died on March 8, 1927, and is buried in Green Hill cemetery, West Asheville. He served with General Winder in General Stonewall Jackson's brigade until that famous leader passed "over the river under the shade of the Trees" to die after being shot by one of his own men, a tragic victim of an accident in the dark. He knew the habits of the famous Stonewall very intimately and recalled once that he saw him sketching with a stick on the ground plans for an important engagement.

Captain Eve was an ardent admirer of General Jackson and so is his son.

Mr. Eve said recently that he considered the Confederate leader a military genius and one of the greatest of the few real leaders of the world. Captain Eve was captured by the Union forces at the fall of Knoxville, one of the last engagements of the War Between the States.

At 62 Mr. Eve is active and youthful in spirit. His chief interests are his family and his work, also the many friends he has made during many years of work during "court weeks" throughout the mountains.

FAIRCHILD WINS IN RIFLE CLUB SHOOT

SECURES A POINT TOWARDS THE PRIZE RIFLE.

Interesting Shoot Takes Place on Asheville Rifle Club's Range.

The Score.

There was an interesting shoot held at the new grounds of the Asheville Rifle Club yesterday. There was a very high wind which prevented the scoring being up to the usual standard. Mr. George W. Fairchild made the highest score today, making one more with a good chance of winning the fine rifle offered by the Stevens Arm company to the man winning three shoots first.

Today's scores were as follows:

Name	1st	2d	Hdp.	Total
1. Fairchild	55	72	20	147
2. Brown	73	73	0	146
3. McCanless	63	76	6	145
4. Herren	53	67	21	141
5. Dr. E. B. Glenn	48	59	27	134
6. Bard	45	71	18	134
7. Badger	46	53	27	126
8. Stevens	55	42	27	124
9. Scullen	40	40	37	117
10 Wright	51	47	13	111
11 Bourne	13	38	37	88

Those who now have points to their credit are:

J. E. Stevens, 1.
H. L. Herren, 1.
Dr. D. E. Sevler, 1.
J. M. McCanless, 1.

A Useful Citizen

George W. Fairchild, who died last Thursday at the age of 89, was one of the builders of West Asheville in the years before that thriving suburb became a part of the city by annexation.

Born in Wilkes County and coming to Asheville in the early 1900s, Mr. Fairchild soon became known as a community worker in civic and church affairs.

Here is a partial list of his interests and activities in the three decades and more of his active life here:

He helped to organize and was a member of the first West Asheville volunteer fire department. He was manager of the Buckeye Waterworks, West Asheville's first utility of the kind. He opened the first automobile agency in the West Asheville community, with supplementary gasoline-pump service and garage. For 14 years he operated a general merchandise store on Haywood Road. He was a member of the first Rifle Club, winning numerous medals for marksmanship. (He made his own ammunition.) In his workshop near his home, the public soon learned that a needed gadget not available elsewhere would be found.

West Ashevillians will tell you that Mr. Fairchild was everybody's friend; and this means, they add, the children especially.

Boys of the Asheville School (now men) tell stories of their week-end visits to Asheville, with Mr. Fairchild the provider of transportation and disciplinarian enough to make some of them walk, on one occasion when a group of them became a little too frolicsome. Young Harvey Firestone and Edsel Ford were among his passengers in those days.

Such a life of community service and neighborly helpfulness as Mr. Fairchild's makes a community not only more progressive but more livable.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

MRS. GEORGE FAIRCHILD

Mrs. George Fairchild will turn a new page on her calendar of life tomorrow —she completes 91 years of living.

Widowed four years, she and her husband celebrated their 66th wedding anniversary five years ago.

She has been very active until just recently, and still does a little gardening and "putters around the place."

She lives at 14 State St., where one son, Jack L. Fairchild, also makes his home. A native of Candler, she has lived in Asheville more than 60 years.

Her family will help her celebrate the birthday tomorrow at her home.

She has nine children, Mrs. Metta Case; Mrs. W. H. Johnson, Mrs. O. C. Hodges, Mrs. Leroy Beaver, Jack and Roy D. Fairchild of Asheville; Mrs. Thomas Sileo of Morristown, N. J., Mrs. W. E. Dinterman of Miami, Fla., and L. F. Sadtler of Alexandria, Va.

There are also 15 grandchildren, 25 great-grandchildren, and eight great-great-grandchildren.

Mrs. Fairchild's love for flowers has characterized her whole life and made her loved by the many, many persons with whom she has shared them.

Her family tells that once, some years ago, she gave flowers daily to any neighbor or friend who wanted them and often to strangers who passed by and admired her garden. Once she was told that a man to whom she gave flowers at least once a week was in turn selling them, and her family urged her to charge him for the flowers which he was selling.

She was shocked at their suggestion. "It isn't right to sell flowers," she said firmly." I share them!"

Marshall Hall Fletcher, general practitioner (1885)

Marshall Hall Fletcher, beloved practitioner, graduated from Bellevue Medical College in New York. After practicing briefly with his father, he came to Asheville to practice surgery in 1885. Active in civic affairs, he originated the Board of Health to supervise all matters concerning the city's health. Service on that board came to be recognized as a sign of distinction for physicians. Forward looking in its rulings, the Board of Health carried near legislative authority. Its accomplishments and influence were immeasurable before the state government became active in public health. During the city's 1909 smallpox epidemic, there were 109 cases with four deaths reported. Dr. Fletcher, with three fellow physicians, conducted a house-to-house canvass, vaccinating all unvaccinated individuals.

For many years, Fletcher was chairman of the Asheville School Board. Hall Fletcher School in West Asheville is named in his honor. He served as chief of staff of Mission Hospital for twenty-two years, a record that today seems incredible. He relinquished that post in order to volunteer for military service in World War I. He was 59 years old. He served in Base Hospital #65 overseas. His health failed when he returned after the war, and he died in 1925 at his Haywood Street home. His daughter, Mrs. Lillian Smathers, became active in local affairs after Dr. Fletcher's death, and served on the board of Mission Hospital until its merger in 1951.

ALBERT FORTUNE RECALLS EARLY MALVERN HILLS

I had the great pleasure of speaking with Albert Fortune of School Rd recently about his recollections of the early days of Malvern Hills. Albert is an active 97-year-old. After he returned from WWII in 1947, he owned and operated Fortune Hardware which was on the corner of Haywood and Brevard Roads in West Asheville for several decades.

Albert and his wife, Lina, bought their property at 66 School Road in 1947 after seeing a "For Sale" sign tacked to a tree in the development that was still mostly wooded. All but a dozen or so lots were unsold at that time. Albert and Lina purchased 2 lots for $1,500 each.

Because building materials were scarce and expensive after the war, Albert harvested 13 tall pines along School Road for framing. Of 15 oak trees, he took down only 2 for the home site with the remaining oaks standing today as a reminder of the woods that were once Malvern Hills.

Albert first built a garage apartment to live in while building his home. Before the garage, he and Lina had no place to live so Mrs. O.E. Starnes, with a large house on Houghton Place, let them stay in the servants' quarters.

With no building blocks available in Asheville at that time, Albert leased a truck and drove to Bluefield, WV to haul 1,000 blocks back to School Road himself. All the masons Albert knew were still at war. A retired mason, Noah McDonald, came into the hardware store one day and Albert asked him if he'd lay the block. Noah agreed if Albert would mix the mortar and carry the blocks to him!

Albert and Lina raised a son, Larry, and a daughter, Marie, in that house. Lina taught at Vance Elementary for 35 years and died in 1990. Albert says he still loves Malvern Hills.

The original Malvern Hills property was acquired in the 1920s by Asheville School, planned as a development for the parents of Asheville School students. The development was extraordinarily well designed and surveyed for its time. Albert doesn't know of a single property line dispute in all these years. However, sales of lots did not meet the School's expectations and not more than 10 lots were developed before the stock market crash of 1929. After the crash, the development languished and Imperial Mortgage foreclosed on the property just before 1945.

The Malvern Hills development provided a glimpse into the now progressive use of underground utilities by putting power and phone lines in wooden tubes underground with manholes placed every 500 feet. Another nice touch was the ornamental street lights at intersections which stood until the 1930s. Unfortunately, vandals stole all the underground electric lines, pulling them out through the manholes when the price of copper soared during the War. Carolina Power and Light put in above ground power poles in 1944/45. Phone lines, sheathed in less expensive lead, remained in use underground until the 1950s when they were finally added to the poles.

The original plan for the Malvern Hills development called for a covenant that restricted building costs to a minimum of $3,000 on Arthur Rd and $4,000 for the rest of Malvern Hills. The covenant became obsolete during WWII. Building in Malvern Hills finally began to increase as men returned from the War.

In 1948, Albert and a group of 4 or 5 other residents created the Malvern Hills Community Club for the purpose of controlling the quality of construction. This is the origin of our present day Club. The members of the club approached new property owners in hopes of convincing them through friendly conversation, rather than resorting to covenants or legal measures, to build to a higher standard. Some of the homes being built were GI houses, simple box-like designs that were adaptable to a more decent structure. The Club was successful in its first project, and the new owners agreed to make improved modifications after speaking with the committee. As the community grew, the Malvern Hills Community Club expanded its role.

Malvern Hills continues to be a lovely part of Asheville with its diverse homes, old trees, sidewalks, and friendly neighbors. How wonderful to be able to hear about its origins from Albert. Living history!

THE NEWS PERSONALITY OF THE WEEK

Asheville News

By BERTHA W. HALEY

Mr. S. J. (Jack) Fortune, well known business man, and owner manager of the Ideal Paint and Hardware Company for 31 years on Haywood Road in West Asheville, retired from business in January, 1955, to as he put it "to take it easy."

Since his retirement Mr. Fortune continues to live fully and enjoy each day as it comes. And among his hobbies he is interested in his flower garden and fishing.

Mr. Fortune opened the Ideal Paint firm on Haywood Road in West Asheville back in the early 20's. And as this section continued to develop in business, he too continued to expand his firm. He first opened his store at 618 Haywood Road, and after that made several moves, each to larger quarters,—442 Haywood Road, and from there he occupied the building at 717 Haywood Road, and as business continued to grow he moved on to 727 Haywood Road where he continued until his retirement.

For the past ten years Mr. Fortune has been in active work with the Trinity Methodist Church in West Asheville. And among other activities he is a member of the Board of Stewards, member of the finance committee, etc.

And prior to his above church activities, Mr. Fortune was for years active with the Wesleyan Methodist Church, having served as superintendent of the Sunday School of that organization, and among other officse held those of trustee and active member with the board of Stewards. He is past treasurer of the North Carolina Wesleyan Methodist conference.

In a little chat over the telephone, Mr. Fortune told us a little bit about his wife, — his helpmate. She is the former Miss Callie Joe Lineberger from Rock Hill, South Carolina; educated at Spartanburg, South Carolina high school; Asheville Normal school, Asheville; and the University of California. Mr. and Mrs. Fortune were married June 3, 1930, and have one daughter, Beverley Joe, "married now," Mr. Fortune tells us, "and making her home in Haw Creek."

Down through the years Mr. Fortune has had two retreats: his country lodge in the Mills River section and the sea coast. At his country ranch he is known intimately and affectionately as "Jack," and while there he has among other constructive activities, "thought through various problems" and came away with sound solutions. And there he enjoys one of his hobbies, hunting with his friends.

His other hobby has been, and still is fishing on the sea coast of the Carolinas and in the Western North Carolina mountain streams. And for a number of years his fishing companions Messrs. W. A. Kilgo and J. H. Parris, and on occasion Mr. R. T. Cecil of the Cecil's Business College, went along.

Deeply interested in welfare works, Mr. Fortune is helpfully interested in the sick. He has been, for a number of years member of the board of directors of the Aston Park Hospital.

He is a member of the Optimist Club, and for a number of years was a member of the West Asheville Men's Club.

Mr. and Mrs. Fortune make their home at 40 Westwood Place in West Asheville.

BIDDING ADIEU to the life of a uniform policeman, W. Bruce Fox took a last look around the locker room at the police station where he logged 36 years of duty. Looking on as Fox hung up his uniform were Police Chief A. R. Sluder (center) and several of Fox' fellow officers.

Turns In Badge No. 1

Policeman W. Bruce Fox Winds Up 36-Year Career

By LEWIS W. GREEN
Citizen-Times Staff Writer

Badge No. 1 of the Asheville Police Department was turned in at the 7 a. m. change of shift Friday, and the harness came off for the last time for the man who had more years in uniform than any other person on the force.

And W. Bruce Fox, who lives at 76 Blue Ridge Ave. in West Asheville with his wife, looked back across a 36-year law enforcement career with his only regret that of having to take the uniform off.

Old timers in the department say, Fox, who was the epitome of a uniformed officer, was a policeman who didn't leave any enemies behind—either in the department or in the public, a rare thing for a man who has devoted his life to enforcing the law.

The old pro weathered many administrations and exhibited rare talents in his many years on the job.

His was a job out on the beats that for the most part goes unappreciated by the general public.

Fox, who was 60 Friday, signed on the force as a rookie in 1926 under Chief W. R. Messer.

"I didn't know whether I'd like it or not," the big Irishman said, "but the longer I stayed the more I knew I had to stay."

Outside of a few months with the vice squad, Fox stayed in the uniform division.

"Sure, a lot of people criticize the man on the beat when they don't realize the job that must be done, and what orders we have received, or what we might be running up against on any given assignment," he said.

In his years he has tusseled with too many drunks to remember.

"I remember the first white man I ever arrested, and the first colored man—they're both dead now, then after that it runs together in my memory," he said.

He said the two bigger cases he worked on that stand out were the murder of State Highway Patrolman Penn and the Cooper case on Montford Avenue some years back.

One of the constant situations he had to cope with, and that never failed to confound him, was someone wanting a man arrested in his own home without a warrant.

"People now are getting to realize that police can't do that. I think today people are more aware of their rights than ever before," he said.

When he first started, Fox said, there were only two cars in the department, both 1924 Chevrolet touring cars. One was used in West Asheville and one in the city.

Fox is grateful to his wife for her forbearance during his career. It takes a special kind of woman to understand about a policeman, he said. He married the former Miss Clara L. Hutchinson, daugher of Dr. W. G. Hutchinson of Hendersonville, in 1931.

"I couldn't ask for a better woman," he said.

Fox lived for a time during his childhood at the old Zeb Vance home, now a state historic site near Weaverville. His father owned the old place for many years.

Children have a special place in the towering, genial officer's heart. He related an incident when a group of children were playing under a lawn sprinkler, and as children will do, raised an unholy amount of noise. A woman in the neighborhood threatened to call the police.

"Oh, goody goody," chorused the joyous kids, unaware of the lady's larger implication, "we'll get to see Mr. Fox."

An Asheville policeman must exercise much more patience than in most other cities since it is largely a tourist town, and Fox was lauded by Chief A. R. Sluder and his other officers for his excellent manner in handling out-of-towners.

Chief Sluder praised Fox as a loyal public servant, and lauded him for his dependability and courage.

"I remember when Bruce stood toe-to-toe with an armed man who meant to shoot him and took the gun away from him," Sluder said. "He's lived up to the letter of the law, and what that badge stood for, Bruce stood for too."

And the men he's worked with over the years had nothing but praise for Fox's deportment as an officer.

Det. Sgt. R. D. Poore, who spent his first months on the force under Fox, said he was glad he had the old pro for a mentor.

Det. Sgt. H. F. Holland said it had been a pleasure to work with Fox, who could handle any unpleasant situation with sympathy, and Det. Sgt. C. R. Owen said Fox wore the uniform well and was a credit to the department.

"I'm a rookie compared to Bruce," said Asst. Chief J. C. Hall, who by no means is a novice. "I've always found him agreeable, dependable and affable. He gave the men who broke in under him good advice and training down through the years. He's a professional in every sense of the word."

Fox plans to fill his retirement days with his hobbies—gardening, fishing, hunting and baseball. "And I'll do some work," he said, "I just can't sit down and do nothing."

He and his wife are members of Calvary Baptist Church, but Fox said changing shifts had prevented him from participating in many church activities.

"It was just a job when I first came here," Fox said, "but now it's a specialized profession with a lot of training involved. You learn something every day."

He looked around Municipal Building, where he had spent the many years, and told his story with one short sentence.

"I've enjoyed it all, every bit of it."

FRANK, SURVIVOR OF PLANE CRASH, ARRIVES HOME

Lieutenant Was Serving On 'Iron Duke' With 3 Asheville Men

Four Asheville men were serving on the Liberator bomber, "Iron Duke," when it crashed into the North Sea February 17. Three of these men, Lt. L. M. (Mac) Duncan, S. Sgt. Edwin Joe and Sgt. Edward Jack Hensley were lost.

The fourth, Lt. Charles M. Frank, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Frank of 1062 Haywood road, has arrived at his home to spend a 30-day leave.

Overseas Seven Months

The lanky, soft-spoken lieutenant has been overseas with the eighth air force for seven months. For his overseas service, he holds the Air Medal with an Oak Leaf cluster and the European theater of operations ribbon with three battle stars.

Since the plane on which he was serving as co-pilot crashed, he flew one other mission with another bomber crew and served as a "fill in" at an eighth air force station in England before returning to the States.

"The cause of the crash of the 'Iron Duke' was later determined as ice on the ailerons," he said yesterday. "We were going out on a mission that day and the weather was very bad. We were flying at about 8,500 feet when the plane did not respond to the control and began losing altitude.

"Both 'Mac' and I wrestled with the controls on the way down. Just as soon as he saw it wasn't any use trying to right the ship, 'Mac,' who was pilot, gave the order to abandon the plane.

Gave Order To Bail Out

"I gave the order to bail out and waited until the others had time to jump. At about 2,000 feet, I bailed out. It was so foggy, there was no way of telling how many got clear of the plane before it crashed. Just after jumping, I saw three other chutes before a cloud cut off all vision."

After falling in the icy North Sea, Lt. Frank and three others were picked up by British minesweepers and were taken to England. Others who escaped were the bombardier, the navigator, and the engineer.

SGT. CHAS. FRANKLIN AWARDED SECOND AIR MEDAL, LEAF CLUSTER

Technical Sergeant Charles E. Franklin, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Franklin, Sr., of 20 Westwood place, West Asheville, has been awarded the Air Medal, and a bronze oak - leaf cluster for the Air Medal, by the Northwest African coastal air force, it was learned here today in a release from the army public relations office.

FRANKLIN

This is the second Air Medal award to be presented to Sgt. Franklin, the first having been awarded several months ago for "meritorious achievement" while participating in anti-submarine flights off the Atlantic coast of the United States in 1942. The operaair medal was given for participating in aerial operations as a bombardier in a B-24, in anti-submarine warfare against the enemy, since being stationed in Africa.

Holds Silver Star

In addition to these medals Sgt. Franklin was awarded the Silver Star award, while stationed in England, for extraordinary service.

He enlisted in the army November 7, 1940, and was sent to Jefferson Barracks, Mo., for training and then was transferred to Langley Field, Va. After war was declared by the United States, he was assigned to Mitchel Field, N. Y., for two months special training.

The September, 1942, issue of the American magazine carried a story on a United States army Flying Fortress, on which Sgt. Franklin was serving as bombardier, and the author described the ship as having sunk "more submarines than the censor will allow me to tell."

Describes Sinking

The magazine story described the sinking of one enemy submarine off the Atlantic coast by bombs released by Franklin, and told how members of the Fortress crew are trained in their work.

Sgt. Franklin was graduated from Lee Edwards high school in the class of 1937 and was employed by the American Enka corporation before volunteering for service.

His wife, the former Miss Mildred Reeves, and their small son, John Charles, are residing at 132 Ashefield avenue

I am writing as a follow-up to your e-mail of Tuesday, July 5, 2005 about the cost of the History of West Asheville CD.

Enclosed you will find my check for $12.50 to cover the cost of the CD and shipping & handling.

As I said in my e-mail to you, I have a copy of the CD and of newspaper coverage at the time of its release. My cousin, Mrs. Jack (Dorothy) Smith, lives in West Asheville at 37 Princeton Drive. She and her daughter (Barbara Felmet) sent me my copy of the CD-ROM produced by the History of West Asheville Project.

I would like for you to send the CD-ROM and related materials to

Mr. J. Kenneth Sanford
74 Fairway Ridge
Lake Wylie, SC 29710

We recently visited Ken and his wife (Judy), and I mentioned the CD-ROM and the project it reports. He was very interested, and I promised him that I would look into getting him a copy of the CD. When we were in high school, Ken lived out toward Enka and attended the Sand Hill School. Since I lived in West Asheville, I attended Lee H. Edward High School. Through our teen years, there was a remarkable group of young people at the West Asheville Baptist Church. Nane Starnes was then the pastor. In that group (all very active in church) were Betty Lou Winchester, Dale Ryan, Richard Barnett, Ken Sanford, Billy Garren, Bill Snyder, and K. T. Huffman. There may have been others that I just don't remember. All of these went off to college in 1949-1950 – All are dispersed around the country. Dick Barnett is an Emeritus Professor of History (Wake Forest); Dale Ryan is a retired Physician; Ken Sanford is a retired public relations man & journalist (UNC Charlotte); Billy Garren went to Clemson, I think, and I don't know where he is now. I am a Professor Emeritus of Political Science from the University of Evansville. Betty Lou Winchester married a journalist and now lives in Winston-Salem. K. T. Huffman has kept the family home at 20 Salola, but he is retired from the Washington, D. C. Police Department. Bill Snyder was going into the ministry, and I think he did, but I don't know where he is now.

Perhaps Ken will write to you about his memories of those good days at West Asheville Baptist Church.

Sincerely,

Don Freeman

Two Sons Are Visiting Mrs. Eva Ledbetter

Fullam Kirkpatrick

Staff Sgt. James Fullam and Sgt. Jesse Kirkpatrick, sons of Mrs. Eva Ledbetter of 184 Brucemont circle, are visiting their mother while home on furlough.

Staff Sgt. Fullam has been in the service for two years and is stationed at Camp Lee, Va., where he is a company mess sergeant. He is well known in Asheville, being a former member of the Cosmic club, and was employed by the American Enka corporation before enlisting. Fullam would like to see active duty somewhere at the front. He has been at Camp Lee ever since his enlistment and has moved only two blocks away from his original quarters. "I'll never get to the front at that rate," he said.

Sgt. Kirkpatrick, who enlisted at the same time, is in the air corps at Bryan, Texas, where he is serving with a ground crew squadron. He enlisted a month after graduating from Lee Edwards high school and believes that his chances of seeing action are good.

SPECIAL TO THE CITIZEN-TIMES

Asheville-born actress prepares to celebrate 50 years of the soap opera 'As the World Turns'

"As the World Turns" celebrates its 50th anniversary today with soap star and Asheville native Eileen Fulton still acting out conniving plot twists.

Born Margaret McLarty, Fulton has played Lisa Grimaldi for 46 years. She won the Lifetime Achievement Award from the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences in 2004. She also has starred in the Broadway production of "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?"

I reached Fulton on the set of the show and she took a half hour from her busy day to speak with me about her life as a star, her years lived in Asheville and what the future may hold for her famous character, Lisa Grimaldi.

She has a pleasant and soft voice, the teensiest trace of North Carolina still lingering in a few of her vowels. A graduate of Lee Edwards High School, now Asheville High, she lived in Western North Carolina for years. She also lived in Marion.

Here's how my interview with the once-scandalous, naughty-but-nice girl — known as the first bad-girl on TV — went:

SR: When did you realize you would become an actress?

Eileen: I knew I'd become a celebrity and entertainer from the time I was 2 years old. People would ask children what they wanted to be when they grew up and I immediately said,

SUSAN REINHARDT

srreinhardt@CITIZEN-TIMES.com

"I want to be a movie star."

SR: How many husbands have you had on the show, and who was your favorite?

Eileen (laughing): I've had eight, and Bob was my favorite because he was my first. Except in real life I'd like to forget my first.

SR: Is your character as busy now as when you first started in your career?

Eileen: Not really. I've recently been busy because we're getting ready to air this 50th anniversary show, which is not to be missed. Seven of us women, we take a bus and it's wrecked ... (this is when the soap shows famous scenes from past episodes). Lisa also has another nightclub storyline coming up, a charming storyline.

SR: When did you like the character of Lisa best?

Eileen: I liked her best in the beginning when she was naughty. I've done a lot of movies and plays. I'm an actor because I like to bring in a lot of different (characters) ... Lisa was a liar and conniver and she fell madly in love with a lot of people at a rapid pace.

SR: Kind of like Erica Kane? (Susan Lucci from "All My Children.")

Eileen: Erica came after me. Her character was fashioned after mine.

SR: I heard someone say you once refused to drop your dress on the show. Any truth to that?

Eileen: Oh, no. I DID drop my dress. I was wearing something from wardrobe I absolutely hated. I said, 'I will not wear this!' I took it off and walked off the set. I probably stepped on it and jumped up and down on it. I like to look right so I supply my own clothes.

SR: Do you have problems with your wardrobe now?

Eileen: The wardrobe department is great. But I'm hard to fit, long-legged and busty, so I have my clothes made for me.

SR: What are some of the favorite memories or things that happened over the years you've done on the show?

REINHARDT:

Eileen: I loved the time when I was forced to marry someone I hated and treated him like a dog ... One time, back when we were doing the show live, I caught the studio on fire making cherries jubilee. (Fulton said they'd rehearsed the scene and the dessert wouldn't flame, so come show time, they added some sort of igniting fuel to the recipe.)

Walter Cronkite was mad because his office was near our studio and he could smell the smoke.

SR: Were you ever killed off the show and brought back?

Eileen: Never was. They threatened to kill me off — it was over a difference of opinion, plus I quit three times "forever."

(The first time she quit was two years after she began the show).

I left for a year. Lisa was supposed to be raped repeatedly and lost her mind and was running down a dirt road but it was another actress. I was out by the pool like everyone does (in Hollywood). After two weeks when they said, 'Lisa take down your hands,' — they were covering her face — they announced 'The part of Lisa is now being played by Pamela King.'

Two other times I quit. (She believes she was just tired and needed a break.) I made some demands back in '83 and '84 I didn't get and so I did a lot of dinner theater.

One day when I was sitting by the pool reading the paper, I learned the character of Lisa was going to be killed off. I called the studio and said, 'Look, if you're going to kill her off, I'll come back and die.'

SR: Do you consider yourself a diva?

Eileen: Some have said I'm a diva, but no. I'm a fine actress. I think a diva is someone who's insecure and my demands have been related to my career (choices).

SR: Do you plan to retire any time soon?

Eileen (admitting she's 72): Not as long as the show is on. I love the show and the cast.

SR: Anything new and exciting coming up for Lisa or things you'd love for her character to do?

Eileen: Lisa owns this hotel and dress shop and the wonderful new nightclub called Crash. I hope she does something bad in the next few years. I think she should get rip-roaring drunk. Or go nuts.

SPECIAL TO THE CITIZEN-TIMES

Eileen Fulton, who plays Lisa Miller Hughes Eldridge Shea Colman McColl Mitchell Grimaldi Chedwyn on the CBS soap opera "AS the World Turns," is shown with her first husband on the show, Don Hastings, who plays Dr. Bob Hughes. Both Fulton and Hughes started on "As the World Turns" in 1960 — Fulton in May and Hastings in October. They remain on the show today in their original roles.

SR: How about two or three more of your favorite past storylines for Lisa?

Eileen: I liked the Willows story where Lisa runs away and goes to this inn and the handsome innkeeper thinks she looks just like his dead wife, Ruth. There's one room she couldn't go in, but she got the key and there's a portrait that looks very much like Lisa.

(Eileen said the makeup people fixed her up to look like a decomposed corpse of Ruth.)

SR: What are the most boring and exciting parts of your job?

Eileen: The most boring is it's hard work and it's in Brooklyn. The most exciting part is I'm recognized and can get club work (such as singing, one of her first loves).

SR: Do you get tired of being recognized and giving autographs?

Eileen: Out in public the people are very sweet and quite often say how much they enjoy my work. I never get tired of hearing that ... or giving autographs.

SR: That's very gracious of you.

Eileen: That's what I've been told.

SR: Do you have any plans to one day return to Asheville to live?

Eileen: No, I'll stay in New York. Asheville's beautiful, and I come back to visit about every year, but I love New York.

C-T Cameramen Win Press Awards

Two Asheville Citizen - Times photographers, Malcolm Gamble and June Glenn Jr., were signally honored last night when they were awarded first and second places respectively in the photographic contest conducted by the North Carolina Press Association. The awards for 1951 were presented at the annual banquet held at Duke University.

Gamble's first prize winner was "Still of the Night," photographed on Patton Avenue after midnight and shows B. J. Johnson, veteran street cleaner, pushing a lonely broom on the deserted thoroughfare.

This picture was carried as the featured shot for a full-page layout entitled "Asheville After Midnight." It has a strong atmospheric quality plus the ghostly quality associated with a practically deserted street.

The street flusher had just passed along Patton Avenue a few minutes before the picture was made and th wetness of the pavement tended to step up the contrast and enhance the value of the reflected lights.

Gamble's photos portray an Asheville from a bygone era

Visiting our past

A camera club that met in the Bledsoe Building in West Asheville in 1936 ushered Malcolm Gamble into a career as one of the most important photojournalists in Western North Carolina.

Rob Neufeld

One of his shutter-brothers was John E. Jones, city editor at the Asheville Times. Jones brought his protégé on board as a copy boy.

Gamble pulled tape off the teletype machine and got first news of Hitler's invasion of Poland when five bells announced the "flash" item. He also departed at a moment's notice to photograph "spot" news, emulating the heroes of newsreels and comics.

Only a few months after Jimmy Olson first headed out with Clark Kent, Gamble was called to action by Jones upon the hearing of an explosion at the quarry where Westgate Mall now stands. Handed a Speed Graphic camera, Gamble ran half a mile from Jones' house on Oakwood Street through pre-Patton Avenue woods to get to work.

Work, in that time of hard news with no qualms, meant snapping pictures of rescue men putting parts of bodies of African-American laborers into bags.

That December, Gamble went with a reporter, Doug Brookshire, to cover a strike by Asheville Mica Co. workers at their Swannanoa River plant. The eager newspapermen climbed atop a tobacco warehouse to view the picket line. A thrown bottle hit Brookshire in the face and busted his glasses. When Gamble went to photograph a woman warming herself by a streetside fire, a strike leader threatened him, evidently not possessed of the modern protester's penchant for publicity.

Picture the worlds of John Dos Passos, John Steinbeck and Carl Sandburg. Like Sandburg's Chicago, Asheville was a husky, brawling place of big shoulders.

There were some stories and photos that the newspaper withheld, despite the drama. As a reporter/photographer with the Citizen-Times in 1946, Gamble visited Mission Hospital to document accidents. There was a boy whose airborne car had smashed into a building. Gamble got the doctor's and then the boy's permission to photograph him. The young man struggled to a sitting position and smiled, "I'm just a publicity ham."

By the time Gamble got back to the office with his film, a pertinent piece of news had preceded him. The boy had died. The usually unblushing news business stepped aside for heartbreak.

When the 1950s emerged from the postwar years with a feeling of modernism, Asheville and Gamble retained their populist touch. Photographing two patricidal teenage boys in a rural jailhouse, Gamble mixed his chemicals in a Biltmore Ice Cream pan, and sent the resultant print line-by-line via a Graflarger attached to the jail's telephone connection.

In 1951, Gamble created a photo spread called "Asheville after Midnight." He found a street cleaner named B.J. Johnson working on Patton Avenue at 1:30 a.m. Gamble kept his shutter open for 15 seconds, while the street cleaner stood still and Gamble set off flashes. The photo won the North Carolina Press Association Award and has become a symbol of Gamble's Asheville of yore.

Photographer's works chronicle vibrant history in mountains

ASHEVILLE — He spent more than 40 years making photographs for the Asheville Citizen-Times, snapping pictures of mountain men and women and millionaire movie stars. But Malcolm Gamble never considered it work.

"It was more like a hobby," said Gamble, now 83 and retired for almost 20 years from the newspaper game. "I enjoyed meeting a lot of different people."

Today, more than two dozen of his photographs will go on display at the West Asheville Library, 942 Haywood Road. Gamble donated more than 6,000 images to the Asheville-Buncombe Library System — together they chronicle local history from the late 1930s through the mid-1980s. Since retiring, Gamble and his wife, Cybil, have traveled the world, and he still carries a camera everywhere. "I wouldn't be caught without one," he said.

pair of scissors. I could have killed that guy, but he thought it was very funny."

On-the-job training

In his early days with the paper, there were no full-time photographers, Gamble remembered. Pictures were shot by professionals, who then provided them to the papers. But finally, the Citizen and Times hired their first photographer, and Gamble became an assistant, "mixing chemicals" and he was eventually given duties as a reporter/photographer.

In 1942, just after the United States entered World War II, Gamble quickly joined the old U.S. Army Air Corps but was never sent overseas. At war's end, he returned to Asheville and, in 1947, rejoined the newspapers for the princely sum of $45 a week.

"The reason I switched finally to photography, I would get stories from people and the next day, they would say 'That's not the way I told you that.' And I got tired of hearing that. In those days, the story goes that pictures couldn't lie. Now, they do lie in many ways."

He remembers covering the big breaking stories, including a deadly quarry explosion near where the Westgate shopping center now stands. "Patton Avenue, where we know it now (near Bi-Lo, Kmart and other current landmarks) was not built — it was just a forest, and Louisiana Avenue was a dirt road. Word came that there had been an explosion at the quarry and they handed me a Speed Graphic, and I ran across country and shot pictures. "

Through the years, Gamble and other Citizen-Times photographers changed equipment, moving from the bulky Speed Graphics to Rolleiflex cameras to 35-millimeter models.

Today, Citizen-Times shooters use digital cameras, and Gamble has one, too.

"I hate digital, but I shoot it," he said. "I hate it because I don't know what's going on in there. With film, I knew it all."

At right, Malcolm Gamble won a North Carolina Press Association award for this 1951 image of a street cleaner on Patton Avenue. The picture was shot at the corner of Patton Avenue and Church Street, just in front of the Drhumor Building. The Imperial Theatre seen in this image is long gone — the location is now a parking lot and the Eckerd drug store is the current home of the Stella Blue nightclub.

Malcolm Gamble made thousands of images during his long career at the Asheville Citizen-Times. Though he photographed movie stars and presidents, he also found inspiration in the mountain men and women living around the region. Gamble said the best part about working at the newspaper was "meeting a lot of different people."

ASHEVILLE — Back in 1937, Malcolm Gamble walked into the decrepit old offices of the Asheville Citizen and Asheville Times to start work as a copy boy. Who would know that it would change his life forever?

"I was paid $7 a week," he said. "I was 15 or 16, very young. My job was to pull stuff off from the AP wire when it came in. I worked in the library, I did a little bit of everything."

Gamble stayed with it, moving into the job of reporter, then photographer. Except for duty during World War II and a few years after, he worked for the newspapers until 1986, shooting thousands of photographs, from mountaineers to beauty queens, the poor and the presidents (Reagan, Nixon and George H.W. Ewart Ball/STAFF PHOTOGRAPH

Malcolm Gamble spent a lifetime making photographs in Western North Carolina — and though he retired from the Asheville Citizen-Times almost 20 years ago, he has continued carrying a camera in his travels around the world. Gamble began working for the Asheville Citizen and the Asheville Times in 1937 (they were then separate papers), and during his long career he photographed everyone from American presidents to pageant contestants, shown above.

Long retired, but still active and youthful, and always traveling somewhere with his wife, Cybil, Gamble's work has never been collected for a show — until now. Starting today, about 30 of his photographs go on display at the West Asheville Library on Haywood Road. He gave the library 6,000 of his old negatives, from which this show was assembled. "They have four or five of my good ones," he modestly said.

Days of typewriters, copy boys

Gamble, now 83 and an Asheville native, learned photo journalism the old-fashioned way, hitting the street with his old Speed Graphic camera and looking for a picture, no matter what it took, then dashing back to the newspaper at breakneck speed to make deadline.

In 1937, radio was still new in Asheville, television was decades away, and the morning Asheville Citizen and afternoon Asheville Times were fiercely competing daily papers, located at 25 Haywood St., in the spot now occupied by the Woolworth Walk art gallery.

"When the press ran, (the building) would move a foot from the vibration," he said. "That building was incredible. The newsroom was up on the second floor. Going down to the press was a steep, steep set of stairs and no railing. It was interesting going down those stairs when the press was running."

The newsroom was populated by eccentric and colorful characters who enjoyed stunts and practical jokes and some who overenjoyed the use of alcohol, he said.

In 1939, the newspaper moved into his modern new art deco offices, just around the corner at 14 O.Henry Ave., where it still operates today. Gamble and other staffers such as retired women's page editor Mary Ellen Wolcott carried their typewriters and equipment into the new space.

"We had fun, and we played a lot of tricks, but we did our job," she said. "We had a guy who worked the telegraph desk, and every morning you'd come in, and he'd cut your tie off with a

H. Malcolm Gamble was born at 21 Bartlett St. in Asheville, North Carolina, April 19, 1921. He was the 3rd child of Thomas Austin Gamble and Thelma Michael Gamble. His father managed a variety store, and the family moved often in Malcolm's younger years. He began school in Danville, Virginia. The family later moved to Texas for a while. "I thought 'The Eyes of Texas' was the national anthem!" Malcolm remembers. Returning to Asheville, he attended the old Murray School, and then Grace High School. Well-known Asheville educator Ira B. Jones (for whom Ira B. Jones Elementary School is named) was principal of Grace HS at that time. "At lunchtime he used to loan us his Oldsmobile to go downtown to get something to eat," Malcolm says. "You could do that in those days!"

Malcolm's Favorite Joke:

A young couple's favorite entertainment was to go to the airfield and watch the planes take off and land. The man said to his wife, "Honey, I sure would like to go up in a plane." But a flight cost money, and they were saving for a house. His wife said, "Ten dollars is ten dollars."

They bought a house and raised a family. They still went to watch the planes. Sometimes the man would say, "Honey, I'd really love to go up in a plane one time." But they had the children to educate, and then they were saving for retirement, so his wife always said, "Ten dollars is ten dollars."

Finally, the house was paid for. The children were educated. They had a comfortable retirement. One day they were out at the airfield and a pilot stopped to talk.

The old man said, "I've been coming to this airfield for 60 years, and I've never been up in a plane."

"60 years and you've never been up in a plane?! Why not?" the pilot asked.

"Well," said the wife, "Ten dollars is ten dollars."

"Listen," said the pilot. "I'll take you up in my plane, and if you won't say a word while we're in the air, I won't charge you anything. But if you talk, you'll have to pay the ten dollars."

The couple got in the plane and the pilot took off. They flew around a while and there wasn't a word out of the old couple. The pilot banked the plane to the right and then to the left; still not a sound out of his passengers. So he did some loops and rolls; silence from the back of the plane.

So the pilot landed, and turned to help the old man and his wife, but he didn't see the wife anywhere. "Where's your wife?" he asked.

"She fell out." the old man said.

"Why didn't you tell me?!" demanded the pilot.

"Well," said the old man, "Ten dollars is ten dollars."

MY TOWN, MY TIMES
H. Malcolm Gamble Talks about His Career in News Photography

H. Malcolm Gamble's news photography of the 1950s and early 1960s reflects the focus of a hometown newspaper in that era. In 1950, Asheville, North Carolina, population 53,000, was Western North Carolina's largest urban center. WLOS-TV was a fledgling television station then, and many people did not even own a television set., and radio coverage of local news was slim. Most still got the news from a local newspaper. The Asheville Citizen (in the morning) and the Asheville Times (afternoon) were the region's major daily papers. They were delivered to urban homes by legions of "paper boys", and to rural subscribers by US Mail. Located in a new, modern building at 14 O. Henry Avenue in downtown Asheville, with a combined circulation in the thousands, and dual editions (city and state) of both papers, the 80-year old newspaper could rightly claim to be "The Voice of the Mountains".

Gamble himself started as a delivery boy for the Times on a West Asheville route, and later worked as a copy boy and a reporter before turning to news photography. Recalling the switch, Gamble says, "I was a reporter for a while. I would write a story one day, and the next day I'd get a call from a politician saying, 'You didn't get that right.' After that happened a few times, I decided to be a photographer, because in those days, a photograph didn't lie!"

As a staff photographer, Gamble began his day with an "assignment card" prepared by the editors, detailing the 6 or 7 pictures the editors wanted for the next edition. "Dick Wynne used to say, 'This (assignment) is not much. But we need a picture. See what you can make of it.' That was a great attitude—he knew what we were up against on some of those assignments." Shooting in black and white (using a Speed-Graphic for years, then a Rolleiflex, later a Leica and finally a Nikon), he went after the day's quota of photographs. "The Asheville Citizen-Times bought the cameras for you: most papers didn't. When I first went to work for the paper they had three Graphics. I was low man on the totem pole, and I got the one that the range finder wouldn't work. For at least a year, I shot 'guess' focus, on a 5 1/4 inch lens, and that's doing pretty good!" Returning to the office, he developed and printed his shots. Photographers took the pictures, but editors decided where to run them and how many columns they would get. "They never ran the pictures big enough to suit us!" he says ruefully. "Ask any photographer: BIGGER is better! The editors had the final say, but that didn't keep us from telling them what we thought!"

Typical assignments included the police and Court House beat, hospitals and schools, civic clubs, celebrities, political, social, and sporting events, and conventions, weather events and nature scenes, fires, wrecks, and new construction. "When I started, most of us didn't own a car, so the paper would give us taxi tickets—usually Blue Bird. Often there wasn't much time between events—we really had to hustle to get everything in before the deadline. We went after a lot more hard news photographs in those days," Malcolm remembers. "They always wanted pictures of wrecks—train wrecks and plane crashes especially were a big deal. They would send us out to get pictures of any new building. And whenever it snowed, the editors wanted a picture for the morning paper."

In addition to coping with the daily time constraints, photographers dealt with a large cross-section of the public day in and day out.. Most people were nice, but there were some challenges. "I was making a picture at the old Battery Park, and there was this couple that obviously reeked of money—you've seen the type. I'm setting them up, bringing them close together—you know, maybe him across her shoulder, something like that. I was on a deadline, and had to hurry. This woman says, 'Well, young man, that's not the way the New York Times would do it.' And I said, 'Well, this is not the New York Times, this is the Asheville Times!"

Aviation, an early interest, was a strong element through most of Gamble's career. After the war, the availability of local flying services made possible on-the-spot coverage of events throughout the region. Aerial photography documented the changing face of Western North Carolina, and offered dramatic new perspectives on familiar places. It was popular with the public, and Gamble frequently received aerial assignments. Flying out of the Asheville-Hendersonville Airport or the Emma Airfield, often with pilot Lacey Griffin at the controls, he spent hours in the air on his way to events or snapping bird's-eye views of Asheville area. "I loved flying." he says. But there were some close calls.

"Once when the French Broad River flooded, Earl Freeman (a reporter) and I decided to get some pictures. He was also a pilot for the Civil Air Patrol, which kept a plane at the Emma Airfield. The fuel pumps at Emma were kept locked when the manager wasn't there, which was most of the time. We got out there, and Earl checked the fuel level in the plane with a stick. When he pulled it out, there was nothing on it! We couldn't get any fuel— everything was locked up tight. Earl said, 'We'll just fly to Hendersonville and get some gas there.' So we took off, and I shot some pictures along the way. We got there, and it was under water!' Earl looked at me with his eyes big as saucers and said, 'Well, if I can get this thing up to 10,000 feet, I can glide into Emma!' And that's what we did."

Gamble's professional career took off in the 1950s. In 1951, his photograph of an Asheville street sweeper was awarded first place by the Carolina Press Photographers Association, and in 1954 the Association named him Photographer of the Year for North and South Carolina. "The award was given on the basis of a portfolio of work. I included a photo of a cow falling off a cliff—it was a really incredible shot, until you knew the story. The cow had gotten hung up over the high bank there where Westgate is now. They finally had to shoot her, and she fell. When I told the judges how I made the shot, one of them said, 'If I had known that, I wouldn't have voted for you!' But it was too late then!"

The news-heavy 1960s were a time of transition for the Citizen and Times, as ownership passed out of local hands for the first time. "I was sorry to see local ownership end. We did our assignments the same way, but there was more editorializing in the content." People were increasingly interested in national and world news, but there was still plenty of local news to cover, and Gamble, noted for speed behind the wheel, was often first on the scene. "There were some people who wouldn't ride with me. Claude Ramsey rode with me to a bank robbery in North Asheville in the 60s," he recalls. "I guess I might have burned a little rubber getting there. Anyway, he took a taxi back!"

By the early 1970s, news photographers were using 35 mm cameras—usually Nikons—which were smaller and easier to carry around, and considerably cheaper on film. They offered virtually unlimited shooting. But less was riding on the individual photographer's skill and judgment. "One time we were down at Chapel Hill covering a football game. Some photographers from LIFE magazine were there. They took 100,000 shots that afternoon—the magazine ran 3. I call that machine-gunning. I told them, 'My 6-year old daughter could shoot like that and get something sensational!'"

Gamble officially retired from the paper in 1986, but he continued to work part-time for another couple of years. Thinking back to the early decades of his career, he says, "I've known and worked with so many good photographers: Ewart Ball, Jr., Ewart Ball III, Frank Clodfelter, Allen Culbertson, Earl Freeman, June Glenn, Don Hunter, Dick Mauldin, Hugh Morton, Robert Putnam, Bill Sanders, Bill Warren, Juanita Wilson, and so many more. We started out together, taking black and whites. Shot 'em ourselves, developed 'em ourselves, printed 'em ourselves. We taught each other. The whole key was the Truth. There was no embellishment, no 'spin'. News photography is 1/2 photographic skill and 1/2 dealing with people. I liked people and I liked the work. I had a career that was almost more of a hobby."

Asked if he misses the work, Gamble replies: "You know what I really miss? I've missed meeting the people, more than anything else."

H. Malcolm Gamble
Biography

H. Malcolm Gamble early in his career.

H. Malcolm Gamble was born at 21 Bartlett St. in Asheville, North Carolina, on April 19, 1921. He was the third child of Thomas Austin Gamble and Thelma Michael Gamble. His father managed a variety store, and the family moved often in Malcolm's younger years. When they returned to Asheville, Malcolm attended the old Murray Hill Elementary School and then Grace High School.

While living on Majestic Avenue in West Asheville, Malcolm began working a West Asheville paper route delivering the Asheville Times. With his earnings, he bought his first camera, a Speed-Graphic. In his senior year, he took a job as a copy boy at the Citizen, earning $7 a week. About the same time, he joined with young local photographers Johnny Jones, Roger Deloach, and Charles Mills to run a small studio in the Bledsoe Building on Haywood Rd. "We did all our own developing. Johnny would buy a box of photographic paper, and we would put a dime in the box for every sheet we used."

Graduating from Grace High School in 1937, Malcolm worked for the paper until he joined the Air Force in early 1942. On February 17, 1942, he married Rosemary Putnam in Spartanburg, South Carolina. In the service, he trained as a gunnery instructor for the Air Force, and became head of a gunnery school in Arizona. He later served as a flight instructor. After the war, the Gambles returned to Asheville. In 1947, a call from old friend (and later City Editor) Johnny Jones brought him back to the Asheville Citizen-Times, for a weekly paycheck of $45 a week. "Pretty good pay in those days!" he remarks.

The 1950s and 1960s were busy times. Malcolm and Rosemary bought a home on Shepherd Drive, just off the Leicester Highway, and settled down to raise their children, H.M. "Mickey", Jr., Robert, and Sue Ellen. Malcolm's photographs received recognition: He won numerous awards throughout the period, and in 1954 the Carolina Press Photographers Association named him Photographer of the Year for North and South Carolina. Papers such as the Charlotte Observer and the Atlanta Constitution sought to lure him away from Asheville, but failed. "This was where I wanted to raise my family," he says.

In the 1970s and 1980s, Malcolm, now an old hand in the business, continued to shoot the news across Western North Carolina as 35 mm cameras and then computers began to alter news journalism. In 1986, he retired from the paper; shortly afterward, he lost Rosemary to cancer. Malcolm remained active in the community, serving on the Board of the Asheville-Buncombe Library System for eight years, two as Chairman.

After a whirlwind courtship, he married Sunday School classmate Sybil Duckett. They recently celebrated their 15th wedding anniversary. He and Sybil enjoy traveling and activities at Trinity United Church in West Asheville, where Malcolm has been a member since 1937. Looking back, he says, "I've been so lucky in my life, in everything."

MY TOWN, MY TIMES

Comments of H. Malcolm Gamble

Section 1: Area Landmarks

Asheville-Hendersonville Airport nears Completion: "I flew out of this airport so many times. When I made this shot, they were nearly ready to open the new terminal."

Asheville-Biltmore College: "A lot of people don't know that Asheville-Biltmore College, now UNC Asheville, began in this building on Sunset Mountain—the old Seely's Castle. This shot was later used on a postcard."

Ferris Wheel and Merry –Go-Round at Recreation Park: "The paper ran a lot of pictures of Recreation Park in the 1950s and early 1960s. It was a great place to go in those days, and there were always lots of people there, so a photographer could get some really interesting shots, like this one of the merry-go-round. The ferris wheel shot is a timed exposure—people always seem to like that effect."

Mount Mitchell Parking Lot: "We did pictures of Mount Mitchell several times a year. There was a travel explosion in the 1950s, because finally almost every family had a car, and gas was cheap. We did a lot of shooting that promoted the appeal of the area as a tourist destination. Mount Mitchell was one the places that tourists came here to see, and local people loved to go up there too. The crowded parking lot you see here was not unusual in those days."

Thomas Wolfe Memorial: "This was a nighttime sound and light show to celebrate Wolfe's birthday, October 3. This photo was taken in 1960; at that time the Wolfe House Memorial was still a fairly new thing. It was beginning to be a definite tourist attraction—I wouldn't say huge numbers, but it was surprising the number of people who came here because of Thomas Wolfe. You could often get an interesting shot at The Old Kentucky Home."

Section 2: A Tough Job, but Somebody's Got to Do It

"The Carolina Press Photographers Association had a beauty contest every year. Each photographer would sponsor a girl. In 1957 I sponsored Marcie Hampton from West Asheville, and she won! Naturally, someone took pictures!" On the swinging bridge at Grandfather Mountain.

Section 3: Maria Beale Fletcher Homecoming Parade

The Winky Special: "I thought this was a great shot!"

Rhododendron Club Float: "Throughout the 1950s and into the 1960s, there were a lot of parades in Asheville. The whole community participated, and the paper usually gave them a lot of coverage. The Rhododendron Club was one of the well-known clubs at that time. Everybody wanted to be part of this parade!"

Maria Beale Fletcher: " Maria Beale Fletcher was Miss Asheville, and then Miss North Carolina before becoming Miss America. She was a superbly easy person for photographers to work with—she was so nice to everyone. This photo was taken near her home in East Asheville."

Maria Beale Fletcher with Eliada Home Children: "As I said, everyone turned out for this parade. At that time Eliada Home brought the children out for most civic events. I think Maria kind of reminds you of Audrey Hepburn in this shot."

Welcome Home Miss America: "There was so much excitement and pride here when she won the title! It was the biggest thing that had happened to Asheville in a long time. I think more people attended that parade than any other parade that I remember here."

Section 4: Sports

"Local high school sports were really important here throughout the 1950s and into the 1960s. Lots of kids participated, and the paper gave them a lot of coverage, particularly when the paper was still locally owned. You always tried to get a sports shot at some critical moment—like the one of the high jumper or the relay race runner. I really like the way the steeplechase shot turned out—you can just feel that horse coming over the hurdle. I always enjoyed taking the sports shots—we all did. I got some great shots of the basketball tournaments they used to have at the old City Auditorium."

Section 5: Urban Aerial Views

"Of course, we had to fly pretty low to get these shots—about 300 feet or so. The thing about flying low was that you cut out the haze. We always shot through an open door or window. There was a character in Asheville in those days who used to cal the FAA on us and complain about us being too low every time we did these flights. We always notified the Tower before we took off, because we were flying lower than regulations allowed. You probably couldn't get away with that now."

Pritchard Park: "You can see a lot here that's gone now. Penney's, Bon Marche, Woolworth's, on Haywood St. The George Vanderbilt Hotel was still in business. Do you see the old city bus there?"

Vance Monument: *"A lot of this has changed—Barefoot & Tatum's Drug Store and the Pack Square Pharmacy are gone, to name a couple. Do you see the old Paramount Theater back there on College St.? I went to my first Brigitte Bardot movie in that theater!"

Section 6: Landscapes

Autumn, Beaver Lake: "It's very hard to capture the vibrancy of the fall season in black and white, but I think I did pretty well in this shot. It's one of my favorite pictures."

Infrared Forest/River: Infrared photography uses a special film to create a more dramatic shot. Ansel Adams shot mainly infrared. When you take an infrared shot you have to set the range finder just back of "Infinity". I always thought that "back of Infinity" was a concept unique to photography."

Woods in Winter, Biltmore Forest: "A lot of folks thought this shot was really striking. One of the banks used it for their Christmas postcard that year. Incidentally, my daughter was in the paper a half a dozen times—whenever it snowed they always wanted a nice shot for the morning paper, and she was convenient! City Editor Johnny Jones used to say that the paper ran more snow pictures that came off the Leicester Highway (Gamble's neighborhood) than anywhere else!"

Section 7: Aerial Views, Asheville Area

"I took a lot of aerial shots. I remember one time when a local pilot crashed his plane on Mount Mitchell and a photographer from the paper had been out to get some shots. At that time the paper didn't have the facilities to transmit photos to the AP. So they sent me with another pilot to fly the pictures down to Greenville, South Carolina. We got started, and down just below Saluda this layer of clouds came. The pilot looked at me and said, 'I'm turning back. I don't want my picture in the paper, do you?!'

French Broad River along Amboy Rd., West Asheville: "This shot shows Carrier Field on Amboy Rd. in West Asheville. You can see a plane beside it. My first flight ever was out of carrier Field. Pilot Joe Musleh took me up in his Tri-Motor Ford. It cost $5. You know, a B-26 landed there after the war (WW II), but the runway was too short for it to take off. They didn't think they would be able to fly it out. Col. Boyd (later General Boyd, in charge of the X-15 program) from Alexander came out, attached jets under the wings, and he flew it out of there. People were totally amazed at the time. You can see the dirt track for the New Asheville Speedway there too—it was just getting started then. You can see some of the Pisgah View Apartments on the hill to the left."

Craven St. and the French Broad River: You can see the Southern Railway Bridge toward the top, then the Smoky Park Bridge, then the Smith Bridge. Smoky Park Bridge was just one bridge in this picture—it was before they added the extra lanes. This is the old Smith Bridge that was replaced in the 1980s. Along the river on the left you can see the old W.S. Harrison Auto Parts place—that's John Bell's place now. You can see Hillcrest Apartments at the upper right, and Westgate at upper left."

Swimming Pool at Recreation Park: "This is another shot from Recreation Park. That swimming pool was busy whenever the Park was open. You can see Henrietta the elephant in the upper right, and the Kiwanis miniature train in the lower right."
The Indian elephant "Henrietta" was 11 years old when this picture was made. Swannanoa River is visible in lower right corner.

Southern Railway Yard: "Here you can see the roundhouse, and a few trains on the tracks—by then the railroads had lost a lot of business, so it wasn't nearly as busy as it was even 5 years before. My father-in-law worked in the Roundhouse. In fat, he had a heart attack and died there. You can see the haze in this photo."
Meadow Rd. runs behind the Roundhouse, with the Swannanoa River in the trees behind the road. Carrier Bridge is to the far right, and Carrier Field is visible toward the top of the picture.

Section 8: The River in Winter

"Any kind of unusual weather rated a picture, and winter weather especially. We had to get out on those roads and go—boy, I tell you, there were times I slid all over the place. Never got hurt, though. And I always got the picture!"

French Broad River Frozen Over, Amboy Rd.: "I've taken a lot of winter pictures along this stretch of the river—it would always freeze over first right here, at Harrin Sand and Gravel."

French Broad River Frozen Over, Marshall, NC: "I don't think I'd ever seen this much ice in the river. It's been a good while since this has happened around here."

Section 9: Wrecks of One Kind and Another

Plane Crash at Crossnore, NC: "This plane crash at Crossnore happened at noon on a Sunday, just church was letting out. The pilot was one of the orphans from the Sloop's school down there. The tip of one of the wings just grazed a lady's ear—otherwise nobody was hurt. The pilot walked away without a scratch. This picture ran in LIFE magazine."

Wreck of Truck Hauling Chickens: "This wreck happened on the Old Fort Mountain—you know how bad that old road was. There were chickens, feathers, and chicken crates scattered all the way down the mountainside. You never saw such a mess."

It's All Over Now: "Now this picture was made right outside the Citizen-Times building. This guy had was coming down the street, he'd already hit 4 or 5 cars before he ran into the one that stopped him. The city detectives just happened to be there. The guy was in pretty rough shape, but don't you think he's dressed nice?"

House Fire: "The paper ran a lot of pictures of fires. I always hated to go to a house fire—you knew that was somebody's life going up in smoke. I thought this picture came out pretty well, though, because you can see the flames. Sometimes that was hard to get."

Train Wreck near the Southern RR Yard: "Train wrecks were a big thing. There were always a lot of spectators at train wrecks. It was unbelievable to see all that steel—we're talking about tons of it—tossed off the tracks and pulled out of the road bed. It was something to see. I remember a train wreck in Newton, NC. Bill Warren (another photographer) and I were the first ones on the scene. As wew were walking along the tracks, Jesse James Bailey came up to us and wanted to know what we were doing there. He had once been Sheriff of Buncombe County and also, at one time, Sheriff of Madison County. He was working for the railroad at this time. He told us that we didn't have permission to be there, and threatened to arrest us. Bill said to me, 'You take the photos, Malcolm, and get 'em back to the paper. I'll let him arrest me.' But Bailey was just talking—nobody got arrested. That picture won best in the state that year."

Section 10: The Public Library in the News

Pen & Plate Club Gives Library $500: "Well, this was news for two reasons: $500 was a substantial donation to the library, and of course, since Jamie Clarke was presenting it, that was another reason to cover it. Jamie used to write editorials for the paper. He had an office right next to mine. There was a sort of an overhang out in the hallway and we used to go out there and see who could jump up and touch it. Well, later on, after Jamie got to be a Congressman, he got an award from the TVA, and the paper sent me to cover it. The TVA people were all dressed up very formally, and acting like it was a very serious affair. They went on and on. I waited as long as I could, but you know, I had a deadline. Finally, I stuck my head in there and told Jamie I needed to get a picture and get back. He came out, and there was an open doorframe just across the hall—he started jumping up, hitting that doorframe, and that's how I shot the picture! The guys from TVA didn't know what to think."

Mrs. Coxe Berlage and Mary Parker: "We usually covered anything going on with The Friends of the Library. And in this picture is one of the best friends this library has ever had, and a good friend of mine too—Mary Parker."

Opening Day, North Asheville Branch Library: "They sent us to get pictures whenever a new building went up somewhere. Of course, at that time, these new branch libraries were a big deal, because it was the first time Asheville had branch libraries, and people were really proud of them."

Section 11: Portraits

African-American Woman: "I can't remember exactly where I made this photograph. I think it's really a good picture because she's so gracious and dignified, and her friendliness comes through so well."

A Shared Treat: "Some days they would just send us out to look for pictures—that's how I got this one. Photographing children was always a mixed bag, but they seemed to react favorably to me."

Lady Feeding the Ducks: "This was in Biltmore Forest. We did a fair number of animal pictures. One time the paper sent June Glenn and me to get a photograph of the first robin of Spring—that was trhe Editor's idea! Of course, there's robins here all year long. We went down to Aston Park, and I don't know if you've ever tried to get close to a robin, but it's not easy. Whenever I'd think I had a shot, off they'd go. June finally got one that they ran. Another time I had an assignment to get out to Jonathan Creek and photograph the beavers. It was a big thing—the beavers were coming back to Western north Carolina. So I got there, found a place on the creek bank where you could see the beavers had been at work, and sat down to wait. I sat there all day long. Never did see a beaver. I came back to the paper and looked up 'beavers' in the encyclopedia. It said that beavers were nocturnal animals—they work at night!"

Still of the Night: "This photograph was part of a layout about people who worked on the graveyard shift. I only took one shot."

Triplets with Triplets: "This is one of the few shots I ever took that was at all posed, but of course something like this, you had to pose it."

Ginseng Dealer: "I shot this with 35mm film. This man had a little place down on Broadway. I liked the look on his face. He had a certain presence about him that came through in the photograph. You can see a T.S. Morrison calendar on the wall behind him."

Uncle John Stepp: "This is Uncle John Stepp from Black Mountain. This is another one of those pictures that I got when I was just out looking one day. I did take a little time with this one, though."

Malcolm's Favorite Joke:

A young couple's favorite entertainment was to go to the airfield and watch the planes take off and land. The man said to his wife, "Honey, I sure would like to go up in a plane." But a flight cost money, and they were saving for a house. His wife said, "Ten dollars is ten dollars."

They bought a house and raised a family. They still went to watch the planes. Sometimes the man would say, "Honey, I'd really love to go up in a plane one time." But they had the children to educate, and then they were saving for retirement, so his wife always said, "Ten dollars is ten dollars."

Finally, the house was paid for. The children were educated. They had a comfortable retirement. One day they were out at the airfield and a pilot stopped to talk.

The old man said, "I've been coming to this airfield for 60 years, and I've never been up in a plane."

"60 years and you've never been up in a plane?! Why not?" the pilot asked.

"Well," said the wife, "Ten dollars is ten dollars."

"Listen," said the pilot. "I'll take you up in my plane, and if you won't say a word while we're in the air, I won't charge you anything. But if you talk, you'll have to pay the ten dollars."

The couple got in the plane and the pilot took off. They flew around a while and there wasn't a word out of the old couple. The pilot banked the plane to the right and then to the left; still not a sound out of his passengers. So he did some loops and rolls; silence from the back of the plane.

So the pilot landed, and turned to help the old man and his wife, but he didn't see the wife anywhere. "Where's your wife?" he asked.

"She fell out." the old man said.

"Why didn't you tell me?!" demanded the pilot.

"Well," said the old man, "Ten dollars is ten dollars."

H. Malcolm Gamble was born at 21 Bartlett St. in Asheville, North Carolina, April 19, 1921. He was the 3rd child of Thomas Austin Gamble and Thelma Michael Gamble. His father managed a variety store, and the family moved often in Malcolm's younger years. He began school in Danville, Virginia. The family later moved to Texas for a while. "I thought 'The Eyes of Texas' was the national anthem!" Malcolm remembers. Returning to Asheville, he attended the old Murray School, and then Grace High School. Well-known Asheville educator Ira B. Jones (for whom Ira B. Jones Elementary School is named) was principal of Grace HS at that time. "At lunchtime he used to loan us his Oldsmobile to go downtown to get something to eat," Malcolm says. "You could do that in those days!"

The eyes of Texas are upon you
All the live long days
The eyes of Texas are upon you
And you cannot get away

Do not think you can escape them
From night till early in the morn
The eyes of Texas are upon you
Till Gabriel blows his horn

The eyes of Texas are upon you
All the live long days
The eyes of Texas are upon you
And you cannot get away

Do not think you can escape them
From night till early in the morn
The eyes of Texas are upon you
Till Gabriel blows his horn

Owen Field/Carrier Field "This picture was made in the late 1950s – you can see that part of the Pisgah View Apartment complex has been completed. My first flight ever was out of Carrier Field. Harrin Sand and Gravel is there about top center. Pilot Joe Musleh took me up in his Tri-Motor Ford. We went up to about 300 feet, circled over the Biltmore Estate, and came back. It cost $5. You know, a B-26 landed there after the War, but the runway was too short for it to take off. They didn't think they would be able to fly it out. Col. Boyd (later General Boyd, in charge of the X-15 program) from Alexander came out, attached jets underneath the wings, and flew it out. People were totally amazed at the time.

One Sunday we were headed out to the old Asheville-Weaverville Speedway to get some shots, and they called us and sent us down to Cherokee—a bridge had fallen into the Oconaluftee River and 4 people had been killed. Traffic was backed up for miles. Lacy Griffin was the pilot, and we were flying a Super Cub. We landed on a slope in a wooded field—I can still remember weaving between the trees to land! I got out and shot the pictures. Then Lacy said, 'I can't get out of here with you in the plane.' So he took the film back, and I waited several hours til the paper sent someone to get me!"

. Among photographers with whom he worked in the course of his career were June Glenn, Ewart Ball II and Ewart Ball III, Bert Shipman, and Dick Mauldin. Looking back on his career in photo-journalism, Malcolm remarks, "In the early days, the whole key was Truth. There was no embellishment, no 'spin' back then."

The Shoe Doctor

By NANCY BROWER

The sign in Gardner's Shoe Hospital reads: "We doctor them, heel them, attend to their dyeing and save their soles."

A-T 5/4/79

NANCY BROWER

Carl Gardner has been repairing shoes for 60 years. He said that is "too long. The shoes people are buying now are not worth fixing."

The 86-year-old man said the good old days for his shoe hospital walked away in leather shoes — shoes that could be heeled and half-soled and worn another year. "I took great pride in my work," the shoe doctor said.

"I was covered up with work on fine shoes — half soles, heels, repairing uppers. Now you don't have it," Gardner said. "This business has been ruined on account of cheap shoes shipped from overseas. You can't repair them."

"Still," said the shoemaker, "I've been in this business for a long time and enjoyed every minute of it. It's only lately that it's been a hard row to tend."

Standing (in leather shoes) at the foot-shaped last he has used for 60 years, Gardner said he began repairing shoes when he was 12 years old. "I learned from my father. He was a one-legged shoemaker. When I first came to Asheville (from Bessemer, Ala.), I made a lot of shoes: It was mostly orthopedic work, but some men wanted custom-made shoes. I'd make a pair of leather oxfords by hand for $50."

Gardner has operated Gardner's Shoe Hospital in Asheville since 1920, first on College Street, later on Broadway and, for the last 40 years, at 667 Haywood Road. He had a stroke two years ago that left him with partial paralysis of the left side. He is lefthanded. He shrugged off the mishap with, "I wasn't out of the shop a week."

p. 1

At one time, Gardner and his son, Jim, operated three shoe repair businesses here. The shop at 32 Broadway was closed due to Jim's health. Now the businesses are consolidated at the West Asheville location.

The high cost of leather for half soles and the popularity of composition-soled "easy walking" shoes has hit the repair business hard, Gardner said. The shoe polish and shoelace business has slumped, too. "I can't sell shoe polish, uppers have changed so much. We used to do a big shoe shine business. Men don't take the pride in a shoe shine they once did."

But in the busy days, Gardner's Shoe Hospital had 10 men bending over their lasts repairing sturdy leather shoes for men and women. A closetful of shoes was a rarity then and much repair work was done on a "while you wait" basis. Customers filled the chairs in the front of the shop at the corner of Haywood Road and Louisiana Avenue.

"I don't do any 'wait work' now," Gardner said. "I tell them to come back tomorrow. It's too nervewracking and there's just no need for it."

The shoemaker opens his hospital at 8:30 a. m. and closes it at 1 p. m. "I used to put in 10-12 hours a day, six days a week," he said. He is not, however, planning retirement. "Too many strings attached to it," he said, turning back to his last.

Judge J. C. Pritchard's "Labor Day" Address

He Was the Principal Speaker at the West Asheville Celebration Yesterday—Interesting Sporting Events—An Old Fashioned Basket Dinner.

The people of West Asheville celebrated Labor day yesterday with fitting exercises, and the day was one of the greatest in the history of the town. Besides a number of addresses, interest was added to the day by athletic sports and a baby show. There were more than 2000 people there for the day. The 200 yard dash was worn by Dr. Gardner; 100 yard dash by Charles Lineberry; the girls' race by Miss Minnie Plemmons, and the boys' 200 yard race by Clark Brooks.

There were a large number of contestants for honors in the baby show. The prize for the handsomest baby, under one year old, was awarded the child of Prof. and Mrs. Tucker of the West Asheville high school. The prize for the handsomest child over one year of age, was awarded to Mrs. S. A. Meadows.

County Superintendent A. C. Reynolds was master of ceremonies and introduced the speakers. The first address of the day was that of Rev. Fred Brown, who spoke upon West Asheville and its possibilities, and the free life enjoyed by the people of that village.

The principal address of the day was that by Judge J. C. Pritchard, who spoke upon "Good Citizenship." The crowd was deeply interested in this fine address, which dealt with many things of interest to the laboring people. In introducing his subject, Judge Pritchard congratulated the people of West Asheville upon the fact that although they had no policemen and no mayor, yet it was the best ordered crowd he had ever seen.

AUTO STRIKES BUGGY IN WEST ASHEVILLE

JUDGE CHAS. JONES AND EMERSON EVE INJURED

Heavy Fog and Buggy Without Light Is Responsible for the Accident.

The heavy fog last night, and the absence of lights on the buggy of David Nicholson, was responsible for a collision between the buggy and Dr. Gardener's automobile in West Asheville shortly after ten o'clock. Dr. Gardener was returning to the city form the institution of the new K P. lodge at West Asaneville accompanied by Judge Charles Jones and Mr. Emereson Eve, who had also participated in the lodge exercises, when Mr. Nicholson's buggy approached. The darkness prevailing prevented Dr. Gardner from seeing the buggy, which carried no lights, and although the automobile was going at a low rate of speed, the collision which resulted upset the machine and the buggy throwing the occupants of both to the ground. Mrs. Nicholson who accompanied her husband, received a shock, but was otherwise unhurt, her husband escaping with a few scratches. Dr. Gardener also escaped injury but Judge Jones received a nasty cut over the left eye, while Mr. Eve had his arm broken. Judge Jones was taken to his home and Mr. Eve to the Berkeley hotel.

Dr. Gardener carried Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson to their West Asheville home in his automobile which was not injured. The accident is regarded as being unavoidable owing to conditions prevailing.

DR. GARDNER ATTACKED BY A NEGRO PATIENT

Believed to Be Insane—wife, Who Called Doctor, Said Man Was Poisoned.

Dr. G. D. Gardner had an exciting experience last night when he was attacked by a negro he was trying to relieve, who must have been temporarily insane. The negro is Elisha Manning and it was thought that he was poisoned.

Dr. Gardner was called by Manning's wife about 12 o'clock, and after some hesitation, he decided to go as the woman said that she thought her husband was poisoned. Dr. Gardner states that he had just entered the room and asked the man a question when he jumped from the bed and attacked Dr. Gardner with considerable vigor. He was smaller than Dr. Gardner, however, and the physician succeeded in overcoming him, but not before he had choked him for some time.

A negro man entered the room about that time and helped to control Manning. Dr. Gardner says he "stood not upon the order of his going," but hurried from the house without attempting to discover what was the matter. He had not heard from Manning today but supposed that he had improved.

W. F. BUTTERICK WAS ATTACKED BY A DOG

W. T. Butterick was painfully injured yesterday shortly after noon by being attacked by a dog, which is said to have been the property of J. Dougherty. Mr. Butterick was bitten on the right leg and it was stated last night that the wound is a serious one. Dr. G. D. Gardner, who dressed the wound, ordered that the dog be held until this morning when it will be killed and its head will be sent to Raleigh for an examination to ascertain whether or not it has hydrophobia. Dr. Gardner stated last night that the animal had shown signs of that disease and the dog was taken to the police department.

DR. GARDNER TELLS HOW HE WAS HURT

Pistol Was Not in Miss Davis' Hands and Had Not Been, He Says.

REITERATES AFFAIR WAS PURELY ACCIDENT

Asserts Weapon was Dislodged and Fell When Miss Davis Moved Book Behind It.

Dr. G. D. Gardner, who was wounded by a pistol shot in his office several days ago, accounts of which have appeared in this paper, and who recently left the hospital, has recovered to the extent of being able to resume his practice. Dr. Gardner was not wounded so seriously as the papers and people inferred, it seems. In fact, he states that the hurt was little more than a flesh wound.

Dr. Gardner said that he desired to correct certain details of the accounts that have been published concerning the affair. In the beginning, he said, he wished to reiterate that the shooting was purely accidental. It was reported, and the papers were so informed, that the weapon was in the hands of Miss Mary Davis, former stenographer, bookkeeper and office girl of Dr. Gardner, when it was discharged wounding him. Dr. Gardner states that the pistol was not actually in her hands when it exploded nor had it been.

"Miss Davis had worked for me about a year and a half," said Dr. Gardner, "but she had not been in my employ for the past few months. Several times she came to the office to use my typewriter and on several occasions had worked on my books.

"On the day I was hurt I came from the Mission hospital about 1 o'clock and found Miss Davis there. A gentleman who said he had been in the employ of the National Casket company came in almost immediately and was consulting me. I am sorry that I did not get his name.

"The pistol was on a shelf of my bookcase in front of some books where it had lain for months. Miss Davis had stopped writing and I asked her to hand me a certain book from the case. In pulling it from the shelf the pistol was dislodged and falling several inches on the hard surface of the writing leaf of the desk below exploded and the shot struck me. The gentleman was in the office still when the accident occurred.

"I am sorry that I did not get to give the papers a direct statement concerning the details of the occurrence at the time but my physicians ruled that I should not see anyone."

"As the accident actually occurred it will be seen that Miss Davis had very little to do with it, whereas by former accounts it was made to appear that the weapon was in her hands when it was fired."

NEW AUTOMOBILE IS DESTROYED BY FIRE

While driving a new automobile which he had just purchased at West Asheville at an early hour this morning, Dr. G. D. Gardner suffered the loss of the machine by fire. Flames which enveloped the automobile before the occupant was aware of the fact that the machine was in danger practically demolished it. Dr. Gardner sprang from the machine before the gasoline tank, which had just been filled, exploded.

Dr. Gardner was unable to state how the flames originated. He came to Asheville in a buggy after making futile efforts to extinguish the blaze.

LOCAL PHYSICIAN MAKES QUICK TRIP

Dr. G. D. Gardner Comes From Charlotte to Asheville in Five Hours and Twelve Minues.

Records for time consumed on the trip from Charlotte to Asheville were broken yesterday by Dr. G. D. Gardner, of this city, who came to Asheville from the Mecklenburg capital in five hours and twelve minutes. His speedometer at the end of the trip showed that he had covered a distance of 156 miles. Dr. Gardner found the road to be in excellent condition and experienced favorable weather on the trip, encountering rain only when he was but a few miles from this city. He said after the trip that the downfall was but slight and did not interfere with his traveling.

Dr. Gardner went from Charlotte to Spartanburg and at the last named city spent thirty minutes at lunch. This time, of course, is not included in the time spent on the trip, five hours and twelve minutes being actual running time. Leaving Spartanburg, Dr. Gardner took the shorter and better of the two routes to the metropolis of the Land of the Sky, coming here by way of Campobello, Gaffney, Melrose, Tryon, Saluda and Hendersonville.

The Asheville physician stated that the grade is ideal and remarked that he made the entire trip in high gear. The road building operations, he said, have been conducted so as to eliminate all steep grade and dangerous curves and the scenery is superb. The highway is amply wide, for fast traveling and Dr. Gardner said that he saw no less than 200 Asheville, Spartanburg, Charlotte and Atlanta automobilists on the road during the time that he spent in making the trip.

The run was made in a new automobile, which Dr. Gardner has just purchased.

NEW $10,000 BLOCK FOR WEST ASHEVILLE

Dr. G. D. Gardner Awards Contract For Five-Story Building in Town Across the River.

Dr. G. D. Gardner yesterday awarded the contract for the erection of a five-story business block in West Asheville, to be located close to the West Asheville bank. The excavation for the building has already been started and it is expected the building will be ready for occupancy this spring. The first floor has been leased for five years to an Asheville firm. The upper stories of the building will be rented for apartments.

West Asheville shows a steady growth. There are now about fifty residences either being erected or contemplated and it is said the demand for renting property in West Asheville is as strong as in Asheville. The growth of the town across the river, it has been pointed out, started from that time the concrete bridge was built across the French Broad river. Since that bridge has been completed West Asheville has grown to a town of approximately 4,500 people, and its taxable valuation has increased manyfold.

ASHEVILLE DOCTORS ARRAIGNED IN U. S. COURT YESTERDAY

Four Local Physicians on Trial for Violating Narcotic Act—Two Plead Guilty.

After disposing of a few cases of violations of the National Prohibition Acts yesterday United District Court took up the trials of five Asheville physicians charged with violating the Harrison narcotic act. Two of these doctors entered pleas of guilty and prayer for judgment was continued to the next court. Another was called but failed to answer and a capias was ordered issued for him.

M. D. Collins, guilty of possessing whiskey, was fined $50; John Angel, manufacturer, four months' imprisonment; C. T. Childress, same offense, fined $150. Andy Morrow, indicted for murder, was nol prossed when the state refused to prosecute.

Drs. J. F. Brewer and G. D. Gardner entered pleas of guilty of violating the narcotic acts of the Federal government, and prayer for judgment was continued in both cases. Dr. G. W. Peurifoy, indicted on the same charge, was called and failed to appear. A capias was ordered issued. Dr. P. P. Chambers went on trial yesterday afternoon after issuing a general denial of the charges against him. Court was adjourned with the case still pending.

LOCAL PHYSICIAN GIVEN SENTENCE

Dr. G. D. Gardner Will Serve Year And Day At Atlanta

Judge E. Yates Webb, presiding over the district term of federal court yesterday reduced an 18 months sentence imposed upon Dr. G. D. Gardner, local physician, to a year and a day in the federal prison at Atlanta. The physician will begin his sentence within a few days, it was learned. He was convicted on charges of violating the narcotic law.

A. Hall Johnson and James S. Howell handled the defendant's case, and entered an appeal to the 18 months sentence. The appeal was withdrawn when the sentence was reduced to a year and a day.

Floyd Beaver of Burnsville was given a year and a day sentence in the Chillicothe Federal reformatory when convicted on a charge of forgery. The prisoner, according to the testimony, forged his cousin's name to a government compensation check for $57.50 and cashed the instrument.

Mr. Adams:

Miss McKay, superintendent of Mission hospital, came to me this evening with a request for a suggestion of a way out of what she and other nurses and physicians consider a problem.

Our news items, she says, class Mission and the rest of the reputable hospitals in Asheville with Gardner hospital.

She claims this is unjust to the profession since Gardner is not a recognized hospital and since Dr. Gardner is not a recognized physician or even a member of the medical association. Strangers, she contends, are led to believe Gardner is reputable etc.

The Asheville hospital association meets tomorrow, and she has promised to take the question up with the newspapers before that meeting. She was very nice about it, said Mission was very willing to give out news, but wanted help in the way of a suggestion.

I told her I would have you call tonight if possible, and if not in the morning.

Her telephone number is 4840.

September 24, 1931.

WSA:

As requested by you, I paid a visit yesterday to Gardner's Hospital, at 718 Haywood road, and interviewed its proprietor, Dr. G. D. Gardner. He talked to me with apparent freedom and frankness, and took me all over the hospital.

I explained to Dr. Gardner at the outset the purpose of my visit -- that other hospitals in town objected to being classed with his, the implication being that his place was really not a hospital at all; and that I had come to see just what he had.

In response to questions from me, he gave the following information, most of which I was able to verify in part or in whole: The hospital has 12 rooms, with a maximum capacity of 18 beds; five nurses are employed -- one of the two graduates being on duty at all times; Dr. Gardner is assisted by Dr. S. S. Fay.

The hospital is a residence transformed -- with apparently comparatively few structural changes -- into its present use. The exterior is in need of paint and dirty, and the interior floors and furnishings (that is furniture, rugs, etc.) are worn and rather shabby. This gives the impression that the place is not clean; but when I looked for definite evidences of uncleanliness or unsanitation, I failed to find them. I might mention in this connection that I detected a faint odor, not that of disinfectants such as are usually encountered upon entering a hospital, but one resembling that of a kitchen where food has been left out, and the doors and windows closed. This might be due to something unclean somewhere, or to poor ventilation, or to both. I found the kitchen reasonably clean.

The patients' rooms, though rather bare and some of them in need of paint, were in A-1 condition, so far as I could observe. They appeared clean and orderly, and most of them well lighted and ventilated and comfortable. The place appeared about two-thirds full.

The operating room, though small, appeared to a layman's eye to be up-to-date, with a large number of instruments in the typical class-enclosed instrument cabinet, sterilizer, etc. A nurse taking care of the operating room was immaculate. Other parts of the hospital I found, so far as a layman could discern, in good shape -- linen closet, medecine cabinet, etc.

Dr. Gardner himself brought up the subject of his conviction in federal court of violation of the narcotic act, and the attempt to take his license from him. On the former subject, he said he had voluntarily admitted, previous to his conviction, a technical guilt on a former charge; in that case, he said he gave a man a quarter grain of a drug to give his suffering wife. In the case in which he was convicted, he stated absolutely that he was innocent, that he was convicted on the immunity-paid-for evidence of drug addicts, and that Judge Webb expressed doubt of his guilt. On this conviction he did an eight-months' stretch in Atlanta. He attributed the effort to take his license from him to professional jealousy. The case is now awaiting re-trial in Buncombe superior court, after the supreme court ordered a new trial.

Dr. Gardner stated that, on one or two previous occasions when there had been complaints, he had asked Dr. Dan Sevier, city health officer, to inspect his hospital, and that that official had said he could find nothing wrong. He suggested I talk to Dr. Sevier or any one of the following physicians: Dr. Grady Morgan, Dr. Bernard Smith, Dr. Jos. L. Adams.

He also mentioned as an explanation for the criticisms of his hospital that a nurse he had had to discharge had sought to make trouble for him.

My personal conclusions are that Gardner's hospital is not the best in the country -- it gives the impression of being operated without sufficient capital for the furnishings one would expect; it certainly is a small one; but that it indisputably IS a hospital, and that undoubtedly poorer and smaller ones could be found, in this section.

ON SICK LIST

F. J. Pelzer, of Charleston, S. C., is ill in the Mission hospital. Mr. Pelzer became ill while visiting in Flat Rock.

L. Blomberg, Asheville merchant, who was critically injured in an automobile accident recently, showed little improvement today, attendants at the Mission hospital reported.

Mrs. W. M. Wilson, of Weaverville road, was taken to the Gardner hospital Tuesday night for treatment.

Miss Jessie Hensley, of Woodfin, was taken to the Gardner hospital this afternoon for an operation.

Mrs. C. C. Hughes, ill in the Gardner hospital for three weeks, returned to her home in Enka Wednesday.

D. Dillingham, seriously ill in the Gardner hospital for several days, was discharged Wednesday and taken to his home in Enka.

Dr. G. D. Gardner Gets 3-10 Years For Manslaughter

Dr. G. D. Gardner, 63, for many years one of Buncombe County's leading physicians and surgeons, was found guilty of manslaughter by a Superior Court jury late Wednesday afternoon. The verdict was returned after 50 minutes deliberation. Judge H. Hoyle Sink, presiding, pronounced sentence of from three to ten years in the State prison at such labor as his physical condition may warrant.

Dr. Gardner had been on trial since last Monday charged with the death of Mrs. Lois E. Cordell, 23, from an alleged illegal operation, said to have been performed October 23, 1945. Counsel for Dr. Gardner filed notice of appeal to the State Supreme Court, and his bond for appearance was set at $5,000.

The final day of the trial was filled with speeches by state and defense attorneys and the jury charge by Judge Sink. Don C. Young opened for the state, and he was followed by Henry Fisher, G. Lyle Jones and George Ward for the defense. District Solicitor James S. Howell gave the concluding argument and asked for a verdict of murder in the second degree.

Mr. Jones expressed his surprise at the verdict, and said:

"Your honor ruled otherwise and that is now water over the dam," Mr. Jones said. "Dr. Gardner had for many years one of the largest practices in Buncombe County. He never refused to answer a call when someone was sick, whether they were high or low, rich or poor. Through his untiring work he has saved many lives and brought relief to thousands of suffering people. His own generous and impulsive nature is the thing that has gotten him into trouble."

Solicitor Howell made the following comment when asked by Judge Sink if he had anything to say:

"That is a matter for your honor to decide. I have known Dr. Gardner for many years and know of his fine skill as a physician and surgeon when he was serving the people of Buncombe county. It is a tragic thing for a man of his fine skill to be in this position. I felt that it was my duty to handle this case and I still think I did right. I do not feel that it would be fitting for me to say anything on the question of punishment. He is down now and I certainly am not going to kick a man when he is down."

Dr. Gardner and Miss Vivian Buchanan, a nurse allegedly employed by the former, were indicted by a grand jury after the two were ordered by a coroner's jury to be held on murder charges. Mrs. Cordell died at the Gardner home, 918 Haywood Road, West Asheville, at 1 p. m., October 23, 1945, allegedly as the result of an illegal operation (abortion.)

In a signed statement presented by Dr. Gardner to city detective Henry Caldwell, the defendant said that Mrs. Cordell was left on his front porch steps about 7 a. m., on October 23, that he heard a taxicab or some other car leaving the front of his home and moving down a nearby street. The statement said further that Mrs. Cordell was violently ill, that neither he nor Miss Buchanan examined her and that after doing their best to keep her from being sick to her stomach, the girl died about 1 o'clock.

DR. GARDNER PLACED IN JAIL TO SERVE 5-7 YEARS SENTENCE

Asheville Times
January 7, 1947

Certification of the state supreme court upholding the superior court sentence of Dr. G. D. Gardner was received here today and Dr. Gardner, when notified, came to the office of Clerk of the Court J. Ed Swain and was placed in custody to begin serving a five-to-seven-year sentence in state prison.

A motion has been filed by Henry Fisher, attorney for Dr. Gardner, for a new trial on grounds of new evidence having been found. Mr. Fisher, now in Raleigh as a Buncombe county representative in the general assembly, said he has obtained several affidavits in connection with new evidence in the Gardner case.

Dr. Gardner was convicted for the second time in the same case in superior court here in connection with the death of Mrs. Lois Cordell, 23, of Candler and Asheville at the Gardner home in West Asheville in October, 1945, as the result of an alleged illegal operation.

In the first trial of Dr. Gardner, he was convicted on a manslaughter charge and was convicted to three to seven years in state's prison. An appeal was taken and the supreme court returned the case for retrial on grounds the prosecution introduced newspaper files which might have influenced jurors and which the defense claimed was irregular.

In both instances the state asked for conviction on charges of manslaughter or second degree murder, as evidence might warrant. The manslaughter conviction was secured in both trials, only in the latter the defendant was sentenced to five to seven years in prison.

Upon arrival of the state supreme court certification, which shows the court found no error in trial of the second Gardner case, at the office of the clerk of the court, Dr. Gardner presented himself at the office and went directly to the sheriff's office shortly before noon. He was committed to the county jail, according to the state statutes governing such cases where no error is found on an appeal to the supreme court. The law says that execution shall issue upon receipt of the certificate of certificatiton of the findings of the court, it was explained.

In some cases, execution issues at the next county criminal court term, following receipt of the certification. In this instance, Dr. Gardner can be committed to the state prison immediately, but this will not halt consideration of the motion for a new trial on grounds of new evidence, court officials said.

No plans had been made this afternoon at the office of Sheriff Laurence E. Brown for taking Dr Gardner to Raleigh.

LAST RITES FOR VICTIMS OF AIR CRASH SET TODAY

Gardner And McMillan Will Be Buried At Double Funeral

Funeral services for three West Asheville youths who were killed in an airplane crash near Fletcher Sunday afternoon will be conducted today.

The bodies of Graham Gardner, 18, pilot of the plane, and Sam McMillan, passenger, will be placed in a single grave at Green Hill cemetery. The body of Paul Yow, 22, also a passenger in the plane, was sent to Asheboro, N. C., yesterday for burial this afternoon.

Services for Gardner and McMillan, life-long chums, will be conducted from the West Asheville Baptist church this afternoon at 3 o'clock with the Rev. F. M. Dowell, pastor of the church, and the Rev. G. T. Bond, pastor of the West Asheville Methodist church, officiating.

Gardner is survived by his parents, Dr. G. D. Gardner and Mrs. Fannie Gardner, of West Asheville, and one sister Lois Jean Gardner. McMillan is survived by his mother, Mrs. S. A. McMillan and the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. J. J. Stokes, of Washington, D. C., Josephine, Robert, Hope and Rose McMillan of West Asheville.

Yow is survived by his widow and a four-day-old baby. Mrs. Yow, a patient at the Aston Park hospital, was told of her husband's death yesterday. Dr. C. A. Hensley told her of the tragedy which claimed the life of her husband. She is reported to have received the news bravely.

Active Pallbearers

The bodies of McMillan and Gardner will be placed in steel caskets of the same design and will be buried in the same grave. Active pallbearers for Gardner will be Louis Lutz, Donald Ingle, Ray Householder, Lawrence Miller, Henry Shook, and Eugene Currence. Active pallbearers for McMillan will be: Glen Starnes, William Beckle, William Carter, Harold Franklin, Nelson Austin and Frank Austin.

Honorary pallbearers will be: Judge Carl B. Hyatt, George A. Digges, Jr., Dr. H. G. Brookshire, John B. Anderson, Dr. S. S. Fay, George Pennell, Dr. T. W. Sumner, J. Scroop Styles, Ernest C. May, J. W. McRary, R. E. Currence, Philip C. Cocke, Jr., Ellis C. Jones, Sam Cathey, C. H. Bartlett, L. Roy Young, G. T. Verran, D. A. Riddle, Russell Riddle, Melton Glenn, W. W. Edwards, D. T. Blackwell, William Jacobes, James Solesbee, Albert S. McMain, Fred V. Riddle, Roy Riddle, Leon Miller, Dr. G. E. Brookshire, Ted Bryson, Paul Brewer, and Johnnie Holmes.

The three youths were killed almost instantly Sunday afternoon when the two-seated Eaglerock biplane Gardner was piloting crashed near Fletcher when Gardner attempted to take the machine through a "wing-over" when the plane was at an altitude of approximately 300 feet.

T. J. Roberts, operator of the Asheville-Hendersonville airport, and owner of the plane which Gardner was flying, advised federal authorities of the accident Sunday. Officials of the Federal service were expected to arrive in Asheville to investigate the crash.

Coroner J. F. Brooks, of Henderson county, viewed the wrecked plane and came here to view the bodies of the three youths. He did not call an inquest. Dr. Brooks said that he was not notified of the accident Sunday and did not learn of the tragedy until yesterday morning. He said that he did not authorize the removal of the three bodies from the scene of the crash in Henderson county.

MRS. GASKINS TALKS TO OPTIMIST CLUB

Urges Greater Co-operation in Community and Stresses Value of Unity in Civic Affairs.

The principal speaker at the regular weekly meeting of the Optimist club at the Langren hotel yesterday was Mrs. Lenora Gaskins. Her subject was "Co-operation" and the keynote of the address was a plea for unity in civic affairs among all citizens of the city. Support was pledged to the city commissioners by Mrs. Gaskin in the progressive program. Mr. Glenn and Mrs. Topping gave vocal and piano solos.

A tribute was paid C. W. Treadway, who was a member of the Optimist club and who died yesterday in Biltmore. The following committee was appointed to draft resolutions: C. C. Orr, Walter V. Nixon and Barnwell Bennett. The following were selected to meet the train today when Mr. Treadway's body will arrive and to render assistance: Thomas W. Tate, Zeb V. Nettles, Russell C. Davis, Henry Iddings, J. W. Wheeler, Walter A. Steele, J. A. Ware and Tom N. Clark.

Among the things Mrs. Gaskins urged in her address for Asheville were plenty of pure water, wider streets, better school buildings and school equipment, more and larger libraries, parks, beauty spots throughout the city and the bringing in of the suburbs. Asheville, Mrs. Gaskins says, would be considered by each citizen as a sacred trust.

THE ASHEVILLE TIMES

W. ASHEVILLE CHEST LEADERS ARE ORGANIZED

Mrs. Gaskins, Chairman Of Campaign Division, Picks Drive Organization.

Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins, general of the West Asheville division of the Community Chest campaign, has completed the organizing of her captains and announced Tuesday as chosen in a general meeting held at the home of Horace A. Wells Monday night: Mrs. W. E. Logan, Mrs. Wilbur Devendorf, Mrs. George C. Osborne, Horace A Wells and Cauley J. Ebbs.

Mrs. Gaskins is organizing the entire section of West Asheville so that every citizen in that rapidly growing section of the city will have an opportunity to participate in the work as they never have had before.

C. L. Watkins, former governor of Rotary in Indiana and director of personnel for the General Motors corporation of Muncie, Ind., and a foremost authority on welfare work will broadcast an interesting talk Tuesday night over Station WWNC. Mr. Watkins was invited to Asheville to participate in the Community Chest educational campaign and will broadcast every night this week. His stories of welfare work, it is said, are deeply interesting and have a heart appeal that holds every hearer's attention.

The pageant to be given by the Little Theater under the direction of Mrs. Reuben Robertson will take place Monday night, October 24, immediately after the opening dinner instead of Saturday, Oct. 22, as first planned. Mrs. Robertson and her committee are already hard at work on their program.

THE ASHEVILLE TIMES

LITTLE THEATER WILL ASSIST IN CHEST DRIVE

West Asheville Will Have Separate Division Under Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins.

The Little Theater has pledged through Mrs. Reuben Robertson its support to the Community Chest and is to help in the campaign from Oct. 24 to 27 by staging a pageant at the City Auditorium. This pageant will portray in a vivid and entertaining manner the character of work that is being done by the various agencies through the Community Chest. The entertainment is to last one hour and a half and will be free. The date will be announced later.

West Asheville this year is to have its own general in the Community Chest campaign and Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins has already accepted the generalship and is busy organizing her captains and lieutenants. West Asheville has grown so rapidly and is such a very important part of the city that the Community Chest directors adopted with the suggestion that the citizens on the west side of the river have their own separate division.

A special committee to solicit the foreign corporations doing business in Asheville is another important departure from former campaign methods, and L. B. Rogers, city commissioner of public works, has accepted the chairmanship.

C. L. Watkins, of Muncie, Ind., an authority on general welfare work, will broadcast over WWNC for several nights beginning next Tuesday evening human interest features that directors of the Community Chest feel will prove of immense interest to all who hear him.

West Asheville Anxious To Aid Community Chest

Mayor Roberts Gives The First Check In Section, Mrs. Gaskins Says

"You can say for West Asheville that it will do its full duty for the Community Chest this year," Mrs. S. Whit Gaskins, general of the West Asheville division of the community chest campaign, declared last night.

"It is the first time our part of the city has been organized for a thing of this kind, but in no part of Asheville will you find more civic pride or a desire to do helpful things.

"Our campaign was officially opened by Gallatin Roberts, our mayor, when he gave me his person check as our first contribution to the chest. We have 60 workers who are going out Tuesday to work intensively to cover as much our our territory as possible. This is no small undertaking because West Asheville covers a lot of territory and for 60 persons to cover it adequately in one day is a difficult task. But we are going to do our very best.

"On Sunday we have arranged for three minute speeches at several of our churches. Don C. Young will speak at the Calvary Baptist church at the morning service, and Harry Logan at the church. Mrs. Horace G. Wells will speak at the Presbyterian church and I will speak at the West Asheville Methodist church.

"If anyone has any doubt about the civic pride of West Asheville they should have been at the meeting called Friday night at the Hall Fletcher high school. This meeting was addressed by Frank S. Smith, chairman of the organization committee of the community chest and he sold the community chest idea as well as any one could have done and 50 of our leading citizens signed up right then and there to work for the cause. Among these workers are Rev. J. B. Grice and Dr. Wilbur McMann. These workers in West Asheville have 1,200 cards and we will use the majority of them."

Mayor Opens Chest Campaign

The above picture shows the Honorable Gallatin Roberts, mayor of Asheville, handing his personal subscription to Mrs. S. Whit Gaskins, general of the West Asheville Division of the Community Chest army. As Mayor Roberts is a resident of West Asheville he was asked by Mrs. Gaskins to officially open the campaign on that side of the river.

FLOWER SHOW IN WEST ASHEVILLE

Will Be Held Saturday From 2 To 10 O'Clock In Bledsoe Bldg.

A flower show will be held in West Asheville Saturday from 2 to 10 p. m. under auspices of the Vance Parent-Teacher association.

It will be held in the Bledsoe building, one block from end of the West Asheville car line. Mrs. P. N. Gresham, chairman of the entries, yesterday asked that all potted plants and ferns be brought to the building Friday afternoon for placing, and that cut flowers be brought Saturday morning between 9 and 10.30 o'clock.

Blue and red ribbons will be awarded to first and second places, but prizes will be given only to blue ribbon winners.

CIVIC GROUP TO MEET WEDNESDAY

Mrs. Hauk To Honor The Community Club At Home Meeting

A general meeting of the officers and members of the West Asheville Community Club will be held at the home of Mrs. C. C. Hauk, 165 Vermont avenue, Wednesday night at 8 o'clock, it has been announced. Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins, president, will preside with the other new officers of the club, and a general business and social program has been arranged.

Mrs. W. E. Logan, delegate of the club to the North Carolina Federated Clubs convention which adjourned at Charlotte Friday, will give a report of the meeting, and it is probable that the "Clean-Up Campaign" and other matters of interest to the club will be discussed.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Hauk was the model large home in the recent Better Homes Week exhibit sponsored by the Community Club under the supervision of Mrs. Gaskins, Mrs. R. H. Officer, and others.

WEST ASHEVILLE GROUP TO GATHER

Community Club Plans General Program For Tonight

The West Asheville Community club will meet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carl C. Hauk, 185 Vermont avenue, tonight at 8 o'clock, for a general business and social program. Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins, the president, will preside with the other new members of the club who were elected for the fiscal year at the last meeting.

Mrs. W. E. Logan, delegate from the club to the state convention of the North Carolina Federated Clubs held in Charlotte last week, will report the convention to the meeting and the program includes other features of community interest.

It is probable that the "Clean-up" campaign being sponsored by the club in addition to other city groups, will be given an important place on the program. The campaign was launched in West Asheville Monday morning and due to much successful preliminary work on the part of the club is community-wide in scope. Previously many lawns, gardens, yards, and homes had been beautified and improved through the club's activities and the city officials have been pledged the full co-operation of the community civic organizations.

COMMITTEE TO ARRANGE FLOAT

West Asheville Civic Club To Take Part In Festival

Appointment of a committee to supervise plans for the participation of the West Asheville Community Club in the Rhododendron Festival, and to arrange for a float to be entered in the festival parade was announced yesterday by Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins, president.

Members of the committee are: Mrs. J. S. Handte, chairman; Mrs. Carl C. Hauk, Mrs. J. G. Anderson, Mrs. Raymond H. Officer, and Mrs. R. B. Truett. The first meeting was held Thursday night at the home of Mrs. Gaskins where plans were discussed, and other meetings are to be held.

The West Asheville Club is also planning to enter a float, the matter having been discussed at a recent meeting, when it was decided to confer with officers of the Community Club, and to enlist the support of members of both organizations. R. E. Currence, a member of the [illegible] has been appointed by President R. B. Posey to represent the organization on the Rhododendron Festival committee. The appointment was made at the request of the Asheville Chamber of Commerce.

WHO'S WHO AND WHY IN ASHEVILLE

A. Times 5/19/29

MRS. C. WHIT GASKINS is known as the unofficial Mayor of West Asheville. And Mrs. Gaskins has earned her courtesy title, too, by laboring long and hard for the civic improvement of Asheville west of the river. Mrs. Gaskins is not only a leader in matters of civic and community interest in West Asheville, she is also one of the most successful real estate dealers of this section, and has put over some of the largest real estate transfers in the city during the past few years.

Born on the Anderson homestead at Ivy, in Madison county, near Mars Hill, on Nov. 12, 1884, Lenore Anderson was the fourth of eight children. Up to the age of twelve years she attended the local four months school. Then she entered Mars Hill college where she graduated two years later, in 1899, having completed high school and junior college, the highest courses offered at that time. For a year Miss Anderson tutored and then entered Claremont college at Hickory, a private school that has now been consolidated with Lenoir college. Doubling her work and taking two years work in one, Mrs. Gaskins graduated with a teachers certificate at the head of her class in 1902. It was not until after her marriage that she obtained her A. B. degree.

Taught in Schools

Mrs. Gaskins then taught in the Buncombe county schools under S. F. Venable, later of Tulane University at New Orleans. While a teacher at the Black Mountain school she met and married Charles Whit Gaskins, druggist, of New Bern, in 1904. In 1907 Mr. and Mrs. Gaskins went from Black Mountain to New Bern, where Mr. Gaskins engaged in the coal business. In New Bern, Mrs. Gaskins was very prominent in civic and club affairs in spite of the cares of a home and four children. She did editorial work for both the daily newspapers of New Bern and for one state paper. She was organizer and first president of the Memorial Missionary society of the Centenary M. E. church. She headed a number of important war committees, including the Liberty Loan drives at New Bern, and was appointed to make an official call on war work at the White House during the Harding regime. Mrs. Gaskins was author of a popular war song, "On to Berlin," which was widely published in the papers of Paris, London and elsewhere. She became a member of the Canterbury Literary club while at New Bern and served for 3 years as worthy matron of the Craven chapter of the Order of Eastern Star.

MRS. C. WHIT GASKINS

Here for Health

In 1922 the Gaskins came to Asheville in an unavailing search of health for Mr. Gaskins. In 1924 Mr. Gaskins died, and a year later Mrs. Gaskins became a saleswoman with the French Broad Realty company. Mr. Gaskins was a 32nd degree Mason, and was past master of St. John's Lodge at New Bern, the oldest Masonic lodge in the state. During his two years in Asheville he was made Knight Commander of the Court of Honor, an honorary title.

After working for a while as a saleswoman, Mrs. Gaskins purchased an interest in the French Broad Realty company, and became an active member of the firm. Later with J. W. Nichols, Mrs. Gaskins organized the Nichols Realty company, 201 Flatiron building, of which she is secretary and treasurer. Mrs. Gaskins has put over some of the largest deals of recent years, being the sole agent in the sale of large holdings of the Hunnicutt estate on Biltmore avenue, to J. G. K. McClure, Jr., and J. G. Stikeleather, a sale involving $100,000 cash. She was also instrumental in the Frank Coxe-Buckner real estate deal, which involved the West Asheville business block containing the bank of West Asheville and the postoffice. This was a $150,000 transaction. Mrs. Gaskins specializes in the sale of homes, having proved that a woman is very successful in finding the kind of homes that other women like.

Organized Club

Mrs. Gaskins was organizer and first president of the West Asheville Community club, in 1923. She has recently been re-elected president of the club, and as head of the West Asheville club women recently put on a Better Homes week celebration in West Asheville that attracted wide attention. During 1926 and 1927 Mrs. Gaskins was state chairman of civics for the North Carolina Federation of Women's clubs, and was instrumental in having the Chamber of Commerce of Asheville offer a $100 civic award to the club of the state doing the greatest civic service.

For two years Mrs. Gaskins served as head of the finance committee of the Young Women's Christian association, having been refinanced and set upon a solid financial basis. Last year she headed the women's division for the Rhododendron Festival. Mrs. Gaskins is also past president of the Vance school Parent Teacher association. She is a member of the Saturday Music club and of the Order of the Eastern Star, but takes little active part in these organizations as her attendance at every department meeting of the West Asheville Community club requires all her time that can be given to [illegible] work.

Is a Methodist

Mrs. Gaskins is a regular at[illegible]ant at the West Asheville Meth[illegible] church, and is superintendent o[illegible] young peoples division. She is te[illegible]er of the Lambuth Bible class.

Charles W. Gaskins, Mrs. Gas[illegible] oldest son, is a student of the [illegible]versity of Tennessee Medical co[illegible] at Memphis. She has three o[illegible] children: Lucile, Robert Anders[illegible] junior high school students, and Do[illegible]othy, who will graduate from Vance school next month.

Mrs. Gaskins makes her home at 18 Vance Crescent, West Asheville.

THE NEWS PERSONALITY OF THE WEEK

MRS. LENORE GASKINS

Of course the West Asheville Community club would eventually have come into being anyway, but it seemed that time and circumstance decreed that Mrs. Lenore Gaskins should get the organization going.

Mrs. Gaskins came to Asheville from New Bern in 1922 and took up residence on Vance Crescent. Immediately she entered into community life. Hardly a year had passed before she gathered together eighty public-spirited women, and as result the club was formed and life given to a community force that has proved of definite worth through the nearly score years of the organization's existence.

From the work of these women, the men of the community received inspiration to start a brother organization and as result the West Asheville Men's club was established. Then it was not many years until the younger women of the community got the idea, and the Junior Rhododendron club was born. Little perhaps did Mrs. Gaskins realize that she was starting something that would result in the creation of three strong groups which would not only help put West Asheville on the map but which was to make outstanding contribution to the welfare of the city as a whole.

But the club happened to be the first, not the only community enterprise in which this new citizen became interested. She took part in P.T.A. activities, serving as president of the Vance unit during 1930 and 31; and later served as president of the Lee Edwards Senior High P.T.A. for two years when the city school system was going through what might be termed "the reconstruction period" and when valuable assistance was lent the city school board by that P.T.A. group.

While living in West Asheville, she taught a Bible class at the West Asheville Methodist Church. Mrs. Gaskins, who now resides at 120 Gracelyn road, is now affiliated with Central Methodist Church, where she is superintendent of the adult division of the Sunday school, and on whose board of stewards she is a member, being one of the four women among the 60 men serving on the board.

At one time Mrs. Gaskins was called the "unofficial Mayor of West Asheville". Had there been an election there is little doubt but that she would have been chosen the Chief Executive.

Actively interested in the work of the community chest, Mrs. Gaskins was head of the women's division in the city in the campaign one year, headed the West Asheville division for two years, and was general chairman on arrangements one year. Several years Mrs. Gaskins directed the West Asheville division in the Red Cross roll call.

She served as president of the Asheville Real Estate Board in 1940 and in November of the same year was invited and appeared on the speaking program of the annual meeting of the National Association of Real Estate Boards which was held in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Gaskins was born at Paint Fork, near Ivey, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. Anderson. There were seven other children: the late Dr. J. G. Anderson, John B. Anderson, Asheville attorney, W. K. Anderson, who is engaged in agricultural work with the Federal government at Marshall, O. E. Anderson, who is a farmer living on the old family plantation at Paint Fork; Mrs. R. C. Shelton of Charlotte, Mrs. W. T. Martin of Raleigh, and the late Mrs. J. E. Robinson of Ivey.

Mrs. Gaskins attended high school at Mars Hill, studied at Mars Hill college, and received her A. B. degree at Claremont college at Hickory. Taking up teaching she served as principal at Black Mountain, where she also later taught Latin at Holman Christian University.

It was while teaching at Black Mountain that she met Charles Whitfield Gaskins, who was a druggist there and whom she married in 1904. To this union were born four children: Dr. Charles Gaskins, who is in the army air corps; Robert, who is in war production work; Miss Dorothy, who is director of music at David Millard Junior high; and Lucille, who died in 1935. Dorothy, as many will recall, was one of the first members of the Blanchard Junior Music club.

Shortly after the family moved here from New Bern, Mr. Gaskins died. The widow, seeking a vocational career, thought she would "try her wings," as she put it, in the real estate field. Her efforts have been crowned with success from the beginning.

In 1924 she entered business with the French Broad Realty company, of which her brother, Dr. Anderson, was president. After the latter's death, she acquired his interest in the company and then for nine years was associated with the Nichols Realty company.

Then in 1933 she opened her own office in the Arcade building, with son Robert as a partner. She was the only woman maintaining a real estate office in the city at that time.

She operated in the Arcade until the coming of the Postal division the first of this year when her company moved offices to the third floor of the Haywood building.

During her realty career, Mrs. Gaskins's company has sold many fine homes, the firm, in fact, specializes in better homes. With her, the selling of residential property involves more than just a transaction in so much mortar and brick or physical property. As she puts it, "When we sell a home, we like to feel that we are selling peace, contentment and happiness. In that way we are not only contributing to individual welfare but to fine citizenship."

Friendship, Mrs. Gaskins holds, is her firm's biggest asset. She takes a friendly interset in her clients and in her relationship places their interest, problems and desires first. Confusius say: "He who wishes to secure the good of others has already secured his own."

The Gaskins' company also handles much business property in the city and county. The firm's clientele is composed of persons from the 48 states, Panama and the isles of the sea, Mrs. Gaskins proudly relates.

Asheville has a special appeal for those seeking a place for retirement, she points out. She believes that 1943 is destined to be the best year in real estate in this section since 1930, attributing this prospect chiefly to the recent coming here of the government agents.

SOCIAL

THE JANE K. MEADOWS AUXILIARY SOCIAL A SUCCESS—PLEASING PROGRAM RENDERED

Last evening from 8 to 10 o'clock the Jane K. Meadows Auxiliary of Centenary Methodist Church had a delightfully informal meeting in the social rooms of the edifice.

"Flu" conditions kept several members away and bereavements touched the families of a dozen or more. Not-with-standing there was a good attendance and the Auxiliary was charmed with the wholesome elevating entertainment provided. The program consisted of vocal solos by Mrs. John Guion, vocal duet by Mrs. Winslow and Mrs. Hayes, and a reading by Miss Shamburger.

After the program Presiding Elder Shamburger, Mr. T. A. Green, Mrs. Carrie Willis, Mrs. Scott and Mrs. M. E. Bryan, all guests of the circle, made witty, impromptu talks which were much enjoyed.

Delicious jelly with whipped cream and cake were served by Mrs. William B. Blades, Jr., Miss Louela Shamburger, Miss Charlotte Howard, Mrs. David Willis, Mrs. Henry Willis, Miss Anna Hanff and Mrs. W. F. Richardson.

Five new names were enrolled in this interesting, wide-awake Auxiliary circle. The number on roll now being 78 members.

The song, written especially for this organization was sung and a vote of thanks to the president proposed by Mrs. O. W. Lane in appreciation thereof. This expression entered deeply into the heart of the leader which she acknowledged in a brief response.

The following is the song of the Jane K. Meadows Missionary Auxiliary of Centenary Methodist church, New Bern, N. C. The slogan is "Carry On".

(Tune: "America")

Our Father guide our Band
To better understand
Thy love divine,
Teach us to do thy will
Thy purpose to fulfill
Direct our motives still,
All praise be thine.
Unite our hearts today
To "carry on" we pray,
In Thy great name.
Give us a vision true
Of service we can do
Our spirits to renew,
Thy love to claim.
Blessings our way attend
As oft our prayers ascend
To Three again.
Help us to reach old goal:
To bring each weary soul
Thy wonders to extol"—
Amen—Amen.

—Mrs. Whit Gaskins.

HERE'S A SONG TO THE BOYS WHO FOUGHT HUNS

Tuneful Little Ditty Dedicated Especially to The Sammies

The following verses can be sung easily to tune of "Yankee Doodle" and they are dedicated to the American boys who went to France in defense of Liberty:

"ON TO BERLIN"—(New Words.)

We've jarred the Kaiser hard they say,
His name and glory passes;
We did the stunt by canning all
Our pears and garden sasses.

CHORUS

"On to Berlin" was the cry,
"On to see the Kaiser,"
Sammies fought to win or die
And Wilhelm is much wiser.

White bread and hugar have been scarce
Of meat we have not tasted;
We pledged that we could food conserve.
And nothing should be wasted.

CHORUS

The folks at home just knit and saved
The Huns' advance to stop sir;
And they were all afleein' fast
When Yanks went o'er the top, sir.

CHOUS

When General Foch gave out the word,
Accordin' to his likin';
The Sammies broke into their lines
And sent the Huns ahikin'.

CHORUS

The Huns stopped short, were stunned to see
The flights our Sammies dare, sir;
For what they lacked on land and sea
They did up in the air, sir.

The Kaiser sat upon his throne,
"Hun Kultur", he unfurled, sir;
He dreamed that God had joined his ranks
And they would lick the world, sir.

But now the yanks watch by the Rhine
Light jolly is their mood, sir;
For Wilhelmn's fled across the line
And there he's sawing wood, sir.

MORNING, JULY 23, 1918.

NEW BERN LADY WRITES WAR SONG

"On To Berlin" Can Be Sung To The Tune of "Yankee Doodle"

A lady in this city has written the following bit of verse that is just splendid and we want all of our young people to learn the words that they may be sung when the times comes. She does not want her identity disclosed, but when anyone gives to the world such a gem as this the public should know who their idol is. However, we will keep it for the present.

The verse can easily be sung to the tune of "Yankee Doodle" and is dedicated to those who have gone from New Bern in defense of liberty:

"On To Berlin"

We've jarred the Kaiser hard they say—
The Boche never passes;
We did the stunt by canning all
Our peas and garden sasses.

Chorus—
On to Berlin, that's the cry,
On to see the Kaiser.
Sammies this will do or die,
And leave him somewhat wiser.

White bread and sugar has been scarce,
Of meat we have not tasted;
We pledged that we would food conserve.
And nothing should be wasted.

When Gen'ral Foch gives out the word
According to his likin',
The Yanks will sweep across the Rhine
And send the Huns a hikin'.

The Huns stopped short are stunned
The flights the Sammies dare, sir,
And what they lack on land and sea
They do up in the air, sir.

Tell folks at home to knit and save,
The Huns' advance will stop, sir;
And they will be a fleein' fast
When we go o'er the top, sir.

Sarah Anderson Jackson

A prayer song for our Soldiers.

Tune: "Holy, Holy, Holy."

O thou who slumbers not,
Neither dost thou sleep,
Thro the dark and weary night
Our absent soldiers keep.
Let thine eye keep watch the while Darkness hovers near,
Grant them thy peace
And keep boys so dear.

On march, in camp, or trench,
Or on the firing line;
Cause them to see thy face
And give them help divine;
Guard thou them on land and sea
And them that fly the air,
Wherever our boys,
Hold them in thy care.

Keep the home-hearts brave and true,
Stand thou beside;
Comfort the lonely ones
And let no ill betide;
May the cause for which we strive
Summon us today;
Give us the victory:
And bring world peace we pray.

Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins

June 1918

A PRAYER FOR TODAY

In the dawn of the holy day,
Teach us Our Father how to pray,
O Thou who dost the ravens feed,
Grant us we ask your daily need;
We pray only for what is best,
Let us today in Thee find rest,
May we delight to do thy will,
Thy purpose in us to fulfill.
Hold Thou, the light of thy great love,
Guide with our feet—remove
Ought that would lead our way astray.
Keep us from sin—O Lord today.

—MRS. C. W. G.

AS FRIEND TO FRIEND.

I want to feel at the set of the sun
That some little deed of love I've done.
And as I hollow my head to rest
I want to feel that I've done my best.

I don't want to think I'm sounding brass
Nor a tinkling cymbal as I pass;
But I want to know I'm sincere and true,
And the right motive prompts the things I do.

I know about me more than you know.
I know my secret thoughts, and so,
I'm better able to judge, you see
Whether or not I'm conscience-free.

I would rather be than seem to be—
I want to deserve what comes to me.
I would rather be unloved—unknown
Than wear a crown that is not my own.

I want to see in my fellow-man
As many virtues as ever I can
For in every one I chance to see
I behold the Man of Galilee.

I want to sing as the days go by
A song that lifts the soul to the sky
I hope you may live the whole day through
Just as I'm thinking I'd like to do.

—MRS. C. WHIT GASKINS.

THE NEW YEAR

At the close of this eventful year may a happier dawning appear, re-open the horizon of men everywhere to lighten and ease the weight of care.

A new and better year! How can it be? That we live henceforth unselfishly; make vital the truth that sacrifice enriches him in whose path it lies. A better year from force of culture. Nay, rather from a change of nature, desiring clean hands and a pure heart, though fame and wealth from us depart—by trampling down a system which can enrich one and starve another man.

The law of the Lord must blaze the way with the dawning of this glorious day; its splendor incomparable will be with brotherhood o fman from sea to sea. And all will think in terms of beauty, when sentiment prompts and not duty. In weary hearts, so faint and low the sweetest, rarest flowers will grow. As the scarlet sun sets in their glow, and the pink dawnings come and go, let us pledge our hearts, our hopes, our lives to pure and holy sacrifice.

The old bell in the tower, once the fire-bell of the city, which has not sounded in many years, will send forth today, we trust, notes of Christmas Joy and Victory to the people of Asheville. If the bell sounds, it will mean that the sum of sixty thousand dollars has actually been raised. This will enable us to redeem the church from the bondholders and give it back again, as a Christmas present, to our Lord.

This old bell was cast by the Clinton H. Meneely Bell Company, of Troy, New York, in 1884. It bears the following names on the side: E. J. Aston, Mayor; W. H. Penland, T. C. Westall, I. H. Garenflo, William Weaver, A. P. Sorrells, Aldermen; James P. Sawyer, Chief Fire Department.

The last time the bell sounded was when it was tolled for the funeral service of Mrs. James P. Sawyer, November 23, 1923.

Radio station W W N C is planning to broadcast the sound of the bell today, if the remaining amount of the sixty thousand dollars is raised.

VICTORY SONG

October—December, 1932.

1.

"Hail Christian Soldiers true,
Untaltering faith renew,
The triumph seal.
Rings out the challenge clear,
Rings it afar and near,
To whom our church is dear
Let it appeal.

2.

The fields are white, behold,
Our hearts turn to the goal
In Thy great name.
With conquering dreams and true
A vision we pursue—
The battle song renew
With hearts aflame.

3.

Triumphant prayers ascend;
Our faith and hopes we blend
In one great throng.
With Sixty Thousand won,
The Campaign nobly done,
Let paeans swell in one
GREAT VICTORY SONG.

—Mrs. Lenore A. Gaskins.

In order to take advantage of the generous offer of our bondholders, our check for sixty thousand dollars must be in Saint Louis by next Saturday, December 31, 1932. In order to reach Saint Louis on time, the check must leave Asheville not later than next Thursday afternoon. Consequently, let every person who has not yet paid his pledge to Dr. C. A. Raysor, the Treasurer of the Victory Fund, see him immediately and make payment in full. For convenience, some are making payment to Mr. Olin Auld, the regular church treasurer, in his office at the church.

IN FLANDERS' FIELDS.

* * * * * * * *

The cannon's ceased its savage roar,
Earth weeps for joy that war is o'er,
The larks still sing up in the sky,
No guns are heard as they go by
In Flanders' Fields.

Sleep on, your hopes are all fulfilled,
Brave comrade hearts, forever stilled,
Poppies bloom where you are sleeping
Poppies red, their guard are keeping
In Flanders' Field.

We caught the torch and held it high
Tho' eagles screamed as they passed by;
Sleep on—no more the startled yell
Shall rouse you. Sleep, for all is well
In Flanders' Fields.

Sweet and deep your sleep ever be
Who fought and died for Liberty;
Equal glory could not be won,
You held the front for Christendom
In Flanders' Fields.

We breathe a prayer for you and France
As homeward bound our ships advance;
As years shall come and years shall go,
May poppies for you redder blow
In Flanders' Fields.

N. C. CONFERENCE

LINES TO A DECEASED FRIEND—MRS. JANE K. MEADOWS.

Adieu

Thou much beloved friend adieu,
In some brighter clime we'll renew
Our friendship dear and thought for good,
The glory of your womanhood.
You leave with us an afterglow
Of peace and love on earth below;
For loss of such a life—so deep
So full of charity—we weep.

But if for any soul there be
A blessed immortality
There waits for you the crowning Hand
Out yonder in that morning land.
Thy noble art we emulate
Of living true—to elevate,
To cheer, to [illegible], to strengthen and to bless
The needy ones in their distress.

Then may we meet you later on
In that heaven to which you've gone?
To be forever with the Lord,
Redeemed promise of His word.
Rest you, in that haven above
Reward of faith and work and love,
Where the choirs their anthems sing
All praise to Him, our Lord and King.

"MILITES VALORES, SALUTAMUS

(VALIANT SOLDIERS, WE SALUTE YOU!)

The following greeting to the "Boys" was written for THE SUN-JOURNAL by Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins.—Ed.

Soldiers, who fought and would not yield,
But held your ground on every field
Our hearts delight, exult, we say
To welcome you back home today.
Your noble deeds our hearts have stirred,
We've read reports—scanned every word;
With admiration we have thrilled
Our fondest hopes you have fulfilled,
Great Milites.

The Triumph brings us here today
To throw bouquets upon your way;
To honor, laud and call you great
The greatest in the Old North State.
We offer now our richest toast
"To you who stormed the Kaiser's host;
Who held the torch of freedom high,
And never let the Hun pass by,
Noble Milites.

You live in France's memory,
As valiant Knights of Liberty,
Who saw the bleeding lily's plight
And vowed to rescue it from might,
Who did with steady tramp advance
Heroic in defense of France,
Who nobly put your armor on
And waged the battle 'till you won,
Brave Milites.

Thrice welcome Soldiers, every one,
Your work is well and nobly done;
Our hearts take up the vict'ry song,
May it resound afar and long.
Our tears for those whose stars are gold,
Their gallant deeds are not untold;
And may their souls have perfect rest
Who kept the faith of "Going West," Famed Milites.

Appreciation knows no bound,
In name and fame you are renowned;
You've rendered to the State it's due
And to Old Glory you've been true,
You dared to save Democracy
And liberate humanity.
From War's baptism you come whole
With not a stain upon your soul,
True Milites.

Again brave sons, we bid you stay
And rest with us, rest from the fray;
Content at last, the dawn is clear,
And bells of Peace are ringing near.
A thousand blessings brings the day,
That brings you here in proud array;
Our hearts and hopes without our fears
Are yours henceforth throughout the years,
Grand Milites.

THOUGHTS ABOUT GOD.

(The following little poem was inspired by a Bible reading conducted by Mrs. Alice Chapman, in Centenary Church Parlor, in March 1919)

What is it in the morn of spring
That makes the birds begin to sing ?
What power sends out the tender leaves -
A lovely web of verdure weaves ?
Who sends the gentle zephyrs sweet,
Refreshing us in summers heat ?
Who plants new hopes in every heart,
From which there is no life apart ?
It's God - I'm sure - I know it's God.

Who can reveal this little thing;
Secret of songs that wild birds sing ?
Who taught the Eagle how to soar ?
And whose voice stills the night winds roar ?
Whence, O whence came the violets blue
Fresh and sweet in the morning dew?
What artist touched the blushing Rose,
Whence its fragrance so rare ? Who knows ?
The sunflower turns and points to God.

He is the fragrance of the flower,
He is the charm of every hour;
He is the life of every breeze;
With his power he clothes the trees.
The mysteries of he hath;
He guides the lightning in its path;
These are but outskirts of his ways
The earth re-echoes with his praise;
Omnipotence belongs to God.

God is imminent, everywhere
About us in his wondrous care;
Laws which in natures world obtain
In spirit realms the same remain.
For him we need not search afar;
He is the light of every star;
His glory fills the earth below-
The spirits whisper soft and low:
"Bow down and worship, it is God."

OPTIMISTS LUNCHEON SONG - Lenore Anderson Gaskins - (TUNE: TILL WE MEET AGAIN)

Smile the while we greet the boys again,
Join this song that rings with glad refrain;
Let GOOD FELLOWSHIP obtain
AS WE MEET AGAIN.

Optimists smile in prosperity--
Drown all gloom in happy memory;
Optimism our watchword be,
TILL WE MEET AGAIN.

Lifes Crucible.

The Edelweiss grows on the Alps,
A flower coveted and rare;
Because to pluck it, searchers
Must the greatest dangers dare.

The pebbles on a stormy shore
Are polished and smooth and bright;
They lie ~~xxxxxx~~ unbleached on placid beach
Secure from the stormy night.

Learn thou the lessom of the tree;
A tiny seed is hid away,
It swells till its heart burst with pain
And bravely it meets the day.

Then upward, forever upward,
In storm, in calm or in rain
It rears its head ever Godward,
Tho each year brings it new pain.

Till at last the birds lodge in it
To find there a leafy home,
Where they guard each falling sparrow
And weep when their sorrows come.

Then more breaking, cutting, aching,
And the fibers split apart.
Beginning and end is the same;
Pain is always in the heart.

Man is made like the forest tree
With cold and fury and night;
Of softness no great thing can come,
Theres ever a battle to fight.

As silver in the crucible,
Aye, even as gold is tried,
Our Father tries each one of us
Till motives are purified.

He sits before the crucible,
Aye, the crucible of pain;
Until He can His own image
Reflect in the lives of men.

--- Mrs.C.Whit.Gaskins.

GOD IN THE GARDEN

After a care-infested day
Silently I steal away
To walk with God in the garden bower,
In the quiet twilight hour.

With bloom and bud a place of bliss,
Who knoweth the mystery of this?
A voice is heard beneath the sod:
"Be still and know that I am God."

The flowers blush, 'tis sweet to see
Their meeknes' and humility.
O, let me to the garden go,
To learn of Him the way to grow!

In the glowing of five o'clocks,
In the beauty of the phlox,
God speaks to me. Again he shows
His glory in the lovely rose.

In the zinnias varied tints
Are messages from Him and hints
And gentle whispers of His ways,
Past finding out thro all our days.

The golden glow and sun-flower, too,
Look up to Him who sends the dew.
Chrysanthemums and lillies prove
The height and depth of His great love.

Every charm within the bower
Is testimony of His power;
And swelling loud the paean of praise
The twilight choir its anthems raise.

O, thou who tends the garden fair
And fills it with a fragrance rare,
O watch and keep this heart o' mine,
And fill it with Thy love divine.

—Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins.

CHINA'S FAMINE

Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins

The famine spectre in China today
Stalks up and down in many a highway,
The picture—who can paint? so pitiful;
That they die for food by the city full.

O, the awful famine—hear the crying
Of the women and children,dying;
To their richest friend, America, they turn,
And surely this appeal no man can spurn.

The distance is great, the sight is tragic
But your money, sir, will help like magic,
'Tis God's test—to prove the rarity
Or abundance of your charity.

Only three bowls of soup—the merest bit—
For a day saves a life—just think of it!
Read the motto—repeat it to others:
"Within the four seas all men are brothers.

Dying daily, no trace of resentment
They even smile upon our contentment,
The 'Temple of Heaven' seems not to love them,
The air and sky are hungry above them.

Today you are asked by our committee
To give most graciously out of pity;
Your offering will the life pulse stir,
And China will know who ministers to her.

The Master said: "Who would greatest be Shall be servant of humanity."
And hearken again, "My peace I give,
My precepts accept," and let China live.

Obligation Song.

Tune, "Saviour like a shepherd.

Here we take our obligation,
Grant us Lord to be like thee;
Here we pledge our tuest service
In relief and charity.

Chorus.

At the Altar; At the Altar;
Breathe on us thy spirit now.
Make us earnest, keep us faithful,
Help us to fulfil the vow.

Lenore Anderson Gaskins.

VISION

Abiding faith and confidence trend always toward the goal
And vision always flies ahead—beyond the grasp of a soul—
The stream of fulfilled desire flows on and ever on it goes
For there is no lock in Him, the source from which all goodness flows.
"Who gives the eyes provides the light," was spoken by the sages
With a vision of the harvest, farmers sow with care the seed—
Sow and watch and wait the reaping —it's the vision prompts the deed
Leads us far into the future, shows us that the acorn small,
A mighty oak becomes at last, in grandeur—majestic, tall.
True man's vision ever widens and his faith grows ever clearer
With the process of the seasons, as Eternity draws nearer.
And the spirit leaps within us when suddenly we've spied
Something new, superbly splendid, signalling us o'er the tide.
Then the soul pursues its phantom, gaining momentum in flight
For the magnetizing vision floods the unseen way with light.
If Columbus-like, your vision o'er Atlantic's rolling might
You chase—aye follow and pursue thro' the hour of deepest night,
For ever and anon he caught its fitful flashes in the gloom
Until at length the dawn showed signs of an undreamed world in bloom.
Catch, O mortal, then a vision that must always go before—
Exceed your grasp to guide, to draw you onward forever more.

—Mrs. C. W. Gaskins.

THE SIMPLE LIFE

There is much labor under the sun
That profiteth not when it is done;
We must relearn the truth of the sage,
That all is vanity in this age.

For Solomon in his splendon rare
Was not arrayed as the lillies are;
Pleasures we buy the whole "soul tasking"
When Heaven can be had for the asking.

Our nerves and muscles too oft we strain
Some coveted glory to attain;
The bubbles burst, the snowflakes melt,
And not a thrill of triumph is felt.

For the ornate life, it costs so dear
In toil and worry, in nerves and care;
But the simple life, it is so free
The path of hope for humanity.

O, the fretting, the heartaches and tears
That mark our pathways thro' the years—
In the craze to "out-do." But hearts content,
Is the silent blessing from heaven sent.

Let us not forget the new-age thought
Of living simple—the world war brought;
And we will return to normalcy
When no longer slaves to things—but free.

We would see beauty in common things,
Know that from the humblest grandeur springs;
Hail the wild flowers from out the sod
A perfect gift from the hand of God.

Deluded mortals, awake to see
That lillies arrayed in their beauty,
Excel the pomp and glory of kings—
That the simple life forever sings.

—Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins.

Africa.
Air: "America."

For Africa we plead
The land of greatest need,
O God of hosts:
To the dark Continent,
Thy holy word be sent
And deepest night be sent
With trails of light.

-2-

They watch and wait, O Lord,
They hunger for Thy word
In Africa.
Then foreward in His name,
With spirits all aflame
To blot out sin, and shame
In Africa.

-3-

Send messengers of peace,
The multitudes release
From chains of sin.
Turn their dark to night to day,
Chase ignorance away,
Our hearts united pray
The hosts to win.

-4-

Wonderful scenes abound,
Unmatched its world around.
In Africa.
Haste to posses the land,
Convert the Moslem band
Led on by God's own hand
Save Africa!

OUR PLAYGROUNDS.

(By Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins.)

When Madame Curie was asked what impressed her most in our cities, east or west, she promptly replied: "The Grand Canyon—but greater, I found, were your parks and your children's city playgrounds."

Our own little city once had no place where hte children could gather to romp and race. There were clubs for men and women alway, but never a place for the children to play. The public conscience is awake today, and the leading topic is "The Child—and Play." Now we have parks and playgrounds and more—Community Service, and leaders in number galore.

Happy the children who gather each day to enjoy the games and supervised play; of our parks and playgrounds we love to boast; to promoters of these we offer a toast:

"Long may you live who thought of a way
To brighten our lives with games and play;
May your hearts keep young and ever

THE EMPEROR'S LESSON

(By M— C. W. G.)

There comes to my mind a story,
A story I had half forgot;
But whether I read or dreamed it
Most certainly it matters not.
It teaches a beautiful lesson
For young and old, for high and low
The moral is "kindness to all"
Which is a golden rule you know.

An Emperor in his plain clothes garb
Forth from his palace went one day,
Upon a walk which led him far
Out of his much accustomed way,
Which of two roads he ought to take
Pausing a moment to decide,
A petty army officer
Patroling near him he espied,
"Pardon me sir", the Emperor said,
Would you ~~mind~~ tell~~ing~~ me which road
Leads to Kalouga? and my thanks,"
"To the right," curtly—on he strode
Upon his beat—~~nor~~ glanced again
At the stranger—but puffed away
At his pipe vain—gloriously,
Inflated with conceit that day.

The Emperor smiled and spoke again,
"A question please?" will you tell me
Your position in the army?
"Guess," he replied full pompously
"Major?" "Lower," "Captain?" "not yet."
"Lieutenant?" "no, guess again,"
"Sergeant?" "at last you are correct,
Which did his haughty mien explain,
"Now its my turn, "the Emperor" said,
Can you guess what is my station?
"You are an officer then sir?"
(His spirit losing its elation).
"Lieutenant?" "higher," "Captain?"
"Up."
"Major?" "Go on" "It can not be
That you are Lieutenant Colonel
In service of his majesty!
"Up," "Gen'ral?" "commander-in-chief?"
"Higher" "His Imperial Majesty?"
"The very same," The officer
Bowed low in his humility,

When tempted to be rude
Or discourteous or unkind,
The lesson of His Majesty,
Would always come into his mind",
For kindness does the life enrich,
Tho' you be born to great estate,
And courtesy your due to men,
Tho you may guide the Ship of State.

JUNALUSKA.

Junaluska, thou gem of the mountains, where Nature's greatest charm we feel—
Thy grandeur sublime overwhelms me as close to thy great heart I steal
To refresh my soul and tired spirit in thy sweet living cristal wave.
Thous sprinklest my heart with freshness as in Nature's baptism.

In thy glorious mountain-framed mirror He has set His invisible Trone—
His steps are in thy paths, Junaluska;—dominion is His alone.
As the Persian built his altars and sought his God on the peaks,
So in Junaluska's mountains, in lake, in air and sky He speaks.

Thou woocst me, Junaluska, with the charm of thy crystal face;
In thy glorious mirror the mountains their majestic aspect can trace;
"A model for ART thou art"—inspiration comes with thy gentle breeze—
And the glory of the heavens with rapturous eagerness we seize.

No record of slaughter has profaned the name of thy clear limpid lake.
Thou art the renewer of our hopes and our dreams thou dost keep awake.
Fitted by nature art thou to be, the assembly ground of a great host—

And worshipping multitudes come to thee their soul's delight and proudest boast.

Nothing's lost—no bit of air, no beam, no stir of leaf—nor peak, nor plain—
Thy beauty holds us—Our orisons mingle with the stars—not in vain.
And the soul forgets her scheming hopes and knows no more her wonted pride,
But seeks unconscious Him—and offers her devotion at thy lake-side.

Pass not unblest this resting place. nor deem thy song shall die away.
In ennobling freshness its memory shall hallow thy path for aye.
In awe and wonder, Junaluska, on thy green-fringed shore I stand,
And my soul is moved within me for thou art my own, my native land.

Little Red Poppies

Wear the poppies — poppies red
In mem'ry of our heroic dead.
They are replicas of those that blow
In Flanders Fields where Thousands grow.
They guard the place where loved ones sleep,
Their vigil mid white crosses keep.
They call to mind the Flanders' dead;
Their sacrifice — The fight they led.
They speak to us of those who fell
For Freedom's cause we love so well;
They plead with me — they plead with you;
"Ye heirs of liberty so true."
O, poppies red this message take
To those who sleep for freedom's sake.
"Rest ye our brave, rest from the fray —
Our hearts keep faith with you today."
Sleep on, ye brave, peacefully sleep
Fragrant will poppies your mem'ries keep.
The loyal, true will ever wear
The little red flower from "over there."
Little red poppies bloom on for aye
We'll wait for you each Memorial Day,
With prayer that you may redder blow
Between the crosses row on row!

Prayer and Praise

Our Father, guide our band
To better understand
Thy Love divine.
Teach us to do Thy will –
Thy purpose to fulfill;
Direct our motives still,
All praise be Thine.
Unite our hearts to day
To "carry on," we pray
In Thy great name
Give us a vision true,
Of service we can do,
Our spirits to renew,
Thy love to claim.
Blessings our ways attend.
As oft our prayers ascend
To Thee again.
Help us to reach our goal;
"To bring each weary soul
Thy wonders to extol,"
Amen, Amen.

Mrs. Gaskins Organizing Women For Chest Drive

Will Meet With Majors Friday At Wachovia Bank Building

Mrs. Whit C. Gaskins, well known Asheville woman, who has been appointed general of the women's division of the Community Chest campaign organization, started yesterday on the work of selecting majors who will assist her in getting together 125 active women workers for this division.

Between now and Friday she expects to name five majors who will meet with her Friday morning at 9 o clock at the Wachovia Bank building for the purpose of taking up the selection of captains and lieutenants who will make up the main body of the section.

There will be a total of 125 women, representative of the entire city in this division, including the general, five majors, 20 captains and 100 lieutenants. The majors will select the captains and the captains in turn will select their lieutenants, each captain being assigned 5 lieutenants.

The residential territory of the city has been divided into districts by Wythe M. Peyton, engineer of the Community Chest organization, and a unit of the women's division will have charge of the solicitation in each district.

Mr. Gaskins, who was appointed general of the division by Chester Brown, organization chairman under Gilbert H Morris, the general chairman, is one of Asheville's most popular women leaders. She is secretary-Treasurer of the Nichols Realty company and has been active in civic affairs for many years. She resides in West Asheville where she is president of the West Asheville Community club, a civic organization of women in the western section of the city. She is an active member of the West Asheville Methodist church and teaches the Lambuth Bible class in that church. Mrs. Gaskins is also a director of the Y W C. A. and a member of the finance committee of that association which is one of the 12 social service agencies in the Community Chest. She is also a past president of the Asheville Parent-Teacher council.

Announcement was also made yesterday of the appointment of Fred L. Seely, prominent Asheville citizen, as chairman of the initial gifts committee of the Community Chest campaign organization. This committee is one of the most important units of the campaign group and both Chairman Brown and Chairman Morris feel highly gratified that they have been able to obtain the services of Mr. Seely for this post. Mr. Seely is one of the South's most successful business executives. He is one of the city's most active developers. He is the owner of the Biltmore Homespun Industries.

THE ASHEVILLE NEWS, Friday, December 14, 1951

MRS. LENORE GASKINS PASSES AFTER ACTIVE BUSINESS LIFE

MRS. LENORE ANDERSON GASKINS

Lenore Anderson Gaskins, appearing in our columns June 17, 1949. Mrs. Gaskins died last week while on a visit to relatives in Kentucky.

The subject for our News Personality this week isn't a member of the Optimist Club, but if a reporter or anyone else wants a tonic to raise the corners of his mouth, he would do well to pay a visit to the office of Mrs. Lenore Anderson Gaskins in the Haywood Building. Of course Mrs. Gaskins would try to sell the seeker after optimism a house and lot—or possibly just a lot—but if she could raise your barometric pressure a few points, it would be worth the price.

Whether you have fallen from a great height or just stubbed your toe along life's highway, Mrs. Gaskins is right there with a smile and a kindly word of advice and presto, your flat tires are inflated again for that long, hard pull in the business or social world. Such people are an incalculable asset to any community, but their praises are seldom sung until the bell is tolling and the pallbearers are gathered about the little lead box.

Lenore first saw the light of day in Madison county, where her father, D. N. Anderson, had a country estate. She was one of eight children and we reckon that farm work with that many willing hands was really a picnic. In addition to home duties, she took on night school and went through Mars Hill Junior College. Somewhat later Lenore won her B.D. at Claremont College in Hickory and her A.B. degree at Holman Christian Univernity ,then located in Black Mountain.

With college behind her, Lenore had several years' experience teaching mathematics and Latin, a dead language which became alive in her hands. Then she was made principal of the Black Mountain public school, which she liked a lot better than teaching.

In 1904, Lenore married Charles Whitfield Gaskins, who was named after the famous Methodist preacher. Mr. Gaskins was a Black Mountain druggist. Three years later the Gaskins moved to Newbern, his former home, and they lived there for 20 years. Lenore took a keen interest in teaching conditioned pupils in her studio at home.

The call of the mountains lured the Gaskins back to Asheville in 1924, but Mr. Gaskins who was a graduate of Bryant Stratton Business College at Baltmore, Maryland, passed away not long after their return.

Lenore decided that she could sell realty property and entered the real estate business with Dr. J. G. Anderson, later buying his interest. For eight years she was associated as secretary-treasurer with the French Broad Realty Company, which later became the Nichols Realty Company. In 1931 Mrs. Gaskins occupied the first office in the newly completed Arcade Building. Associated with her at that time was her son, Robert A. Gaskins, who is now with Dunn & Bradstreet, Inc., in Detroit.

Lenore is especially interested in the profession of real estate. She is the only woman who has maintained continuous offices in that field in Asheville for over twenty years. In 1940 she was president of the local Real Estate board and participated in the National Association program that year, when the realty men and women met in Philadelphia. She has been active in selling both business and residential property here ,some of her deals running an high as $100,000.00. During her years in Newbern and Asheville, Lenore has done considerable publicity work. During World War I she composed the song, "On to Berlin," which appeared in the Paris edition of The New York Times. She later received a letter addressed to "The woman who wrote 'On to Berlin,' Newbern, N. C."

We mentioned one of the Gaskins' sons. Another son, Dr. Charles W. Gaskins, recently completed his course in surgery and associated with Yarberry Hospital, Sevierville, Tenn. An elder daughter, Mrs. William J. Peeke, a well known pianist, lives in this city, and has taken a keen interest in musical activities. An elder daughter, Lucile A. Gaskins, passed away in 1925.

Lenore has three brothers, J. B. Anderson, Asheville attorney; W. K. Anderson, with the agricultural department of the Government at Mars Hill; and O. E. Anderson, who lives at the old family home in Madison county. A sister, Mrs. W. T. Martin, lives in Raleigh, where her husband, Dr. Martin, is recognized as one of the state's leading dentists. Another sister is the wife of R. C. Shelton, a Charlotte real esate man. Lenore's eldest sister, Mrs. J. E. Robinson, mother of Dr. Locke Robinson, of Mars Hill, passed away several years ago.

Lenore admits that her chief interest in Asheville is her church. She has been teacher for several years of the Charles Wesley Byrd Class of about one hundred members. She is a member of the Board of Stewards of Central Methodist Church. She also takes a prominent part in the social rebuilding homes at 44 Oak St., where women with broken lives and homes can go in an effort to make a new start in life. She enjoys working among the shut-ins, both spiritually and otherwise.

It is recalled that Lenore organized the West Asheville Community Club a number of years ago, and was one of its first presidents. At that time West Asheville had little community consciousness.

Mrs. Gaskins maintains a scholarship at Brevard College as a memorial to her daughter, Lucile.

Lenore has written a number of songs and poems, among them a dedication song for Central Methodist Church. Her Victory Song, composed during the depression when her church debt was paid off, is well known. She is active on the Community Chest, having served at one time as general chairman, West Asheville chairman and also chairman f the Women'n Division. She was chosen at one time as Red Cross chairman.

As to our city's growth, Lenore said: "I am most optimistic about Asheville's future. I have seen it grow from a small town and we are now getting to have lots of city habits. Our city is expanding in every line. Our industrial outlook is bright. Asheville has had some outstanding visitors in past years. To people who look wishfully for a town in which they can locate, Asheville offers the cream. We have the flower of all people from all parts of the country. There is every evidence that Asheville will move ahead. We have some of the most beautiful residential sections in America."

Speaking of her own firm, Lenore pointed out: "The Gaskins Realty Company is not just making its bread and butter, but we are selling contentment. More and more women are becoming interested in selling better homes." She bears this out by serving on the beautification committee.

Associated with the Gaskins Realty Company as secretary-treasurer is William J. Peek. Mr. Peeke is a World War II veterans, having se[illegible] in Europe in the Army [illegible] orps.

Historical Markers

Marker At Gaston's Grave To Be Unveiled Thursday

The Asheville Chapter, North Carolina Division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, Thursday will unveil a marble marker on the grave of Josiah Perry Gaston, who rose from private to lieutenant in the Confederate Army.

The ceremony will take place at 2 p. m. in the old Oak Forest Church Cemetery on Sand Hill Road east of Enka.

Gaston, a member of a family whose genealogy goes back 1,100 years, served in the "Rough And Ready Company" of Gov. Zebulon Baird Vance's Buncombe County men. This company served with the 64th Regiment of North Carolina troops. Josiah Gaston was the first to report on the Battle of Gettysburg on his return to Buncombe County. He was the grandson of a veteran of the American Revolution.

The first Gaston in direct line of descent of whom dates and locations are available was Jean de Foix He was a direct descendant of Gaston of Foix de Nemours (1489-1512). When King Louis IV of France issued the Edict of Nantes to suppress Protestantism, the Gastons were among those who fled to England, Ireland and later to the American colonies.

Records show that Robert Gaston, the son of William Gaston of Caranleagh Gloughwater, County Antrim, Ireland, and Olivet Lemon Gaston, was born about 1720 in Ireland. He married Margaret Logan and they came to Lancaster, Pennsylvania, about 1757. Ten years later, they moved to Lynch's Creek, 28 miles north of Camden, S. C., in Lancaster County where Robert Gaston died about 1787.

Robert Gaston's record showed him a patriot of the American Revolution and the father of eight children, the two eldest sons of whom served in the Revolutionary War. One of the sons was Thomas Gaston, Josiah Gaston's grandfather. The ninth child was Thomas Logan Gaston, who died in 1854 and is buried under the Central Methodist Church in Asheville.

One of Thomas Logan Gaston's sons was Josiah Gaston, who was born in 1832. He enlisted in Gov. Vance's Company F in 1861 and was promoted in 1862 to second lieutenant.

At the unveiling ceremony Thursday, the Rev. Richard Sommers will give the invocation and Mrs. Ottis Green, chapter chaplain, will lead the devotional. Mrs. Harry Love, director of the First District, UDC of N. C., will carry the Confederate flag and Mrs. E. W. Daniels, chapter president, will carry the U. S. flag, followed by Mrs. C. E. Case with the North Carolina flag.

Mrs. Asbury G Barnett will preside and Mrs. Edgar Duckworth, granddaughter of the soldier, will lead in the group singing. O. E. Starnes, Asheville city attorney and great-grandson, will be the speaker. Fletcher Starnes, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hal Starnes, and Amy Elizabeth Starnes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Starnes, will unveil the marker.

Greetings from the Sons of the Confederacy will be given by Ottis Green Jr. Mrs. M. F. Meredith will bring a message from the Fannie Patton chapter of the UDC.

Dr. Alexander Gaston of New Bern, a Revolutionary soldier, was a brother of Robert Gaston, Josiah Gaston's great-grandfather. Dr. Gaston's son, Judge Gaston, wrote the N. C. song, "Carolina," and Gaston County was named for him.

Edwin B. Gaston Owns Powder Horn Used In Three Wars

EDWIN B. GASTON of Arden and his powder horn which bears inscriptions showing it was used in the Revolutionary War of 1777, the War of 1812 and the Civil War of 1861-1865.

CANDLER—There are many interesting historical stories concerning Hominy Valley and some of the pioneer residents that with the passing of this generation will perhaps be forgotten. Ash. Cit.

For this reason they should be retold, as a reminder to the old generation and as interesting history to members of the younger generation.

One of the most interesting stories is that of Josiah Perry Gaston and his three weeks walk home to bring the story of the surrender of Genral Lee at Appomatox, Va., on April 3, 1865. 3-4-6 ✓

With his discharge in hand, Gaston started out to rejoin his wife, several small children and his parents, Thomas Logan and Prudence Doolan Gaston. The Gaston's had moved to Asheville from Lancaster, S. C., and had established a home on the banks of the French Broad River, near what is now Owen Field.

It was a long hard trip from Appamatox to Asheville on foot and the already worn shoes and clothing were soon in tatters. When Gaston reached the banks of the French Broad River, he called to members of his family to bring fresh clothing to him and after bathing in the river he buried the vermin infested rags he had worn on the long trek home before seeing members of his family.

His Mainstay

One thing for sure that had been his mainstay through the bitter fighting and the long trip home was his gun and a powder horn that had belonged to his grandfather, Thomas Gaston, who had served as an irregular in the Revolutionary War, and had been used in the War of 1812. This horn has been handed down through the years to the youngest son in the family and is now in the possession of Edwin Gaston, of Arden, son of Clarence Perry Gaston.

Of great surprise to Josiah Perry Gaston, was the bitter fighting that was still raging around Asheville and in the city proper. Asheville was being besieged on the South by Stoneman and Kirk's army was pressing in from the North. The battle had been in progress for days with women joining in the defense of the city proper. The Confederate General in Asheville had gone out under a flag of truce and made an agreement with the Union General to give them a three days supply of food for themselves and their animals, if they would withdraw from Asheville and not destroy the city.

Following the occupation of the city on May 17, 1865, the Union forces marched through the city to the North and immediately returned, pillaging and burning much property. Soon a Negro garrison was set up in the city and "burners" ranged far and wide destroying and seizing every they could find.

During this time many Hominy Valley residents hid silver and various belongings in the mountains and dug holes in the ground at night to bury things. Stories are still told of treasures that were never located again.

Hard Years Ahead

Many hard years lay ahead for Josiah Perry Gaston and his wife, Martha Elvira Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Jones of Hominy Valley. They had built a home for their daughter on the site of the present Enka Baptist Church. Ten children were born to this marriage. They were Thomas Logan, Russell Jones, Thomas Pinckney, Parley, Edwin Lamar, Mrs. Annie Ingram, Mrs. Minnie Fletcher, Mrs. Thomas Howie, Clarence Perry and Addie Alexander. They are all deceased but their children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren are numerous in all of this section.

Call To Arms

Josiah Perry Gaston felt the call to arms when war broke out in the spring of 1861 and was a volunteer in the famous "Rough and Ready Guards" which was organized in Asheville under the direction of Zebulon B. Vance, captain.

This group left Asheville May 3, 1861, hiking and camping out until they reached the railroad six miles East of Morganton. From there they went by train to Statesville for two weeks of drilling and then on to Raleigh. Later they went to Garreysburg in Northampton County where they became a part of the 14th North Carolina Regiment. They were known as Company "F".

This company participated in many battles and was regarded as a highly trained unit performing well under fire. Josiah Perry Gaston was wounded in the battle of Malvern Hills and became a prisoner of war. He later was exchanged and promoted to first adjutant in the 64th Regiment.

In a prisoner of war letter written to his wife on Dec. 22, 1863, Gaston stated in part", I have been sick some but nothing of a serious nature. The weather here is pretty changeable, at the present time very cold and plenty of ice. We are still at our old trade of eating and sleeping. As to being exchanged, the Good Lord only knows when that will be." He also commented on other pastimes of the group while in the Johnson Island, Sandusky, Ohio, prison. This letter is now a prized possession of Mrs. Allen Luther of Asheville, a granddaughter.

A Family Man

Josiah Perry Gaston was a great family man and older members of the family recall that he was a great lover of music. He often had groups of friends in to join the family for an evening of singing the old hymns and familiar tunes. He was active in all community affairs and was a Knight Templer in the Masonic Lodge. He died May 5, 1890, and was buried on the hillside overlooking his home. Later his body was removed to the Oak Forest Presbyterian Cemetery.

Asheville Citizen March 4, 1962

A PROMINENT MAN DEAD.

Mr. Perry Gaston Dies Suddenly of Heart Disease.

From Daily Citizen May 6.

Mr. Perry Gaston, a prominent farmer living west of the city on Hominy, and well and favorably known in Asheville, died suddenly at his home last evening. Yesterday he was in the city enjoying the best of health, and made arrangements with a party of friends to go on a fishing excursion to-day. He returned to his farm in the evening and ate a hearty supper with his family. At about 9 o'clock he walked out in the yard and when near the pump suddenly fell to the ground. Assistance was immediately at hand but before he could be carried into the house he was dead. The cause of his death was heart disease.

Mr. Gaston was 60 years old and leaves a wife and eight children. He was as well known perhaps as any man in Asheville and had made his home here for nearly all of his life. A few years before the war he went to California by the Panama route and returned just before the conflict began. He enlisted in the Rough and Ready guards and fought with them until he was captured by the federals. In an exchange of prisoners Mr. Gaston was among the lucky ones, but his freedom was of short duration. A week later he was recaptured at Roanoke island. After the war he returned here where he has since lived.

On Sunday last at the reunion of his old company he was present and subscribed to the monument to be erected. He was then in the best of spirits. Apparently he enjoyed good health up to the minute of his death. The deceased was a member of the West Asheville Improvement Company.

The funeral will be held to-morrow morning under the auspices of the Cyrene Commandery, K. T.

REPORT : ON THOMAS LOGAN GASTON MEMORIAL MARKER

Last year, summer and fall of 1988, you gave a contribution to purchase a marker for the grave of Thomas Logan Gaston. The purpose of this REPORT is to tell you that to this time we have not been able to find his grave. The story of this is in the following monograph which tells almost everything that we know about Thomas Logan Gaston and how he came from South Carolina to live in Buncombe County on the west bank of the French Broad River. It is a story of the Gaston family and descendants that live in Buncombe County.

As the Committee did not purchase a marker the committee would like for you to indicate your wishes as to the disposition of the money collected.

1. Return monry to contributor.
2. Make a Memorial Contribution to:
   a. Oak Forest Presbyterian Church
   b. Montmorenci United Methodist Church
   c. Central United Methodist Church
   d. Split the contribution as a memorial to Thomas Logan Gaston to each of the above.

Please advise Emily Sue Mallonee Dillard of your decision soon.

ASHEVILLE NEWS.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.

Thursday, March 30, 1854.

DIED,

At his residence, near this place, on the 24th instant, after a protracted illness, THOMAS L. GASTON, Esq., aged 49 years. Mr. Gaston was a useful citizen, a kind neighbor, and as a husband, a father, and a master, beloved and respected. But best of all, he was a christian. Two years before his death he embraced christianity, and during his long illness, his constant desire was to depart and be at rest. His last words were, "All is well."

THOMAS LOGAN GASTON

Born April 7, 1805, Spartanburg County, South Carolina

Died March 24, 1854, Asheville, Buncombe County, North Carolina

"Thomas Logan Gaston, born April 7, 1805, was the 9th child of Thomas Gaston and wife Sarah Nickels Gaston. He was the grandson of Robert Gaston and his wife Margaret Logan Gaston of Lynch's Creek, Lancaster County, South Carolina. Thomas Gaston married Sarah Nickles, daughter of James Nickles of Hanging Rock Creek, Lancaster County, South Carolina.

I Thomas Logan Gaston Married Prudence Doolen, April 16, 1829. She was born February 4, 1809 and died in October 1837. They had three children: Harriet Resiah Gaston born March 19,1830 and died August 1832.;Josiah Perry Gaston, born April 30, 1832 and Parley Clenny Gaston, born July 30, 1835, married Addie Moore. Josiah Perry Gaston Married Martha Jones on August 23, 1855, he died May 5,1890.

II Thomas Logan Gaston's second wife was Mrs. Margaret Walker of Spartanburg County, South Carolina and there were no children of this marriage. His home was on the West bank of the French Broad River, Asheville, N. C.

The home place of Thomas Gaston and his wife Sarah Nickles Gaston and their family was in Spartanburg County, South Carolina, a mile West of South Tyger River, and about two miles East of Reidville, South Carolina of the South side of the present road from Spartanburg to Reidville. Thomas Gaston is said to have been buried in the graveyard at Nazareth Presbyterian Church in Spartanburg County. No marker is found there except the engraved initials "T. G." on a field stone, located next to the grave of James A. Gaston. Thomas Gaston served in the Revolution as an irregular and the powder horn used by him is in the possession of one of the decendants in Asheville, N. C." (Edwin B. Gaston). The same horn was used in the War of 1812, and the Civil War (1861-1865 used by Josiah Perry Gaston) (Mary Lacy Byrd in the Asheville Citizen-Times March 4, 1962 wrote," Josiah Perry Gaston served with the"Rough and Ready Guards", Company F, 14th North Carolina Regiment as commanded by Zebulon Baird Vance, Captain. The group left Asheville May 3, 1861, hiking and camping out until they reached the railroad six miles East of Morganton."

Please note that the information down to this page and THE Mary Lacy Byrd story, is taken from the Mary Gaston Gee book "The Ancestry and Decendants of Amzi Williford Gaston II (1841-1911) of Spartanburg County, South Carolina,and published by the Author, Montibello Circle, University Station, Charlottesville, Virginia, 1944.

On September 19, 1957, Dorothy Moore Gaston wrote a paper on : "Josiah Perry Gaston"

"On August 23, 1855, J. P. Gaston married Martha Elvira Jones (daughter of Russell L. Jones and wife Mattie Owenby daughter of Porter Owenby and Martha Morgan, daughter of Rev. Perminter Morgan [fjc]) They lived in West Asheville on the bank of the French Broad River near Carrier Field (Now Asheville Race Track). In 1873 they moved to Hominy Valley to the farm house built by Russell L. Jones [father of Martha Elvira Jones]. There were ten children born to this marriage: Thomas Logan, Russell Jones, Thomas Pinkney, Edwin Lamar, Annie (Mrs. Charles Ingram), Minnie (Mrs. W. E. Fletcher), Mamie (Mrs. Thomas Howie- Mrs. James H. Brown), Clarence Perry and Addie (Mrs. Wayne Alexander).

Perry Gaston died March 5, 1890 and was buried in the family cemetery on the hill above his home (now Enka Baptist Church).

Later his body was moved by his family to the old Oak Forest Cemetery. His father, Thomas Logan Gaston, is bur ied under the present site of the Central Methodist Church in Asheville, N. C.."

[The preceding information copied from the paper written by Dorothy Moore Gaston and is dated September 19, 1957, a copy of which is in my possession (fjc)].

Taken from the Sunday, November 1, 1959, Asheville Citizen-Times, Asheville, N. C.

First from the paper written by Dorothy Moore Gaston, "Josiah Perry Gaston" written September 19, 1957 and from the above Asheville Citizen-Times story published, Sunday November 1, 1959 we have repeated for the second time, "THOMAS LOGAN GASTON, WHO DIED IN 1854 AND IS BURIED UNDER CENTRAL METHODIST CHURCH IN ASHEVILLE."

Relating to the two statments, "Thomas Logan Gaston is buried under the Central Methodist Church in Asheville," this writer has searched records for information about, Thomas Logan Gaston, some of the things that he did while living on the west bank of the French Broad River, here in Asheville and Buncombe County and FOR the answer to the question, Is Thomas Logan Gaston buried under Central Methodist Church in Asheville?

The answer to this question, we have thought about for years upon reading the statment "Thomas Logan Gaston is buried under Central Methodist Church!" The church which began in 1837 with the first building on the present lot on Church Street in Asheville. The first church building was a frame structure and was erected on land donated by Colonel James M. Alexander. The building located on the original lot 115 1/2'X 280 1/2' on Church Street. The building was completed before the deed from Colonel Alexander was recorded Book 22, page 359. 1839.

Sondley, "A History of Buncombe County" p 707 "About 1857 this little house was replaced by a brick house of much larger dimensions. This last, after being remodelled several times, was replaced in 1903 by the stone edifice which is now the northern portion of the present Central Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the present southern portion having been added about 1926."

Sondley, p 713, "In 1865 the piece of ground on which now stands the southern portion of the building of Central Church of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was vacant,having been used as a hitching lot for the horses of attendants on services at that church who came on horseback. In that year this piece of ground was made the cemetery for that church. There had also been some burials in the Trinity Episcopal Churchyard on Church Street south of and immediately next to that church and some on the same side of Church Street just north of the Presbyterian Church. All these graves on Church Street, except that of James Patton in the Presbyterian churchyard, were removed to Riverside Cemetery when that cemetery was established in 1885 by the Asheville Cemetery Company, Incorporated, on Aug 4, 1885. In this way it came about that many graves in Riverside Cemetery contain bodies which were removed to it from other burying grounds and some of which had been removed twice."

The question, Where is Thomas Logan Gaston burried? This has been a persistent one for members of the family.

One member was looking at the burial records at Riverside Cemetery with the Cemetery Caretaker when he came across an entry, which he thought could be that of Thos Gaston. The Cemetery showed this to be for grave number 5, Section K Lot Number 141. This information was passed on to me. I called Mr. Bob Creighton the former Cemetery Caretaker, who had retired. Mr. Creighton agreed to meet me at the Riverside Cemetery and to show me the grave number 5. Meeting me at the office he looked up the record and told me that the burial had taken place March 1, 1951 and was handled by Berryman. He then took me in his jeep to the grave site. Grave number 5 has no marker to indicate a burial on the spot. In Lot 141 Section K there are some other graves including: W. C. Stradley 1855-1904; Ruth Stradley 1863-1933; J. Howard Case 2-10-1911; Margaret Phillip 1904; W. L. Phillip 1874-1920 and others. The unmarked grave Number 5 was at the base of an Oak Tree. Mr. Creighton indicated to me no knowledge except as contained in the entry record.

Later I stopped at Penland and Sons Funeral Home, Inc. and talked with Joe Penland giving him the date of March 1, 1951 and the name of Thomas Gaston, requesting that if possible he check back the records of March 1, 1951 to see if there was a record of the former owner Berryman Funeral Home, Asheville, N. C. moving the grave of Thomas Logan Gaston from Central Methodist Church to Riverside Cemetery and reburying. Some time later upon checking with Mr. Penland he stated that he had been unable to find anything. (This took place sometime before the Penland Funeral Home was burned.

With the information from Mr. Creighton that Thos Gaston was buried in grave number 5, after a discussion of family members, it was felt that a marker should be bought and placed on the unmarked grave of Thomas Logan Gaston in Riverside Cemetery. From this family members were contacted and money was collected and deposited by Emily Sue Mallonee Dillard (Mrs. Olin Dillard). The money was collected last summer and fall, 1988 and deposited. In turn I was ask to contact Mr. Whitmire in West Asheville and place an order for the marker. This I did and after talking with Mr. Whitmire decided I should make a final check at Riverside with Mr. David Olson, who is the current Riverside Caretaker.

With Mr. Olson the writer looked at the entry records for internment at the cemetery which are placed in alphabetical order, looking for Thos Gaston. Mr. Olson found an entry for grave 5, Section K Lot 141, made 3-1-1951 with the notation of funeral home, Berryman. He next looked at the grave plot sheet for grave 5 and noticed the grave name of Thos Geata. Looking back at the first record the hand written entry appears to be Thos Gasto to which an n has been added as the ink of the pen is a shade different. This difference of spelling causes him to call the Register of Deeds at the Court House record room to check the public records for a death March 1, 1951, with services provided by Berryman. The record room clerk found a microfilm Certificate of Death No. 176 in the name of Thomas Gaeta, date of death March 1, 1951, age 56, street address 26 Woodfin Place, never married, occupation tailor, Informat Fred Moore, 26 Woodfin Place. The Death Certificate was signed by E. E. Cocoran, M.D. , Funeral Director Berryman Funeral Home, Asheville, N. C. . Later this writer obtained a copy of the Certificate of Death, but first called Mr. Whitmire to cancell the order for the grave marker. In turn called Emily Dillard and "Sister Gaston" Pearl Connelly (Mrs. L. L. Connelly)

Immediately, Emily Sue wanted to write checks and return the collected money to the contributors. After confering with "Sister", it was decided that further search should be made, first at Central Methodist for membership records. A general remodeling of Central Church's business offices and interior is currently taking place. The oldest memberhip record did not show anything and until the church remodeling is complete other records available. Talking with Mrs. Ruth Bishop revealed that there might be a crawl space under the left front entry to the church sanctuary, with entry made from the Church basement Boy Scout room through a window. Earlier the writer had looked into the window with a flash light, but vision was limited. During the month of February the writer after talking with the Church Business manager, took a ladder with a flash light and an electric cord and light and crawled into the 15' X 40' crawl space. The height required one to crawl. Looking over thearea I saw lots of bricks, blocks, unused foundation building stones and rubble. I was unable to see anything that I thought was a grave marker.

Earlier in this monograph quotes from Dr. Sondley were used, which said, "All these graves on Church Street were moved to Riverside Cemetery, in 1885." In this writing about my visit with Mr. Olson, we looked at some of the records of transfers, but at the time did not notice any from Central Methodist. (A more thorough check of this perhaps should be made)

Looking at Pack Library old newspaper mico film, I located and made a copy of the" ASHEVILLE NEWS", Asheville N. C. dated Thursday March 30, 1854:

"Died, At his residence, near this place on the 24th instant, after a protracted illness, Thomas L. Gaston, Esq., aged 49 years. Mr. Gaston was a useful citizen, a kind neighbor, and as a husband, a father, and a master, beloved and respected. But best of all, he was a christian. Two years before his death he embraced christianity and during his long illness, his constant desire was to depart and be at rest. His last words were, "All is well."

It is interesting to note in this write up of Thomas Logan Gaston's that "two years before his death he embraced christianity." He must have been a large land owner as he lived on the French Broad River, and on September 6, 1847 he gave land for a church. In the Sunday Asheville Citizen-Times, October 8, 1972 the following story was told: "TRINITY METNODIST CHURCH TO MARK 125TH BIRTHDAY."

"A deed by Thomas L. Gaston on Sept. 6, 1847 provided land for a church,"for the benefit of the neighborhood" in a tree covered hilltop along Haywood Road. George and Peter Miller were named trustees, and they provided land for a parsonage. A small frame building was erected, called the "Miller Meeting House". It was used for Sunday services and day school, and ministers of various denominations preached there. In 1870 James Buttrick of Epworth, England joined in an effort to make the Miller Meeting House larger and have it organized into a Methodist Church. Through his influence, the church was deeded Feb. 17, 1871, to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South and the name was changed to Balm Grove Church because of the Balm of Giled trees growing on the lot. In 1952 the name of the church was changed to Trinity Methodist Church."

To this time this writer has not found a date that Thomas Logan Gaston came to Buncombe County to live on the West bank of the French Broad River. From the Grantee record of the Register of Deeds.

Buncombe County, N. C. the writer found the following records:

Thomas Logan Gaston; Record of public service.

April 16, 1792, Buncombe County was organized, Thomas L. Gaston was not here as he was born April 7, 1805 thirteen years later. When he was 24 he married Prudence Doolen on April 16, 1829, she was 20 years old. Their first child born 1830 died. The second child Josiah Perry Gaston was born April 30, 1832 when Thomas was 27. Parley was born July 30, 1835 when Thomas was 30. The first deed to Thomas was in 1839 when his age was 34. Thomas first wife Prudence Doolen died in 1837 when Thomas was 32. I have found no record of when he married his second wife Mrs. Margaret Walker. It is possible that she accompanied Thomas with his young sons Perry and Parley to the Banks of the French Broad River in Buncombe County in North Carolina. With Thomas first deed in 1839 the County was only 47 years old since organization, and Thomas was only 34 years old. With his new wife and young sons Thomas came into a mountain land.

From the number of deeds listed earlier in this monograph it is apparent that he was successful as the deed in 1847 was for 800 acres. It was also in this year that he gave land for what is now Trinity Methodist Church.

George A. Diggs, Jr. in 1935 book "Historical Facts Concerning Buncombe County Government" lists on page 9, Partial Roster of Officials Of Buncombe County - Prior to 1872, in 1851 the County Surveyor was Thos. L. Gaston. Also on page 198 of the book from the Munutes of the Board of Justices, from Minute Book "C":

Friday morning, April 11th, 1851:

Court met. Present the Worshipful I. B. Sawyer, William R. Murray, and John Thrash, Esquires.

Thomas L. Gaston, who has been appointed Corner for the County of Buncombe comes forward and duly files his bond in the sum of Two Thousand Dollars, Hugh Johnston, security."

These Minutes signed by R. B. Vance, Clerk, dated April 11th, 1851

From these remarks we see that Thomas Logan Gaston started the pattern to be followed by his son and grandson in years to come of serving in the local government.

Some seventeen months before his death March 24, 1854 on October 16, 1852 Thos L. Gaston drew a will which was witnessed in the presence of William Williams and J. R.L. Gilliland. This will was probated in the Spring Term 1854.

"In the name of God Amen

I Thomas L. Gaston of the county of Buncombe and State of North Carolina being in a declining state of health, but of sound and disposing mind and memory do make ordain and establish this my last will and testament, in manner and form following:

First I will and bequeath to my beloved wife Margaret E. Gaston my silver watch, 1 bed bedstead and the necessary furniture thereof, my buggy harness, the umbrella belonging to it and the mule which I usually drive, called Logan one bureau her choice, a traveling trunk also her choice of those I have

Secondly I will bequeath devise and direct that all the balance or remainder of my property both not personal or mixed be sold by my executor; the land on a credit of one two and three years with interest from the day of sale; and the personal or mixed estate on a credit of twelve months, that my wife Margaret E. Gaston be paid by my executor within one month of the time of my decease the sum of thirty seven dollars and fifty cents, if there be that sum on hand, if not as soon as the sum can be collected, and that he loan out at interest to be paid quarterly the sum of twenty five hundred dollars, and the sum of thirty seven dollars and a half, the interest arising from said sum be paid to my said wife, M. E. Gaston quarterly making one hundred and fifty dollars annually during the time of her natural life or widowhood, And all the rest, residue, and remainder of said sale together with the money due me and on hand at my death after paying all my just debts be divided between my two sons Josiah P & Parley C. Gaston. Parley C. receiving two hundred and twenty five dollars the most, I having advanced that sum to Josiah P. when he started to California and wish him charged with the sum without interest.

Thirdly I will and devise that at the death or marriage of my wife Margaret E. Gaston the twenty five hundred dollars directed to be placed at interest during her life or widowhood be collected and equally divided between my sons J. P. & P. C. Gaston,and it is my will and desire that in case either of my said sons should die, during my life or during the life or widowhood of my wife, having a child or children lawfully begotten then such child or children receive such part or portion as the deceased parent would have received under this will if living, Lastly I hereby appoint Joshua Roberts, Esqr sole Executor of this my last will and testament, bereby revoking all former wills by me made in writing whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed by seal the 16th day of October A. W. P. GEARING, staff captain of Asheville Salvation Army, was born in Woburn, Mass., of parents who both were officers in Salvation Army before his birth.

His wife's parents also were Salvation Army officers, her father being one of the leading executives of New York headquarters. Mrs. Gearing's grandparents, too, were Salvation Army officers, so if the Gearing boys —Donald and Herbert—should enter Salvation Army work, they will be the fourth consecutive generation on Mrs. Gearing's side of the family and the third on Mr. Gearing's side to carry on the tradition.

Donald, a student in Asheville senior high school, plays solo French horn in the school orchestra. Herbert is a student at David Millard school.

Enters Training School

Capt. Gearing finished his high school education in Wilkinsburg, Pa., and at once entered the Salvation Army Training college in New York, graduating April 20, 1914. Commissioned as an officer shortly afterward, he was a solo cornetist with the famous New York staff band which went to the International congress in London. He later played on the Atlantic territorial band.

Capt. Gearing married Miss Myrtle Evans, daughter of Col. and Mrs. William Evans, in Pittsburgh in 1915. The Gearings came south 12 years ago, serving at Birmingham and Atlanta before coming to Asheville two and one-half years ago. At Birmingham, Capt. Gearing was the youngest officer in the whole territory to be second in charge of a division, being divisional secretary.

He is chairman of Asheville council of social agencies and is a director of Kiwanis club. His Kiwanis club activities constitute Capt. Gearing's chief diversion from his work which he describes as a seven-day job.

Live in West Asheville

Indeed, for a time after they came here, the Gearings lived in the citadel, 177 Patton avenue, and being subject to call at all times virtually were on duty 24 hours daily. The strain was too great, however, so they moved to 1152 Haywood road, West Asheville, where they now reside.

The rewards for such unremitting labor come in the spiritual "harvest," since Capt. Gearing's efforts were responsible for 200 conversions in 1931, many among transient men. Services of some sort are conducted at the Army citadel nightly. Sunday school classes and young people's meetings are held each Sunday morning and adult religious services each Sunday morning and evening. Once a month, Capt. Gearing conducts services at Craggy convict camp, where he has obtained numerous conversions.

The citadel is now operating a 10-room annex as a shelter for transient men. Capt. Gearing's hearty cooperation with other welfare agencies of the city has figured largely in the success of relief efforts during the period of worldwide economic stress.

Sand Hill Girl Winner In State Competition

Miss Jimmie Margaret Gilliam, 16-year-old Sand Hill High School senior, is the state's new farm and home electric contest champion.

The blue-eyed president of the Sand Hill Senior 4-H Club yesterday was announced the winner of the 1951 contest during the closing session of the North Carolina 4-H Club Farm and Home Electric Congress held in the Carolina Hotel in Raleigh.

"I'm the most excited and happiest girl in North Carolina at this moment," gasped the young electrical expert when she was presented as the new state champion yesterday.

Miss Gilliam, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Gilliam of 26 Oak View Road, West Asheville, will represent North Carolina in the competition for national honors during the National 4-H Club Congress in Chicago November 25-29.

Western North Carolina youngsters also captured all but one of the top awards available in the districts covered by the Carolina Power and Light Company and the Nantahala Power and Light Company, two of the six power firms which sponsored the contests and the state-wide Congress.

Miss Gilliam topped a field of approximately 3,000 boys and girls who participated in the contest with their electric projects during this year.

David Young Gillespie of Burnsville, RFD 2, member of the Bald Creek 4-H Club, won the Carolina Power and Light Company's district title. This district covers 30 counties in WNC and eastern North Carolina served by the firm.

Runnerup to Gillespie was Miss Mattie Sue Medford of Waynesville, RFD 2, member of Haywood County's Crabtree 4-H Club.

Nantahala Power and Light Company's district honors were won by Guy Roberts and Ella Rhea Hooper, both of the Robbinsville 4-H Club.

Runnersup were Janet Holden of Glenville in Jackson County and Horace Elzey of Robbinsville.

Only honor which mountain 4-H Clubbers didn't take was that of second place in one district competition.

MISS GILLIAM

Nantahala Power's territory covers Jackson, Macon, Swain, Cherokee, Clay and Graham counties.

Miss Gilliam's prizes include a free trip to the Chicago meeting. Her expenses will be paid by the Westinghouse Educational Foundation.

She and Gillespie each were awarded a $100 scholarship toward a college education.

Miss Medford was awarded a $50 watch.

These prizes all were presented by L. V. Sutton, president of Carolina Power and Light Company.

John Archer of Franklin, president of Nantahala Power, presented $100 scholarship awards to Roberts and Miss Hooper, and watches to Miss Holden and Elzey.

Miss Gilliam, serving her second term as president of her 4-H Club, won the Carolina Power and Light Company's district championship in 1950.

She recently was elected vice president of the Sand Hill High School Future Homemakers of America chapter also.

In the national competition she'll have the opportunity of working for one of six $300 scholarships which will be awarded by the Westinghouse Foundation.

Jimmie Margaret Gilliam Wins State Recognition In Farm And Home Work

BY BILL LINDAU

If Jimmie Margaret Gilliam hadn't won the state 4-H Club electrical projects contest, her work still would have left a lot of light, literally and figuratively, in the lives of a lot of people.

Last Tuesday in Raleigh the 16-year-old Sand Hill High School senior from Oakview Road was declared to be the "4-H Club member who made the best use of electricity" on the farm and in the home during 1951.

This was announced during the North Carolina 4-H Club Farm and Home Electrical Congress which is sponsored by six power companies, including the Wentinghouse Educational Foundation.

It means an expense-paid trip to the National 4-H Club Congress in Chicago to represent the state in the national finals of the electrical contest and a $100 college scholarship.

What her work has meant around the house was expressed this way by her mother, Mrs. J. N. Gilliam:

"Even if Jimmie had not won a prize of any kind, she and the family have been well repaid for her work.

"The new laundry area has taken the 'blue' out of 'blue Monday'."

The way she fixed up the laundry place in her folks' home is one of the things that helped her win the top state award, and also is illustrative of the work that has given her two district titles in the last two years.

The district refers to the Carolina Power and Light Company's service area of 30 counties in Western North Carolina and the Eastern part of the state.

As far as "blue Monday" is concerned, that was the most important single improvement Sand Hill High School's 4-H Club president achieved.

But that was just one of the things on her record which covers an impressive variety of subjects.

In the electrical field, she also:

Completely wired the family barn.

Helped install an electric fence.

Gave four demonstrations on care and repair of lamp cords before members of as many clubs.

Planned the 4-H Farm and Home Exhibit for National 4-H Achievement Week which will end next Saturday.

Made two lamps out of wood and electrical fixtures for her room at home.

She still, however, has found time to handle the office of 4-H Club president (her second consecutive term), vice president of the Sand Hill chapter of the Future Homemakers of America, secretary of the school's Forensic League, captain of the Safety Patrol, treasurer of the senior class, serve on the staff of "Homespun," the Student Council, Journalism Club and Family Life Council.

In spite of this rather full extracurricular life, Jimmie Margaret also is finding it quite possible to accomplish the not commonplace achievement of completing a standard four-year high school course in three years.

She played varsity basketball, incidentally, her first two years at Sand Hill.

The job she is doing in 1951, however, is just part of the story.

Besides her concern for electricity, her 4-H Club projects include: food preparation, clothing, health, frozen foods and home beautification.

As a sophomore, she served as vice president of her class, reporter for her FHA chapter, and vice president of the Forensic League.

In 1949, she carried four major 4-H projects—food preparation, clothing, health and room improvement.

Last year she added floor sanding to the list, before booosting her program to this year's current seven projects.

In her electrical work this year she also helped install the barn lights for night milking, and electric brooder and electric lawnmower, and the official report via the Associated Press also notes that, in the house, besides using electricity for laundering, she also applied it to ironing, floor sanding, heating water and to new lamps.

THIS SETTING is a natural for Miss Jimmie Margaret Gilliam (left) of West Asheville. She's the winner of the 1951 State farm and home electrical projects contest for 4-H Club members. Miss Gilliam and Miss Wynelle Ford of Candler, RFD 2, both members of the Sand Hill Senior 4-H Club, were fixing up this exhibit in a downtown Asheville window for 4-H Club Achievement Week when The Citizen photographer made this picture.

The job she did on the home laundry stands out for its versatility.

Under the old system, the ladies of the Gilliam family carried water by hand to tubs that stood in a dark corner illuminated by an extension cord.

Jimmie Margaret not only built an electric outlet and installed an improved wiring system for the corner, but she also personally installed the water pipes and a mixing faucet that fed the two new square tubs which she put on upright stands.

By way of rounding out the job, she white-washed the walls to improve the lighting effects of her improved lighting system and installed a rack to support clothing that had just been ironed.

Chief guidance came from her parents, reports Burwell Smith, agricultural relations chief for the Carolina Power and Light Company's western area.

Aiding her also were Assistant Home Demonstration Agent Mary Smith and Assistant County Agent Hal Reynolds, who direct 4-H Club work in Buncombe for the State College Extension Service.

Mrs. Smith, who works with the 4-H girls, pays respect to Jimmie Margaret's ability as a leader, also:

"Jimmie Margaret has done an excellent job as president of the Sand Hill 4-H Club, especially in guiding her club into doing things as a group.

"You can always depend on her to do any job you ask her to do.

"Her Farm and Home Electric record book was cleverly written and illustrated. She did an excellent job in tieing in her electric project with her home activities.

"Part of the successful completion of her work was due to the guidance and backing given by her parents."

One sample of her work, incidentally, is in full view of any citizen who wants to see it.

She and Wynelle Ford of Candler, RFD 2, a fellow member of the Sand Hill Club, made up the 4-H exhibit that is on display through this week in the show window of the Carolina Power and Light Company building on Patton Avenue.

It's one of three commercial displays being held in connection with National 4-H Club Achievement Week which will come to a climax Saturday morning in the Buncombe County Achievement Day program in the Courthouse.

Penney's and The Man's Store are carrying the two other exhibits.

The contest in which Jimmie Margaret and some 3,000 other 4-H members participated this year was sponsored by the Carolina Power and Light Company, Nantahala Power and Light Company of Franklin, Tide Water Power, Virginia Electric and Power and the Westinghouse Educational Foundation.

Carolina Power and Nantahala which serve the mountain area also sponsor the 4-H contests in their respective sections.

Besides this, the firms conduct demonstrations periodically during the year for the boys and girls the rural areas.

Last year, for instance, Smith gave lighting or lamp-cord care and repair demonstrations in Haywood, Buncombe, Yancey and Mitchell counties, and a group in Madison saw a Westinghouse educational movie on electricity and its uses.

Four demonstrations also were worked out by the power firms for 4-H Club camps during the summer.

They covered generation and distribution of electricity, practical application on farm, featuring equipment boys and girls could make themselves; lighting and lamp construction; and ironing.

"Believe it or not," says Smith, referring to the ironing demonstration, "the boys ate this up, especially the opportunity to use the ironer."

On second thought, however, it might be simply one small way the boys are trying to compensate for the fact that a 16-year-old girl proved that such matters as wiring a house or repairing an electrical gaget no longer constitute the traditional monopoly of the muscular male.

Miss Gilliam Wins 4-H Club National Award

Sand Hill Girl To Receive Scholarship

CHICAGO, Ill. Nov. 27.—Miss Jimmie Margaret Gilliam, 16-year-old Sand Hill High School senior from West Asheville, was named today as the winner of the 1951 National 4-H Club Farm and Home Electric Contest.

The announcement was made Tuesday during the National 4-H Club Congress here.

Miss Gilliam, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Gilliam of Oak View Road and president of the Sand Hill Senior 4-H Club, will receive a $300 scholarship.

The young electrical expert is attending the Congress because she won the North Carolina 4-H Farm and Home Electric Contest.

To gain national honors she had to top a field of all the rest of the state champions from throughout the nation.

Miss Gilliam, who is completing a standard four-year high school course in three years, started on her road to the national title by winning the Carolina Power and Light Company district competition in 1950. This district covers all the state's counties which the company serves.

Her award was based on the general all-around use she made of electricity in her home and her father's farm.

Her performance in the state competition had won her a $100 scholarship before she went to Chicago last Friday morning.

G. Burwell Smith, CPDL agricultural agent, said her outstanding work in her year-long program was her conversion of the family laundering corner from a laborious old-fashioned operation into one that was fast and efficient.

She eliminated the job of carrying water to the laundry tubs by hand by installing pipes for running water. She revised the drop-cord lighting system into modern electrical illumination, and white-washed the walls of the corner to add brightness.

The Police Review

VOLUME 6 MARCH, 1927 NUMBER 3

WILLIAM R. GLENN
Patrolman
ASHEVILLE, NORTH CAROLINA

Officer William Glenn born October 1st, 1884, in Asheville, where he has resided all his life and to all intents and purposes intends to stay until he has finished his useful career.

He is what is known as a live wire officer, which may be accounted for by the fact that he was an electrician before coming with the department and became thoroughly charged. In any event he is a live one, always using all his talents and energy to keep crime down to a minimum.

He says he likes police work and gives as the reason, that it is fascinating to run down the law-breakers and bring them to justice.

He is a great advocate of discipline and believes that no department can be run efficiently without it. He is proud of his own department and takes great pleasure in following the advice of his chief.

He believes that a higher calibre of men could be brought into the police work by offering a more liberal compensantion for their services.

He says the department could be made more efficient in the prevention of crime by the police officers being more thoroughly backed up by the courts.

On December 1, 1925, he was forced to use his gun to catch a burgler whom he brought to justice.

Officer Glenn is six feet one and one-quarter inches tall and weighs one hundred and sixty pounds.

He is married and has a nineteen-year old daughter. He resides at Wildwood Park, West Asheville.

Buncombe Veterans Fought In Famous Civil War Battles

One man who charged up Cemetery Ridge with the Stars and Bars in Pickett's immortal and fatal rush at Gettysburg and half a dozen who took part in Bragg's "barren victory" at Chickamauga, are among the 37 living Confederate veterans in Buncombe county. Another was present when Lee surrendered at Appomattox, and still another remembers clearly the fall of Fort Sumter, the opening gun of the war, although he did not enter the service until several weeks later.

The veterans living today are a modest lot for the most part. Those who were old enough to get into the grey ranks in '61 are extremely few and a majority of the men who attend the meetings of Zeb Vance camp at the courthouse nowadays say quite frankly: "We were just boys in the regiments recruited toward the end; we guarded prisoners and watched mountain passes; some of us were not even armed. But we had to sleep in the snow sometimes, and live in the mud, go hungry and ragged, so we feel that we did our part."

Average Age Is 98

Consider for a moment the troops recruited in '61 were from 21 to 35 years old. Possibly the average was 25. That would make the average age of the survivors today 98 and the youngest, recruited at 20, would be 93. The young men who went into the late regiments in '63 and '64 were often as young as sixteen—from eight to 15 years younger than the troops of the first great Confederate victories, so by far the greater number of veterans living today are of these late regiments.

But even among the living veterans who were but lads in their teens when Sumter fell, are men who fought with musket and bayonet, dashed on horseback with naked sabre, or swabbed and pointed cannon, in the really great battles of the war.

Gettysburg, the real death knell of the grey hopes and Murfreesboro or Stone's River, one of the bloodiest battles of the war; the hundred bloody skirmishes in Sherman's path of devastation; the victory of Bragg at Chickamauga and the battle of Kennesaw Mountain are memories that stir the blood in the now feeble limbs of about a dozen of the veterans in the county today.

Among them are:

W. W. Pace, now 93 years old, had not yet enlisted when the Confederates fired on Fort Sumter, but he was enrolled in Company B, First South Carolina artillery a few weeks thereafter and spent the next two years as a member of the fort's "rebel" garrison. He was there when the Union fleet finally battered them into submission in April, '63, and from Charleston, his outfit set out across the Carolinas and Georgia. He was in front of Sherman when that Yankee general swept through Georgia and he was captured finally at the big battle of Averysboro, S. C. He was wounded during the seige of Sumter by the Yankees. He now lives with his son J. B. Pace near Arden.

Was At Chickamauga

J. M. Case, who lives at Emma, and his brother, W. R. Case, now dead, went out with Company D, 60th North Carolina, and were transferred to the famous sixtieth regiment. They saw service in Virginia and fought at both Chickamauga and Kennesaw Mountain and were in the thick of 38 days of service fighting around Atlanta.

John M. Houck of Marion, a member of Zeb Vance camp, was captured at Gettysburg after being wounded. He was also in the fighting around Richmond and faced Grant's troops in the wilderness around Spottsylvania.

Spencer Freeman, who served in the 25th North Carolina, is another veteran of the battles of Chickamauga and Kennesaw Mountain.

Captain W. Elbert Weaver of Weaverville and his negro body servant, Gilbert Baird, went out with the 29th North Carolina and campaigned over six states, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida and both the Carolinas. Captain Weaver still carries a bullet from Chickamauga. He saw Sherman burn Atlanta and took part in the last battle of the war, an engagement at Mansfield, La., some days after Lee's surrender at Appomattox.

Colonel R. L. Fitzpatrick, present commander of Zeb Vance camp, was for awhile a member of Morgan's famous raiders, but didn't cross the Ohio on the brilliant raid into Kentucky and Indiana. He enlisted with 31st Tennessee, but for most of the war was in Captain Owen's detachment of scouts doing reconnoitering for Vaughn's brigade.

F. B. Bishop, 89, of Avery's creek, was present at Lee's surrender to Grant and was wounded "at the big battle of Bull Gap." His father and older brother also wore the grey.

S. P. Hunnicutt, 67 Mountain street, says he was in "plenty of battles" in the Carolinas, and was wounded seven times. He is now 97 years old.

Wounded In Pickett's Charge

Levi J. Walker, 93 years old now, was the fifth color bearer shot down in the Confederate charge up Cemetery Ridge. He lost his left leg and spent the remainder of the war a prisoner at David's Island, N. Y. He has lived in Asheville since 1920 and his home is at 266 Forest Hill drive. He was in Company B of the 13th North Carolina.

The Rev. T. F. Glenn, who has been in the ministry 75 years, was chaplain of a regiment of General Joe Wheeler's command called the Third Confederate. It was made up of companies from Georgia, Tennessee, and the Carolinas. He was at the battle of Murfreesboro in Tennessee and was in front of Sherman at Atlanta.

Lee Williams of Old Fort was in Company B of the 9th North Carolina artillery battalion. He took part in the battle of Forth Fisher and saw service in Virginia.

Ephraim Byerley, who lives in West Asheville, had two fingers shot off at the battle of Hatcher's Gap. He served in Company A, 21st North Carolina.

J. J. Stephenson, who was in Company C, 69th North Carolina, was in the battle of Bull's Gap and saw service in Tennessee.

R. T. Underwood, Chestnut street, now 87 years old, served Capt M. H. Love's company of Col. W. H. Thomas' Legion, which included 400 Cherokee Indians. The unit was made up largely of young boys and Underwood's job was to guard Yankee prisoners and the passes in the Great Smoky mountains. He and his comrades saw no fighting but endured great hardships in the last winter of the war. He brought many prisoners back to Asheville.

P. B. Brown, living on the Brevard road, was in Company C, 16th South Carolina regiment.

Several Served In Cavalry

A number of the local veterans belonged to the 14th North Carolina cavalry battalion, a unit recruited of young soldiers. Among them were J. J. Stephenson, R. B. Bitch of Horseshoe, J. A. Hughey and H. S. Walton.

John Paxton of Canton, who belongs to Zeb Vance camp, saw service in the western army with Company I, 62nd North Carolina.

J. W. Dickerson, who was in Col. Walter Bryson's command was quite young, and served at the saltpetre works near Hendersonville.

There are a number of names on the Confederate pension role at the courthouse, whose regimental affiliations and records are not known to the camp, nor does the pension clerk have their addresses. They are known to be living, however, as they called for their checks in June. They include D. V. Cole, T. M. Cole, E. Guthry, Thomas Hudgens, Henry E. Lampkin, D. W. Reynolds, Chipman Sawyer, O. W. Surratt, David B. Watts, Charles W. White and Richard Gowan. The names of J. A. Ballard and H. B. Parham are on

If there's a golf course in heaven, look out, Lord, you've got a good one coming.

When I walked into the office Thursday morning, the first thing someone said was, "Did you know Ozzie died last night?"

Ozzie was R. P. Gordon, who lived in West Asheville. He preferred to be called by his initials because he didn't especially like his name, Richmond Pearson Gordon. He was the only man I knew who carried the same name as the master of Richmond Hill.

But we who worked with him called him Ozzie. I don't know why. He was called Ozzie long before I met him.

Ozzie worked in the Citizen-Times composing room 46 years before his retirement in 1969. He was a small man, very bald, who always smoked big cigars.

He was a golfer and bowler and spent 10 years of retirement following those pursuits.

Time had shortened his drives and lessened the velocity on his bowling ball, but he could still pin back the ears of many competitors 30 years his junior.

His major athletic problem was his temper. He was human, and a slice on the golf course or a gutter ball at the bowling alley upset him terribly. He never vented his temper on those with whom he played; he reserved that for himself—and his golf clubs.

Once when he and Dick Wynne, who is now president, and publisher of the Citizen-Times, were playing each other in the company golf tournament at Asheville's Municipal Course, Ozzie held the lead when he stroked a tee shot about 15 yards off the tee.

He became so angry with himself that he stomped around the tee and finally slung his driver twice as far down the fairway as the ball had gone.

Dick, a man of dry humor, said, "Ozzie, if the club goes farther than the ball, you've gotta play the club."

Ozzie played almost every course in Western North Carolina, and when any of us at the paper wanted to play a round the next day and needed a partner, all we had to do was call Ozzie. He was ready.

He was a man who gave a dollar's work for a dollar's pay, and if a little more work was required he was willing to do it.

There wasn't a mark against his name, Lord, unless you'd consider those little tantrums on the golf course as marks. He didn't mean anything by them, and he never involved anyone else; it was always himself that he got mad at. Or sometimes he'd vent his temper on his golf ball.

Several years ago, my son, Bobby, called Ozzie and asked if he'd like to play golf the next day.

"Sure," Ozzie said. "Let's go to Lake Junaluska."

Ozzie was about 72 or 73 at the time, and except for the occasional shot that strayed, every stroke sent the ball arrow straight down the fairway about 100 yards.

When they arrived at the Junaluska nine-hole course, they noticed how badly the fairways were suffering from the drought.

The tees were sunbaked so hard that both Ozzie and Bobby had to get on their knees and hammer their tees into the ground.

From "Bob Terrell's Old Gold", 1981

Ozzie's game was together from the start. He had a good round going when he came to No. 8. There he hammered his tee halfway into the earth and when he swung he missed the ball completely.

It made him so mad that he took a single-handed whack at the ball with his driver, intending to knock it into the boondocks and lose it—but he only topped it enough to drive the tee on into the ground, and the ball ricocheted off the hard earth, struck him on the chin, and knocked him flat on his back.

Those are the times we'll remember, Lord, when we would laugh at Ozzie on the golf course, and he would laugh at our little fits—and we'd come away closer friends than when we started.

Like the time Ozzie and Al Germonte and Ed Spears and I played that snake-killing round at Muny. We reached No. 9 and teed off and Ozzie's shot sliced and the ball landed in the branch that runs alongside No. 4.

The rest of us were on up the fairway, probably in the rough, and all we could see over the bank on the lower side of the fairway was Ozzie's club swinging up and then we'd hear a "thump."

Finally his ball came sailing up onto the fairway and we finished the hole. Ed, who was keeping score, asked Ozzie what he had. Ozzie looked back over the fairway and his lips moved as he totaled his strokes, and he said, "Gimme a six."

"Six?" Al said. "You took six in the ditch."

"I did not!" Ozzie said, indignantly. "I was killing a snake."

So, Lord, get your golf course ready. You've got a good man coming. And if the course is a little snaky, that's all right: He'll take care of that problem for you.

Ann Gosnell National Contest Winner With Breakfast Plan

By MARGUERITE ALEXANDER

Dreams have come true for Ann Gosnell, 14-year-old eighth grade student at Hall Fletcher Junior High School.

Ann, who is a home economics student, is the first prize winner in a national contest for a "Dream Breakfast" sponsored by Co-Ed Magazine. Ann will be presented with a four place setting of Gorham sterling silver.

For the contest Ann had to plan the breakfast menu complete with color scheme and centerpiece.

She suggested a yellow and white color scheme with daffodils and Forsythia as the flowers. The breakfast began with pineapple juice, followed by a cereal with bananas, bacon and egg and buttered whole wheat toast, with peach preserves and milk.

MISS ANN GOSNELL, eighth grade student at Hall Fletcher Junior High School, works out a table setting using sterling silver. Miss Gosnell won a four-place setting of silver in a national competition for a breakfast menu and table decoration idea.

Ann is the daughter of Mrs. J. W. Gosnell of 175 State St. and the late Mr. Gosnell. She has been a student in Mrs. Larry New's home economics class and has assisted with the cooking and serving of lunches to faculty members as part of her training. No breakfasts have been served by the group, however.

CARRIER AND GASTON BOUNDARY IS BOUGHT BY GAY GREEN AND P. H. THRASH

Consideration Approximately $37,000--To be Subdivided Into Residence Lots.

A CITY TO BE BUILT BEYOND THE TAHKEEOSTEE.

The Property Contains 480 Acres and Has Over a Mile of River Frontage.

One of the biggest real estate deals negotiated in this section since the transfer of vast holdings to George W. Vanderbilt was successfully closed up today by the well known real estate firm of Hall & Penland, when 480 acres of beautifully located residential property in the West Asheville section, overlooking the French Broad river and known as the Carrier and Gaston boundary, was transferred to Gay Green and P. H. Thrash of this city for the consideration of approximately $37,000. The property has a frontage of more than a mile on the west side of the French Broad river and also a great frontage on the main macadamized roads traversing West Asheville. The deal that was consummated today has been on for the past several days, but the matter was kept quiet and little was known of the negotiations until the formal transfer of the papers this afternoon, when the statement was made that the property was purchased by Messers Green and Thrash with a view of sub-dividing it into residence lots and the building of a city across the French Broad. The property has also been surveyed and platted with provision for broad streets throughout the tract. It has two entrances from the Asheville side, one at the Carrier's bridge, spanning the French Broad and Swannanoa rivers near Biltmore and the other at the Smith's bridge in the milling section of this city.

The rapid growth of West Asheville during the past twelve months and the sale of the Carrier and Gaston boundary today has given rise to renewed speculation relative to a trolley line into that section [redacted] made this morning on good authority that the neccessary funds for the building of a road from this city to the Asheville school, five miles from here, were practically in sight and that the road would undoubtedly be constructed during the next 12 months. It is said that the purpose of those interested in the road is to cross the river at a point between the Smith bridge and Carrier bridge and to route the line through the more thickly settled portions of West Asheville.

One of the purchasers of the boundary said this afternoon that a factory site would be donated to anyone or corporation desiring to locate in that section to be selected from three or four desirable locations and to include as much as four or five acres of land.

Success Of Gay Green Rests On Faith In City

GAY GREEN, ASHEVILLE financier, is shown at his desk which has served him for more than a half century.

Pack Memorial Public Library
Asheville, N.C.

By Word And Deed, He Has Been Tower Of Strength Here

Ash. Citizen 3-21-48

Gay Green has made a financial success of believing in Asheville.

Whatever storms of financial adversity have blown, he has remained unmoved in faith. He has been a "bear" on this city and this mountain region.

By word and deed he has often been a four-square tower of strength in the community, regardless of recessions or the graver depressions in which values shrank alarmingly while men asked themselves whether the very foundations of their economic life were being swept away.

Mr. Green has been—and is—more than a successful business man and a far-sighted investor. He has built his fortune—estimated by competent sources at $4,000,000—largely on faith in Asheville and its future.

He was born in the Newfound Creek section of Leicester township on August 16, 1870, and came to Asheville in 1887 with his parents and three brothers. He opened a grocery store on Roberts and Buxton streets in the early 90's, later selling to his employes to enter the furniture business.

He has engaged in the furniture business since early manhood under the name of Green Brothers, once located on Patton avenue and now at 44 College street. His early business ventures included development of South Biltmore, and purchase of 400 acres in West Asheville.

In November, 1910, he and John Lange purchased at court sale the unfinished hotel building at the intersection of North Main (now Broadway) and College streets, completed the building and opened it to the public as the Langren hotel on July 4, 1912. It enjoyed phenomenal business from the outset.

He and four other associates formed the Imperial Life Insurance company in 1902, and he still retains one-fifth interest in this prosperous concern. From time to time, he added to his realty holdings until today he is Asheville's largest property owner and probably its largest taxpayer. His total tax bill in 1947 was about $200,000.

His holdings include:

Three-fourths of Kress building, Patton avenue, one-half of Langren hotel, one-half of George Vanderbilt hotel, one-third of Hotel Asheville, three buildings on Pack square, 200 feet on Depot street, the four-story building on Haywood street now occupied by Ivey's, the three-story building on College and Haywood streets occupied by Lerner's, bhsiness bdilding at 33 Biltmore avenue, the former American National Bank building at 44 Patton avenue, and property at 40 College street.

He was married in 1895 to Effie M. ~~Rogers~~ REEVES of the Sandy Mush section, and they celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary in 1945. They are now at their winter home in Sebring, Fla.

He has two brothers, Dr. Nat Green of San Diego, Cal., and Ottis Green, also a successful Asheville business man. Another brother, Grover, died about 30 years ago.

Gay Green, who built a fortune on his faith in Asheville, will be buried tomorrow afternoon in Riverside Cemetery—a short distance from his Pearson Drive home where he died in his sleep.

The 80-year-old financier was found dead in bed early yesterday at the home, 152 Pearson Drive.

Death apparently resulted from a heart attack. He had been in declining health for several years following a heart attack suffered five years ago at his winter home in Sebring, Fla. However, his condition was not considered serious and he went to his office as usual on Thursday.

Funeral services will be held at 3 p. m. tomorrow in the home with the Rev. T. A. Groce, and the Rev. Douglas Corriher, pastor of Haywood Street Methodist Church, officiating.

Active pallbearers will be William Reeves, James Reeves, John D. Johnston, Ottis Green Jr., John Courtney, Troy Green, Hilliard Green and Reeves Turbyfill.

Honorary pallbearers will be O. E. Starnes, J. Warlick, K. W. Partin, William P. Hodges, C. R. Perry, Charles E. Starnes, W. H. Starnes H. F. Starnes, John M. Ehle, L. T. New, Earl Messer, Robert H. Jackson, George R. Murphy, members of the Rotary Club, Rod and Gun Club and Asheville Hotel Association and employes of the Imperial Life Insurance Company.

GAY GREEN

The family has requested that no flowers be sent, but that contributions be made instead to Eliada Orphanage.

Green was president of the Imperial Life Insurance Company and owner of Green Brothers Furniture Store, 40 College Street, and president of the Carolina Tobacco Corporation.

He was born August 16, 1870 near Leicester, the son of the late Jesse M. and Laura Thrash Green. He attended schools in the Leicester section, Carson-Newman College, Jefferson City, Tenn., and the University of Chattanooga, Tenn.

In 1887, his family moved from Leicester to Asheville and Green established a grocery store about three years later on the corner of Roberts and Buxton Streets. After several years, he sold the grocery store and moved to Watsonville, Calif., where he entered the hotel business.

He returned to Asheville in 1902, when he and his brother, Ottis Green, opened a furniture store at 40 Patton Avenue. In 1905, he organized the Imperial Life Insurance Company and has been its president ever since.

In 1906 he purchased 500 acres of land in West Asheville, extendng from Carrier Bridge to Sulphur Springs Road.

In 1912, he and John Lange purchased the ten-uncompleted Langren Hotel and opened it for business in 1913. The name of the hotel is a combination of the names of the two men.

In 1919, he purchased 30,000 acres of pineland near Savannah, Ga., which he later sold to the Union Bag Company.

Green took the lead, along with Pat M. Burdette and James G. K. McClure, in the re-establishment of the Asheville tobacco market in 1930 after a lapse of more than 30 years. Largely as a result of his interest and his financial backing, the Carolina Tobacco Warehouse opened its door in that year, despite the fact that the bank crash occurred a short time earlier.

A few years ago his fortune was estimated at some $4,000,000. He was Asheville's largest individual property owner, and his annual property tax bill was in excess of $200,000.

His holdings included the building on Haywood Street leased by Ivey's Inc., the Lerner Stores building, the American National Building now occupied on the ground floor by Fields, Inc., one-half of the Langren Hotel, three-fourths interest in the Kress Building, one-third of the Hotel Asheville, three buildings on Pack Square and about one-half of the stock in the Citizens' Hotel Corporation, which owns the George Vanderbilt Hotel.

He was a member of the Asheville Rotary Club and the Black Mountain Rod and Gun Club and attended Central Methodist Church.

Although he gave to many charities, one of his major interests was Eliada Orphanage in the Emma section. He and a brother, Dr. Nat Green of San Diego, Calif., donated money for a baby home at the orphanage four years ago in memory of their mother.

He retained his faith in the future of Asheville despite business upheavals. The years proved that his faith was justified.

He married Miss Effie M. Reeves of the Sandy Mush section in 1893.

Surviving, in addition to the widow, are two brothers, Ottis Green of Asheville and Dr. Nat Green of San Diego, Calif.; a nephew, Ottis Green Jr. of Asheville; a niece, Mrs. J. D. Johnston of Asheville, and a number of cousins.

Funeral arrangements are in charge of Dunn and Groce Funeral Home.

'Viet Nam War' Comes To Asheville

Ever since the Tribal Warrior came home from forays against another tribe, boys have looked with worshipful eyes on the soldier, because his life is one filled with adventure. And boys have, in their imaginations, with various toys, created their own battle scenes, using lead or tin soldiers, vehicles, and men. Some youngsters, with considerable imagination and modern toys, like Alan Keener 10½ (left), and Mike Green, 11, create their own elaborate battlefields. Mike and Alan, in Mike's yard at 91 Cranford Rd., set up a battle situation in "Viet Nam," and Mike, piloting a whirlybird, sideslipped to avoid a rocket launched from the ground by Alan. The Rocket, in flight, can be seen as a dark streak just above the chopper. (Staff Photo by Malcolm Gamble)

CALVARY PASTOR TO COMPLETE HIS 11TH. YEAR TODAY

The Rev. J. B. Grice, pastor of Calvary Baptist church, West Asheville, will end his eleventh consecutive year as pastor today. Mr. Grice was elected in 1918, assuming his duties the first Sunday in May of that year.

January 3, 1909, Mr. Grice who was then Superintendent of the West End Baptist church Sunday school, attended a meeting held in the old Odd Fellows Hall on Haywood road and assisted in the organization of the church, several years before he entered the ministry.

In 1906 the pastor attended a meeting at which a West Asheville Sunday school was organized under the auspices of the West End Baptist church. That was 23 years ago, and since Mr. Grice has been closely connected with the growth of the Baptist church in West Asheville and other sections of Western North Carolina.

CALVARY TO OBSERVE GRICE'S 25TH ANNIVERSARY MAY 2ND

Plans went forward this week for observing on Sunday, May 2, at Calvary Baptist Church the 25th anniversary of the pastorate of the Rev. J. B. Grice. Committee on arrangements is composed of William Logan, chairman, R. E. Currence and Don Young.

As a feature of the observance effort will be made to liquidate the $3,500 indebtedness of the edifice on that date. Also the event will mark the beginning of a revival meeting led by a former pastor of the church, the Rev. Millord A. Jenkins of Abilene, Texas.

Observance of the silver anniversary will continue through the rest of the year, with former pastors and ministers ordained in the church over the past quarter of a century being brought back as features of monthly services. All departments of the church are represented in the program plans, including the Sunday school, the training union for young people, the brotherhood organization of men, the women's missionary society and the music department.

Mr. Logan represents the training union on the special observance committee. The other members of this committee and departments they represent follow:

John L. Lawrence, the Sunday school; Mrs. Glenn Starnes, music department; Mr. Currence, finance group; Mrs. E. P. Fleming, women's missionary society; J. Hamp Brown, men's brotherhood; Mr. Young board of deacons; Mrs. O. V. Himes, church-at-large, and Bert Starnes, evangelistic, endeavors group.

Before taking over his present charge on May 1, 1918, Rev. Grice was pastor of the West End Baptist church.

All of his pastorates have been in Buncombe county, the first one being the Liberty church, where he began serving in May, 1911. This was a one-Sunday-a-month charge. Then on September 1 of the same year, there was added the Mt. Carmel charge, which was a half-time church.

Within two years, Rev. Grice resigned the Liberty charge and became pastor of Bethel and Inanda, thus forming a compact field composed of Mt. Carmel, Bethel and Inanda. On July 31, 1915, he became pastor of the West End church.

Rev. Grice assisted in the organization of Calvary church on January 3, 1909, and was associated with the church in various ways many years before he became its pastor.

Coming to Asheville from Gaston county in 1894, Rev. Grice became connected with the Asheville Cotton Mill with which he remained until he became pastor at Calvary.

CELEBRATION OF REV. GRICE'S ANNIVERSARY BEGINS SUNDAY

Sunday will mark the beginning of the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the Rev. J. B. Grice as pastor of Calvary Baptist church.

Dr. Millard A. Jenkins, pastor of First Baptist church of Abilene, Texas, and former pastor at Calvary, will begin a two weeks' revival service, and as a special feature of the celebration program the church indebtedness of $3500 will be paid off at the end of the morning service.

Dr. Jenkins is well known here, having been raised in this section. He is an outstanding preacher of the Southern Baptist Convention and is the author of several books. This will make the fourth time he has conducted revival meetings at the local charge since he was supply pastor prior to the pastorate of Rev. Grice.

He will preach at both the morning and evening services next Sunday, and on each week night at 8 o'clock except Saturday. Schedule for the morning services during the week will be announced later.

The senior choir, under the direction of Mrs. Glenn Starnes, will sing Sunday and throughout the revival.

In connection with the silver anniversary of Rev. Grice, a special bulletin giving a summary of the life and work of the pastor has been printed and will be distributed at the church. Observance of the anniversary year will continue through December, with a special program planned for each month.

25TH YEAR AS PASTOR MARKED BY J. B. GRICE

Church Filled To Capacity As Dr. Jenkins Launches Revival Series.

The $3,500 debt on the Calvary Baptist church was paid and oversubscribed more than $100 by members yesterday as a special service honoring the Rev. J. B. Grice on his 25th anniversary as pastor of the church.

The Rev. Millard A. Jenkins, pastor of the First Baptist church of Abilene, Tex., and a former pastor of the Calvary church, delivered the sermon yesterday, which opened a 10-day revival at the church.

There was not an empty seat in the building as all departments of the church, including the Sunday school, training union for young people, the brotherhood organization of men, the women's missionary society and the music department took part in the special services.

Mrs. C. I. Poor, organist, and Mrs. J. Glenn Starnes, choir director, were in charge of special music for the event.

W. B. Logan was in charge of arrangements for the celebration, and was assisted by the following members of the celebration committee: John L. Lawrence, Mrs. Starnes, Rev. [illegible] Young, Mrs. [illegible] Starnes.

The anniversary celebration will continue throughout the year with a special program each month. Former pastors and ministers ordained in the church during the pastorate of Mr. Grice will take part in the programs.

The revival meetings in progress are being held twice daily—at 10 o'clock each morning and 8 o'clock each evening.

REV. J. B. GRICE MAY RECONSIDER HIS RESIGNATION

150 Members Of Calvary Baptist Church Ask Pastor To Stay

Ash Cit. 3/6/45

The Rev. J. B. Grice, pastor of Calvary Baptist church, West Asheville, who told the congregation at the Sunday morning service that he would retire as pastor May 1, said last night he would reconsider his decision if his continuance as pastor is favored by a large majority of the Calvary church membership in a vote scheduled for next Sunday.

Some 150 members, at a special meeting in the church last night, adopted a resolution declining to accept Mr. Grice's resignation and asking him to reconsider his decision. After the group had assembled, Mr. Grice was called to the church.

He told the group he had been led to believe that some members of the congregation thought it best for him to retire and for that reason made the statement Sunday.

Congregation To Vote

The group decided to submit the entire matter to the congregation at the 11 a. m. service Sunday, March 11, to be voted on. Mr. Grice will not be present when the vote is taken. R. M. McGee and E. J. Patterson, both of whom are members of the board of deacons, conducted last night's meeting.

At the morning service Sunday, Mr. Grice voiced the intention of resigning the pastorate of the church May 1, his 27th anniversary as pastor there. Since Sunday, it has been estimated he has received some 300 telephone calls protesting his decision.

Became Pastor In 1918

Mr. Grice became pastor of Calvary church in May, 1918, when the church was on Hanover street. The building was soon too small to accommodate the rising membership and work on the present structure, one of the largest Baptist churches in this area, was begun in December, 1921. The building was completed in 1925 and in 1937, 15 new Sunday school rooms were added. Final payment of the church debt was made at the celebration of Mr. Grice's 25th anniversary as pastor in May, 1943. The church now has an estimated membership of 1,500.

Born in Gaston county, Mr. Grice came here some 50 years ago, accepting a position at the Asheville Cotton mill. He had an active part in organizing Calvary church in 1909, at which time he was serving as superintendent of the Sunday school at the West End Baptist church. His first pastoral experience was with the Liberty Baptist church and he was ordained to the ministry at the West End church two years later. Before accepting the call to Calvary church, he served as pastor of the West End church for nearly three years.

GRICE, PASTOR HERE FOR PAST 35 YEARS, RETIRES OCTOBER 1

Ash. Times 9-18-46

The Rev. J. B. Grice, pastor of Reed Memorial Baptist church, will retire October 1 after more than 35 years active service with Baptist churches of Asheville.

The veteran minister expressed his appreciation to the people of Asheville this morning for their cooperation over the years and he re-affirmed his faith in the Christian religion. "It will emerge triumphant because the gospel of Jesus Christ is the panacea for all our ills," he declared.

Mr. Grice leaned back in his chair in the living room of the pastor's home at Oakley and talked about the war's aftermath and the future. He said the world must resolve its conflicting theories without delay. When asked whether he thinks it possible he said. "Yes, the adjustment is going to come and I hope soon. But it cannot come until God is taken into consideration.

"The Gospel speaks the same language to all men everywhere if they will listen. The command 'go ye into all the world' is amazing and unique and will eventually bring unity where now there is only lack of agreement."

Surprised at Clash

Mr. Grice expressed surprise over the recent clash between Secretary of Commerce Wallace and other members of the Truman administration over what our foreign policy should be. He recalled that William Jennings Bryan would have resigned in a similar position —finding himself not in accord with other members of the group.

He also remembered spending an evening at the Bryan home when the "Silver Tongued Orator" was a resident of Asheville. Mr. Bryan had invited the pastors of the city to hear a Y. M. C. A. representative in whom he was particularly interested. The Bryan home was then at the foot of Kimberly avenue.

Mr. Grice remarked that he is not retiring in the final sense of the word but only from the permanent pastorate. He will continue in the ministry and expects to speak from the pulpits of many churches.

REV. J. B. GRICE

He and Mrs. Grice are starting the job of moving and will be at their home at 135 Spears avenue by the end of the month.

Mrs. Grice recalled that although she first met her husband here in Asheville they were born within 15 miles of each other—he in Gaston and she in Lincoln county.

Mr. Grice first came to Asheville in 1894 and began preaching at Liberty church in May, 1911. At one time he was connected with three different churches here—adding the Mt. Carmel, Inanda and Bethel charges—and in 1915 he settled down at the West End church where he remained for two years and nine months.

Then on May 1, 1918, he accepted the pastorate of Calvary church where he continued until the same date last year. "It was right in the middle of the terrible flue epidemic," he recalled this morning, "and a healthy next door neighbor one morning might be dead the next. Our church had to suspend all services for a month."

Conducts 2,000 Funerals

Since that time Mr. Grice has officiated at more than 2,000 funerals and a check of his records showed that he has married 679 couples.

The day after tomorrow will mark completion of Mr. Grice's sixteenth month at Reed Memorial church and he added that he had almost retired last year when he left Calvary but due to the war there were so few pastors available that he felt he should continue. Now the war is over, he remarked, and he is making way for younger men.

When asked if he had any advice for readers who may never have heard him in church, Mr. Grice said he liked to remember a phrase he had borrowed from a friend: "Disagree without being disagreeable." "What I love about America and our system is the freedom which every man has to make his own decisions, to follow his own conscience, and to disagree with others. We must guard and protect this for those who are to come."

THE NEWS PERSONALITY OF THE WEEK

REV. J. B. GRICE

Twenty-five years of vision and service.

Such has been the record and privilege of the Rev. J. B. Grice as pastor of Calvary Baptist church; such has been the blessings of the congregation whose membership now is around 1400 in number; and such will be observed next Sunday, May 2, by members and friends with ceremony befitting this godly man. For it was on that date, a quarter a century ago that the Rev. Mr. Grice took over the spiritual leadership of the charge, then composed of 400 faithful souls.

Rev. Grice was no stranger in their midst, for in a January nearly ten years before, he had received something similar to a Macedonian call and went over and helped in the organization of the church, the nucleus of which consisted of members from the West End Baptist church, with which Rev. Grice was affiliated as Sunday school superintendent at the time.

Calvary was organized 34 years ago in the old Odd Fellows Hall building at the Asheville Road and Hanover street where the Half Circle B ranch plant is now located. When he became its pastor the church was located on Hanover Street, and during the early part of his ministry there, plans for the new present building were laid.

Indeed, when Rev. Grice received the summons in 1918 to come over as pastor of Calvary, his religious influence in this section had already begun to make its impress. He had served as pastor at the West End charge for nearly three years, and prior to that had been shepherd to a circuit of part-time churches in the county.

And through the years this influence has spread like spiritual leaven to every nook and corner of Buncombe county and many parts of Western North Carolina; through the years this man of God has proclaimed the Gospel, imparted cheer to the sick, spoken solace to the dying, brought comfort to the bereaved, committed to the ground the body and to the hands of God the soul of the dead; he has bestowed blessings upon happy nuptials, baptized members of the fold, lent encouragement to the troubled, given counsel to the uncertain . . . all in all, in one way or another, leading people to God.

No matter what one's problem is, he can take it to Rev. Grice, with assurance of sane and sensible advice and of a sympathetic and tolerant attitude.

During these twenty-five years Rev. Grice, in and out of the church, has preached around 3300 sermons, conducted 1614 funerals and joined the hands of nearly 600 couples at the altar. And from under his ministerial wing have gone five members to preach the Word. They are Edward J. Ingle, Herbert Brown, Nane Starnes, Vaughn Johnson and A. J. Buckner. The leaven is still at work, indeed!

Strong on dependability and keeping his word, Rev. Grice doesn't recall ever forgetting or missing an appointment except once, and that was at a recent wedding at the church. But the confusion was not occasioned so much by the temporary absence of a minister, since a substitute parson was soon and easily procured, as it was the apprehension that something terrible might have happened to Rev. Grice. When he finally appeared, his only explanation was—"I just forgot", something he disliked confessing in view of his usually remarkable memory. But the incident was dismissed with a hearty laugh, in which Mr. Grice freely joined. Rev. Grice has a marvelous sense of humor.

He has a keen understanding of human nature, too, especially among the young people, in whom he has confidence and over whom he is very optimistic. He appraises them as good if not better than those of their age a generation ago.

And as for the young men in the service, he has no doubts that they will come marching home with a greater interest in religion than ever before. Speaking of the service lads, not a one from Calvary ever writes home without inquiring or having a word to say about Rev. Grice; and speaking of the days following Johnny's marching home, Rev. Grice believes that conditions will be favorable to a greater world-wide missionary endeavor on the part of the church.

Out of the 600 marriages in which he was the officiating minister, Rev. Grice doesn't believe there has come more than one per cent of divorce. Of this, he is naturally proud.

He attributes this fine record to the quality of the folk, taking no credit for himself. However, he doubtless has given advice that has saved more than one marriage from the rocks. If Dorothy Dix and Anne Hirst don't mind, we will give one instance: One day a young married woman received a letter from a former sweet heart and her husband began to tease. One word led on to another until heated feelings ensued, followed by threats of terminating the relationship in the courts. Fortunately, however, they first took the matter to Rev. Grice, who gave counsel this wise: "Always let your mail be open to the other." This instills confidence, he observes.

Mr. Grice would have made a good business man; he is a good businessman now, for that matter. Had he stayed with the Asheville Cotton Mill with which he remained until he came as Calvary's pastor, he might have been head of the firm by now. Who knows? Be that as it may, his call was the Lord's business.

And he is an excellent church executive, to be sure. He has confidence in his officers and workers and he gives them a free hand. He puts them on their honor, so to speak, a policy which seems to call forth the best that is in them. He just stays out of their way and lets the organization grow. He learned the wisdom of this policy back in his cotton mill days.

This doesn't mean, however, that he is indifferent to what is going on; to the contrary, he keeps his finger on every thing that is done, although in a way that one is hardly conscious of it.

Rev. Grice loves music, a love which dates back when he was a member of the West End church, where he played the cornet and sang bass in the choir. He still can sing. Naturally he is especially interested in the music department of his church.

Mr. Grice was born near Belmont, in Gaston county, North Carolina, where he grew up. His parents were John L. and Edith Lovelace Grice. Before coming to Asheville in 1894, Mr. Grice lived for a while at Wilmington where he joined the Baptist church. He was baptized in the Cape Fear River, and little did he or the administering minister think that this new convert would someday become an ordained follower of John, The Baptist.

Berry Grice was married to Miss Nelle C. Lineberry, of Randolph county, in 1897. To this union were born five children: Earl, Cecil and Worth Grice, Mrs. Nellie Tomberlin and Mrs. Edith Malone. There are eight grandchildren.

The life and work of Rev. Grice would make excellent material for a good-size volume that would be a worthy contribution to any religious library. Until that is written, however, we commend to your attention the noteworthy summary on the history of the pastor which has been compiled by the committee in charge of the anniversary program and which appears elsewhere in this issue. The summary is being printed in bulletin form and will be distributed to members and visitors at the various special programs of the church throughout the year, beginning next Sunday.

Near the end of the summary, mention is made, and properly so, of Mrs. Grice and her devotion to Mr. Grice and his work. Through her prolonged illness preceding her death several months ago, she suffered much. This deeply grieved the husband, too. But he went on "smilin' thru". A glimpse of Stephen, indeed. And if one should be looking for the reason for this remarkable fortitude, he would find it in Rev. Grice's deep and unshakable faith in God. For, indeed, this pastor is tangible proof that there is a Power House from which one can draw strength in time of trouble—a thing he has taught through the years.

His silver anniversary finds strands of silver in the hair, suggestive, however, of things celestrial, rather than reflecting years of toil and care. And there is a silver lining in his heart, too, as well as a smile on his face; and today his body remains as robust as his soul is strong.

Rev. Grice has a boundless capacity for love and he is greatly beloved. Truly a man of God!

Rev. J. B. Grice, 94, Dies; Baptist Minister 35 Years

The Rev. John Berry Grice, 94, of 135 Spears Ave., who served as pastor of Baptist churches in Asheville for more than 35 years before his retirement in 1946, died Wednesday morning in an Asheville hospital after a long illness.

He had been in declining health for the last ten years.

During his career as a Baptist minister, Mr. Grice spent 27 years as pastor of Calvary Baptist Church.

He was born near Belmont in Gaston County and received his elementary education there. After moving to Wilmington, he joined the Wilmington Baptist Church and was baptized in the Cape Fear River.

Mr. Grice came to Asheville in 1894 and worked in the Asheville Cotton Mills until becoming pastor at Calvary Church.

He served as superintendent of the West End Baptist Church Sunday School for 13 years, and when the Calvary Church was founded in 1909, he presided over the church's Sunday School organizational meeting.

His first pastoral experience began two years after the founding of Calvary when he started assisting with services in 1911.

Mr. Grice was ordained for the ministry at the West End Church in 1913. For the next two years he served county churches, including the Mt. Carmel, Inanda and Bethel charges.

In 1915, Mr. Grice became pastor of the West End Church and served there for almost three years.

Mr. Grice loved music, played the cornet, had a fine bass voice and made quite a contribution to the church music. His devotion to the church and his desire to serve was shown in his willingness to conduct the service if the pastor was absent or to light the fires and sweep the church in the absence of the janitor.

In the spring of 1918, he accepted the call to the pastorate of Calvary Church. The church was at that time located on Hanover street and had approximately 400 members.

The church soon became too small for the Hanover building and a new church was begun in 1921 at the present location on Haywood road.

On his 60th birthday in 1934, the congregation of Calvary church honored Mr. Grice with a special program at which they presented him a trip to Berlin, Germany, to attend the World Baptist Alliance.

Special services on the anniversary of the pastor's 25th year at Calvary featured the payment in full of the $3,500 remaining in the church building debt. The anniversary celebrations continued through out 1943.

Although 700 members of the Calvary church gave him a vote of confidence and appreciation, the pastor continued in his decision to retire. A capacity congregation attended his final sermon and a love offering of $1,- service on the pastor's final Sunday.

Mr. Grice's retirement did not come about immediately. Even before he had preached his last sermon at Calvary, he had accepted the call to Reed Memorial Baptist Church. He was pastor of Reed Memorial Church for 16 months before retiring in October of 1946.

After his official retirement, Mr. Grice continued to be active in church work and for years he filled in for other pastors in the area.

Mr. Grice served as president of the board of directors of Green Hills Cemetery. He was a member of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and the Knights of Pythias.

He was a member of the Fellowship group of the First Baptist Church.

He is survived by the widow, the former Mrs. Lucy A. Parris; a son, Worth Grice of Philadelphia, Pa.; a daughter, Mrs. J. B. Tomberlin of Hawthorne, Calif.; a step-daughter, Mrs. Patricia Edwards of Jacksonville, Fla.; a sister, Mrs. Bess McLeod of Timonsville, Fla.; 12 grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren.

Services will be held at 4:30 p. m. Friday in the chapel of First Baptist Church.

The Rev. Gordon Hux, the Rev. Nane Starnes, the Rev. Edward Ingle, and the Rev. John Knight will officiate and burial will be in Green Hills Cemetery. Pallbearers will be Troy H. Parham, Wayne Bramlett, Don C. Young, J. Lester Carter, J. Wilson Moore, and Marshall Redmon.

Honorary pallbearers will be members of the Buncombe County Ministerial Association.

The body will be at Morris-Hendon Funeral Home until placed in the church 30 minutes before the service.

WOODROW PINKNEY GRIFFIN

A native of Henderson County, N.C., Woodrow Pinkney Griffin is the son of Eli Pinkney Griffin. He was born Sept. 11, 1913, at the foot of Huckleberry Mountain. He graduated from Fruitland Institute in 1933, then attended Brevard Junior College. From there he went to Georgetown College (Kentucky) where he was president of the student body and graduated in 1937 with an AB degree in Social Studies and Mathematics. He was a member of Kappa Alpha fraternity.

Throughout his high school and college years he lettered in four sports — baseball, basketball, football, and track. He received his Masters Degree in Education from Western Carolina University.

Griffin began his teaching career in Kentucky in Chaplin (Nelson County), then taught four years in Henderson County. Mr. Griffin has served in the Asheville City School System since 1944, first as mathematics and physical education teacher at the former Hall Fletcher Junior High School (now a middle school), then as principal of Aycock Elementary School, and in 1956 he became principal of what was then Lee H. Edwards High School (now Asheville High).

In 1960 he became superintendent of the Asheville City Schools, and held that position until his retirement in 1977. He was honored at a reception that year, at which time the new gymnasium at Asheville High School was named the W.P. Griffin Sports Arena in his honor.

He is a past president of the West Asheville Rotary Club, W.N.C. Division of Superintendents, local NCAE, Western District Principals, School Masters Club, a previous superintendent of the Young Peoples' Department at Calvary Baptist Church, and Board Member of the YMCA, N.C. Symphony, and A.B. Technical Institute.

On June 9, 1941, Mr. Griffin married Dorothy Parker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Milton Parker of Hendersonville. They are the parents of Bettie Ann Griffin, who is married to Dr. Nelson Watts, and a son, Woodrow P. Griffin, Jr. of Asheville. The Griffins have two grandchildren, Parker and Alison Watts of Asheville.

Mrs. Grinnan Dies Here At Age 88

Mrs. Robert Temple Grinnan, 88, daughter of the late Col. Robert Bingham, who established and operated the Bingham Military School here for many years, died in an Asheville hospital at 4:05 a.m. yesterday following a long illness.

Mrs. Grinnan was hospitalized on June 2.

Funeral services will be conducted at 3:30 p.m. today in the First Presbyterian Church.

Dr. C. Grier Davis, pastor, will officiate. Burial will be in Riverside Cemetery.

Pallbearers will be Thomas Pearson, L. R. Hoffman, W. Moss Salley, Robert R. Reynolds, Philip Woollcott, and John Beakley.

Honorary pallbearers will be: Dr. M. C. Millender, Dr. S. Crawford Gillespie, Dr. C. C. Orr, Robert R. Williams Sr., Allen Morrison, G. H. Ligon, J. H. Lange, the Rev. Arthur H. Brimley, William P. Bomar, of Fort Worth, Tex., Carl Ray, Silver Springs, Fla., Charles Glasgow, of Lexington, Va., Jonathan Daniels of Raleigh, Clifton Murphy of Tryon and Dr. Pinckney Herbert of Laurens, S. C.

Mrs. Grinnan was the aunt of Barry Bingham, publisher of The Louisville Courier-Journal who arrived here yesterday for the funeral services.

Through the years, Mrs. Grinnan had been vigorous and alert despite her advanced years and continued to keep up a keen interest in current happenings. But she had been an invalid in recent years.

She is remembered by thousands of former students of the old Bingham Military School who benefited by her many kindnesses while they attended school there.

Mrs. Grinnan's birthday observances for many years were shared with those of her nephew, Barry Bingham. It became somewhat of an institution that was established years ago.

Each year on their anniversaries, Mrs. Grinnan and Bingham, joined by other members of the family, would be the honored guests on Feb. 10 at a birthday party at the Bingham Heights home of Mrs. Grinnan.

The annual affair was interrupted only during World War II when Bingham was serving as a commander in the Navy.

Mrs. Grinnan was a student of nature and her home, located at the site of the famous military institution named for her father, for years was a bird sanctuary. It was a hobby with Mrs. Grinnan and she became an authority on the wild birds of this section.

There were many bird houses and feeding stations on the grounds and it was a source of much pleasure to Mrs. Grinnan to watch them from her bedroom window.

Mrs. Grinnan was a native of Asheboro. She was a member of the First Presbyterian Church and was active in church, civic and welfare affairs until she became an invalid.

At the time of her birth, her father was operating the school at Mebane. The institution was founded in 1793 at Wilmington by the Rev. William Bingham and was moved to Asheville in 1891. It was closed in 1928, soon after the death of Col. Bingham.

Maj. Robert Temple Grinnan, husband of Mrs. Grinnan, died in Asheville in 1915. He was a member of the faculty of Bingham School at the time of their marriage.

In addition to Bingham, Mrs. Grinnan is survived by three nieces, Miss Martha McKee and Miss Temple McKee, both of Asheville, and Mrs. Bingham McKenzie of New York City; and another nephew, Robert B. Bingham, of Denver, Colo.

Funeral home proves there's a lot in a name

Groce, Williams — competitors to co-workers

By Josh Boatwright
JBOATWRIGHT@CITIZEN-TIMES.COM

ASHEVILLE — The families behind two of the area's best known funeral homes are bringing life back to a facility that had languished under corporate ownership.

Groce Funeral Home is opening its third branch at the former location of Williams Funeral Service on Tunnel Road.

That site had been owned and operated by Haw Creek residents Roy and Earl Williams for 30 years before it was sold to Loewen Group of Canada, which later to sold it to Service Corporation International (SCI), of Houston, Texas. Williams finally closed two years ago because of declining business.

Though the new facility displays the Groce family name, it will once again be run by a Williams as second-generation funeral director Al Williams assumes management there.

"People like to work with people they know. No matter where you go, you like to walk in and someone calls you by your name and you're treated like a neighbor rather than just a business person," said Dale Groce, who runs the business with his brother Bill.

"There's more to this than just the business transaction, there's so much empathy that has to be shared."

Shared history

The Groce and Williams families have a long history together.

Brothers Roy and Earl Williams worked with the Groce family at their West Asheville home in the 1930s before going into business for themselves and opening their Tunnel Road facility in the mid-1960s.

"When the Williams family was operating over here and we were operating in West Asheville, if we needed something or vice versa we called each other up. We were competitors, but we were friends also," Dale Groce said.

Roy Williams died in 1992 and his brother decided to retire three years later, selling the business to a Canadian corporation.

Al Williams continued managing the funeral home and his namesake remained on the sign, though business practices changed as the facility changed hands from one corporate owner to another.

Williams became increasingly frustrated as company employees came and went from his location and he had to follow strict policies requiring him to collect full payment from families upfront.

That policy was a far-cry from the family's practice of making financial arrangements that fit the needs of their clients.

Haw Creek resident Clarence Dotson, who worked for a few years as an assistant funeral director for the Williamses, recalled how the family dealt with the subject of money after his wife's burial in 1994.

"About a week after that, I went up there and I asked Mr. Earl Williams, 'How much do I owe you sir?' He said, 'What's your hurry? I haven't got it figured up yet.' He said to come back in about a month," said Dotson, 84. Funeral and burial services average about $6,000.

Despite the company's focus on the bottom line, business waned in the late 1990s and Al Williams decided to quit and go to work for Groce in 2000. "When I left here it was hard to drive down the road and look and see the sign up and just knowing the business was going down," he said.

Personal preference

Many small, family-owned businesses have struggled in the past decade to compete with corporate-run stores that offer more selection and lower prices.

Not so in the funeral industry where about 88 percent of businesses are owned by individuals, families, or closely held private companies, according to data collected by the National Funeral Directors Association.

"We engage in what we firmly believe is a sacred trust with the family and our community," said Bob Biggins, a former president of the association who runs a funeral home in the Boston suburbs.

The total number of funeral homes in the United States has declined in the past six years and economic conditions have been less than ideal for expanding a business since the recession.

But the Groce family determined late last year there were enough families who needed their services in the East Asheville, Fairview and Swannanoa areas to warrant opening a new branch.

Ministers like the Rev. Gayle Brown of Oteen Baptist Church have greeted the coming of the Groce and Williams families with enthusiasm.

"When you contact Groce Funeral Home you become a personal friend with the owners and staff. You are not a number standing in line for needed service," Brown said.

Al Williams will act alongside his wife, Richelle, and J. Richard Gassaway as funeral directors of the new Groce home. He said the chance to return to work at his family's business is a "dream come true."

As the funeral home's sign was scheduled to be erected this week, Dale Groce noted that he had wanted to incorporate the Williams name into the title, but he faced a problem.

"We considered opening it as the 'Williams Branch' or 'Williams Memorial Chapel of Groce Funeral Home,' but that corporation bought the Williams name, they won't let us use it," said Groce.

"That won't stop us from telling people there's a Williams managing it."

FRED F. GROCE

ASHEVILLE — Asheville funeral director Fred F. Groce Sr., 90, of 7 Naylor Road, Asheville, died Tuesday, July 20, 2004.

Fred F. Groce

Mr. Groce was born on July 11, 1914, in Candler, to the late Rev. T.A. Groce Sr. and Elizabeth Hunt Groce. He was also preceded in death by his brothers, J. Robert Groce, Thomas A. Groce, the Rev. W. Harold Groce, Alvin "Rip" Groce and Willis H. "Bill" Groce. He was a graduate of Sand Hill High School and attended Weaver College before graduating from Asheville-Biltmore College. He worked with Dunn & Groce Funeral Home in the mid-1930s before attending Williams Institute of Mortuary Science in Kansas City, Kan., where he graduated in 1937. In September 1941, he married June Barger of Asheville and enlisted in the Army shortly after the outbreak of World War II, where he served three years in the Army Medical Corps.

Following the war, he returned to Asheville and rejoined his family and associates at Groce Funeral Home. He was a charter member of Abernethy United Methodist Church, where he was former chairman of the Finance Committee, former chairman of the Board of Trustees and member of the Administrative Board. He was also a charter member of the Asheville Jaycees, charter member of the West Asheville American Legion Post 335, past chairman of the Buncombe County Welfare Board and former secretary and president of the Candler Lions Club. He volunteered as a senior arbitrator for the Better Business Bureau of Asheville and Western North Carolina. Mr. Groce co-owned and operated Groce Funeral Home for many years and maintained the position of corporate vice-president through retirement and until the time of his death.

He enjoyed his family, traveling, fishing and relaxing at Lake Lure. His family includes his wife of 63 years, June B. Groce; four children, Fred F. Groce Jr. and his wife, Cindy, of Asheville, Laura Thomas and her husband, John, of Charlotte, Martha Hughes Davis and her husband, James, of Atlanta and John A. Groce and his wife, Lori, of Houston, Texas; six grandchildren, Robin G. Fulk, Lindsey G. Whitlatch, Virginia Hunt Groce, Liza Hughes Mooney, Anna Patton Hughes and Sarah Rebecca Groce; three great-grandchildren, Catherine Ford Whitlatch, Samuel Bradley Whitlatch and Elizabeth Patton Mooney; and one brother, Hugh W. Groce of Asheville.

A funeral service will be held at 11 a.m. Friday in the Patton Avenue chapel of Groce Funeral Home with the Rev. Dr. Henry R. (Rusty) Inman officiating. Private interment for the family will follow at Green Hills Cemetery.

His family will receive friends one hour prior to the service at the funeral home and request that in lieu of flowers, memorials be made to the Abernethy United Methodist Church Air Conditioning Fund, 1418 Patton Ave., Asheville, NC 28806.

The memorial register is available at "Obituaries" at www.grocefuneralhome.com.

JOHN ROBERT GROCE

Raising white face beef cattle and roses are two hobbies that would take most of any man's time, but when he can do all this in addition to acting as treasurer of a flourishing business, it would make live reading in anybody's newspaper. We have heard of corned beef and cabbage as a combination but not with roses.

John Robert Groce, affable member of the Groce quintet operating the Dunn & Groce Funeral Home, Inc., of 756 Haywood Road, West Asheville, hero of this week's News Personality column, is the man in question.

John Robert, or Bob, as he is better known to his multitude of friends, was born in Greenville, S. C., on July 29, 1900. He is the son of Rev. Thomas A. Groce, Sr., and Mrs. Elizabeth Hunt Groce, both natives of the Palmetto State. His father who was and still is a Methodist preacher of the not too old school, has endeared himself to hundreds of friends in this section since he indentified himself with Asheville a number of years ago.

The family moved from Greenville to Asheville when Bob was a little shaver and the future matador who can throw white face bulls began his school days in North Carolina. The Groce family first came here in 1907. Methodist ministers do not as a rule spend more than four years with any single church so quite a bit of travelling was involved in the years ahead. Bob claims he has lived in about every section of the State from Murphy to Greensboro and Charlotte.

Bob graduated from Candler High School in 1917. He was too young to join Uncle Sam's fighters the first year of World War I, but he took up army training at Trinity College—now Duke University—and put in hours of study on a literary AB course. However, he did not continue in Durham long, for he was mustered out during the 1918 Christmas holidays, and entered Weaver College at Weaverville. He rounded out his college education later at the University of North Carolina.

Both in school and at college Bob was active in athletics, playing baseball and football. Perhaps handling the pigskin with proficiency enabled him to throw white face bulls later as a hobby. He was also active in literary and debating societies. So fond was he of getting into an argument that at one time he seriously considered studying law. All we can say about this is that the courtroom lost a promising attorney who might have been presiding as Judge Groce in our Superior Court today if he had so desired. He participated in State Triangle debates.

Perhaps Bob first cultivated his rose hobby in spare time after banking hours. Yes, Bob made a connection with the Wachovia Bank & Trust Company and was with them until July, 1942, when he donned a uniform in the 879th Truck Company. He was stationed during the war at Camp Sutton headquarters and his chief duty was convoy duty in the states.

These many years Bob's main desire was to enter business for himself, so he became associated in Asheville with his father after Hitler and Hirohito ran up the white flag. Some time before, Thomas A. Groce, Sr., had purchased the business interest of the late Mr. Dunn and his sons were taken into the business. Thomas A. Groce, Sr., is president of Dunn & Groce Funeral Home. Other officers are T. A. Groce, Jr., vice-president; Fred F. Groce, secretary; John Robert Groce, treasurer; and Willis H. Groce, manager.

For some reason or other, Bob has not been "hooked" by a designing woman. He has preferred to blaze his own trail alone, but who knows when he will fall into the matrimonial net! Perhaps he has the right slant on life at that but we could not mean the end of the morticians' business.

Bob is a 17th degree Mason in Hominy Lodge No. 491 and a member of the American Business Club. He is a Methodist and lives with his parents at 11 Tampa Ave., West Asheville. There are seven boys in the Groce family. In addition to those mentioned above there are A. L. Groce, who holds a position with the American Telephone Company, Atlanta, Ga. Rev. William Harold Groce, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Newton, N. C.; and Hugh Groce.

In conclusion Bob tells us that he has always "enjoyed life." We can believe it. He got a great kick the other day attending the baby beef show over in Waynesville. That is one of several annual events that is discussed all over Western North Carolina.

Well, when you're ready to be permanently buried we advise you or your heirs to contact the genial John Robert Groce.

ECW honors June Groce as 'Honored Woman'

June B. Groce, recognized by the ECW as "Honored Woman" of the Diocese of Western North Carolina, was born near Asheville and attended the Church of the Redeemer from infancy until the family moved to Asheville when she was a teenager. She then attended Trinity Church where she was active in the youth group. June studied music and has been a choir member almost all of her life.

She helped organized a group to start a new Episcopal mission in West Asheville where she had moved following her marriage to Fred Groce, who is now retired from Groce Funeral Homes. That mission became St. George's Church. It was started in 1951 with her help and June has been a very energetic participant ever since.

She has taught Sunday School, has been active on the altar Guild, has been president of the ECW many times, has served on the vestry and has helped with dinners, receptions and rummage sales.

As small churches often do over their lives, St. George's had its ups and down — June was one of the most influential and effective people in the congregation in overcoming those downs.

In the community, June helped organize the Asheville Buncombe County Christian Mission (ABCCM) in 1969 to help low income families with heating and electric bills, food, clothes, etc. This is now a huge organization that is a tremendous asset to Asheville and Buncombe County. June volunteered at ABCCM for 25 years.

She also volunteered for many years as a welcomed visitor to inmates at the medium security prison, Craggy Correctional Center, north of Asheville. She is past president of Thom's Rehabilitation Hospital Auxiliary, the Jaycettes, and the Rhododendron Civil Club of Asheville. She is past president and treasurer of the Salvation Army Auxiliary and has volunteered at the Red Cross for many years.

In the diocese, she was a member of the ECW board and served on the board of Patterson School. She worked with the Episcopal Deerfield (Retirement Community) Auxiliary and was on the committee that initiated the Renewal Conference at Kanuga Conference Center. During many years, June has often been an elected and voting delegate to the annual convention of the diocese.

June never stops doing and giving. She sends cards to the sick and to those with birthdays. She calls those who miss church or are sick. She has taken meals to countless people over the years. June is a very special, humble and loving Christian.

Rev. T. A. Groce

Coming to Western North Carolina from Greenville County, SC in 1909, the Rev. T. A. Groce was one of Methodism's few remaining old-time circuit riders.

T. A. Groce was known as a vibrant force in WNC for more than a half a century. He was a son of the late John T. and Mildred Goodlett Groce.

Rev. Groce was ordained to preach in 1907 and first served the Jonathon Creek Church in Waynesville before later pastoring Mills River, Haywood Street and Asbury Memorial churches along with others.

In WWII, the old-time circuit rider was an army chaplain and following the war he became the first Methodist chaplain at the V.A. Hospital in Oteen.

Transportation from place to place involved first, riding a horse, then by horse and buggy and eventually the Model-T Ford came along.

The Gospel work was the pleasure of the 83-year-old clergyman, who also became involved in various campaigns such as the cancer drive in Buncombe County, in which he served as chairman of the unit in 1957.

T. A. Groce didn't really see what the suffering cancer patients went through until undergoing surgery for cancer himself.

His efforts with the cancer drive in Buncombe County raised $10,000 each year to assist the American Cancer Society.

Rev. T. A. Groce

From his birth in 1879 to his death in 1962, T.A. Groce lived to be a very inspirational person, whose ideas influenced not only the world he lived in, but also his family, who presently owns and operates Groce Funeral Home in Asheville.

PREACHERS ROLL UP SLEEVES—Methodist ministers of Asheville and vicinity didn't wait for the shortage of labor to improve, but they went right ahead with clearing brush from the site purchased on Haywood road for a new Methodist house of worship. Shown here, busy with the job at hand, are the Rev. Clifford Pearce, the Rev. A. C. Gibbs, the Rev. J. W. Fitzgerald, the Rev. T. A. Groce, the Rev. A. B. Dennis, the Rev. C. Moody Smith and the Rev. Lee F. Tuttle. It is expected that services will be held in a large tent on the property in the next few weeks, preparatory to the formation of a congregation. The property is situated opposite the Deaverview road intersection.

Asheville Times April 30, 1946

T.A. Groce, Sr.

The high standards in compassion and integrity demonstrated by the staff of Groce Funeral Home were established by the Reverend T.A. Groce, Sr.

Rev. Groce was a vibrant force in Western North Carolina Methodism for more than a half century and was one of the last old-time circuit riders. He was born in Greenville County, SC, and was admitted to the Western Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church in 1907. His early career saw him serving churches in Jonathan Creek in the Waynesville District and Mills River and Fairview churches in the Sulphur Spring District. He traveled his early duties in a horse and buggy and then a T-Model Ford, which he once said, "got around like an old horse".

He served as an Army chaplain during WWI and came back to WNC after the Armistice, where he became the first Methodist chaplain at the then new VA Hospital at Oteen. Afterward he served Asbury Memorial Church and then Montmorenci Methodist Church at Candler. He retired for the first time in 1939, but WWII took many young ministers from the mountain region so he left retirement to take the Piney Mountain Charge until 1945, and then the West Asheville Methodist Church. In 1950 he helped organize Abernethy United Methodist Church, after which he retired for the second time.

This also was a short-lived retirement as he began filling in the Swannanoa charge, serving Bethel and Azalea Churches, and also Sandy Mush in Leicester. When the Methodists of Beverly Hills began to want a church in their community, Rev. Groce was sent to investigate their needs, and for the second time since his retirement he helped a group of families organize a church, which was named in his honor, Groce United Methodist Church.

In addition to his church work, Rev. Groce, who died in 1962, also chaired the Buncombe County Cancer Drive in 1957, and was a member of the Hominy Masonic Lodge #491 and the West Asheville Rotary Club.

He and his wife, Elizabeth Hunt Groce, who died in 1948, were parents of seven sons, J. Robert Groce, Thomas A. Groce, Jr., Willis H. Groce, Rev. W. Harold Groce, Alvin L. Groce, Fred F. Groce, and Hugh W. Groce. Most of these sons were active at one time or another in the founding and operation of Groce Funeral Home and based their standards of integrity on their father's example.

Early Circuit Days Recalled

Ash. Cit., 9-24-59

By BOB SEYMOUR
Citizen Staff Writer

The days when preachers covered their circuits on horseback and preached in "camp meeting style" every Sunday are recalled in a record being distributed by the Woman's Society of Christian Service of Groce Memorial Methodist Church.

The Rev. T. A. Groce, one of Methodism's few remaining old-time circuit riders, put his early experiences on a tape recorder a couple of years ago. Since then the women of the church have had the tape made into a long-play record.

After a few statements of his youth and life before he entered the ministry, Mr. Groce begins an amazing tale of primitive life as he saw it in 1909, when he moved to the Jonathan Creek circuit near Soco Gap in Haywood County.

His parsonage was furnished with a few pieces of furniture and a 1,200-pound horse, complete with saddle. The horse and saddle, he learned, went with the circuit.

Civilization had made few inroads into the mountains in 1909, and Mr. Groce found that even the steel-tired buggy he bought in Asheville would not go everywhere he had to travel.

RECALLS EPISODES

The frankness of mountain people surprised Mr. Groce at first and he still recalls humorous examples: One man, quite a skeptic, always stood outside the church with a heavy dogwood stick.

Mr. Groce was also impressed by the poverty of many of the mountaineers who lived on his circuit. They lived, slept, cooked and ate in the same room.

After the children were put to bed the mother and father would take positions beside the hearth, he with tobacco and she with snuff, and "spit the fire out" before going to bed themselves, Mr. Groce declares.

BACON QUALITY POOR

He also recalls days when he went to bed "tired, worn down and still hungry." He ate so much at one home the man of the house told him "we expect to have a little something in the house for breakfast!" The mountain hogs which ran wild didn't furnish very high quality bacon but it filled a man's stomach.

Church services in the mountains were far removed from the worship conducted in churches today. Preachers carried bulky Bibles with large type so they could read by candle light.

Since there were never enough song books to go around, the preachers would "line off" songs. When the preacher had read a couple of lines, a member of the congregation would "hist a tune" and the people would sing as far as the preacher had read. Then he would read two more lines.

Even when all the members knew the song, the custom of "lining off" was carried through. One of the favorites was: "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand and cast a wishful eye to Canaan's fair and happy land, where my possessions lie."

These people, living in a hard country, sang "I am bound for the Promised Land" with a fervor born in hunger and hard times.

See paragraph on back

Mr. Groce finally invited the man in and got a reply he still laughs about. The man agreed to come inside the church if the preacher would let him "send to glory" all the souls who were converted at the altar. He declared that was the only way they could get to heaven because they soon forgot their religion once they left the church.

With equal candor, a mountain man told the precaher what a fine son he had. "In fact, I like your son more than I do you!'

WENT BAREFOOT

Mr. Groce still remembers seeing grown men coming to church barefoot—wearing overalls and blue shirts. These men, though, had faith that their God was ever mindful of their tribulations.

In evening services they would rise for "a word of testimony." On one occasion an elderly man kept trying to get up but every time he would clamber to his feet someone else already had the floor.

Finally the preacher asked the congregation to wait until the old man managed to get up. "And what has the Lord done for you," the preacher asked. The old-timer replied, 'Well, to tell the truth, He's just about killed me."

This was taken better, however, than a statement by the community bully, who came to church drunk. Midway through the sermon he became violently ill and had to be carried from the church. Forgetting the quantity of white lightning he had stowed away earlier, the bully declared, "Preaching like that would make anybody sick."

Mr. Groce thrived on Gospel preaching and turned his 81st birthday this week. (Tuesday, Sept. 22). Retired for the third time, he has built two churches and rebuilt a third since his first retirement, Mr. Groce is still regarded as a leader by Western North Carolina Methodist ministers.

Services [redacted]r Rev. T. A. Groce To Be Held Today At 11 A. M.

8/28/62

Services for the Rev. T. A. Groce who died Tuesday night in an Asheville hospital, will be held at 11 a.m. Friday (today) in Groce Methodist Church, one of the churches he organized since his last "retirement." The other is Abernethy Methodist.

A native of Greenville County, S. C., Rev. Groce came to Western North Carolina in 1909 as a circuit rider. He first served the Jonathan Creek Church in the Waynesville district, and after that served in succession, Mills River, Sulphur Springs, Acton, Candler, Haywood Street, Asbury Memorial, Ray Street in Statesville, Coburn Memorial in Salisbury and Zion Hill at Cornelius and Andrews.

During World War I he was Army Chaplain at Camp Green in Charlotte. He was the first Methodist chaplain of VA Hospital, Oteen in 1919.

He started his church work as a supply pastor in the South Carolina Conference in 1907, and was admitted to the Western North Carolina Conference two years later.

Rev. Groce came to this section for tht benefit of his wife's health. She died in 1948.

Survivors are seven sons J. Robert, Thomas A. Jr., Willis H., Fred F., and Hugh W. Groce of Asheville, Alvin L. Groce of Charlotte and the Rev. W. Harold Groce of Albemarle; three sisters, Mrs. W. E. McCain and Mrs. Beauford Trammel of Greenvillt, S. C. and Mrs. John Baylo of Atlanta, Ga.; two brothers, W. O. Groce of Greenville and J. W. Groce of High Point, and 12 grandchildren.

Officiating at today's service will be tht Rev. F. W. Kiker, pastor of Groce Church; the Rev. Robert Tuttle, superintendent of the Asheville Methodist District and tht Rev. R. T. Houts, pastor of Abernethy Church.

Burial will be in Green Hills Cemetery. Pallbearers will be Thomas F. Dabney, Hugh B. Stevens, Hubert Kanipe, Hoyt Johnson, Charlie Clark, Robert Blake, Frank A. Johnson, Jr., Howard Miller, Wilbert Burgess, David Ball, Charles Daniel, Gordon Liverette, Lee A. Hollars, and Gene Pope.

Three years ago, the WSCS of Groce Methodist (named in his honor) taped his reminisences of his old circuit riding days.

While devoting most of his time and energy to church and missionary work, he found time after his retirement to help with various campaigns such as the Cancer Drive. He was chairman of the Buncombe County unit in 1957. He was a member of the Hominy Masonic Lodge 491, AF and AM, and was a member of the West Asheville Rotary Club.

REV. T. A. GROCE

At the outbreak of World War II, Rev. Groce came out of retirement to take the Piney Mountain Charge from 1942 to 1945.

The church burned during the time and Rev. Groce saw to it that the structure was re-built, as a model rural church costing $22,000.

Rev. Groce served at West Asheville Methodist Church for a period of time after the Rev. H. C. Sprinkle entered service as a chaplain.

Rev. T. A. Groce Rites Set Friday

Ash. Citizen 8-30-67

The Rev. T. A. Groce, a vibrant force in Western North Carolina Methodism for more than half a century and one of the last old-time circuit riders, died Tuesday night in an Asheville hospital.

Mr. Groce thrived on Gospel work, and while he had "retired" three times, he continued to be regarded by thousands of church members and ministers as a principal leader in the church.

A resident of 11 Tampa Ave. for many years, he would have been 84 years old Sept. 22.

Services will be held at 11 a. m. Friday in Groce Methodist Church, one of the churches he organized and one which was named after him.

Officiating ministers will be the Rev. F. W. Kiker, pastor of Groce Church; the Rev. Robert G. Tuttle, superintendent of the Asheville Methodist District; and the Rev. R. T. Houts, pastor of Abernethy Methodist Church.

Burial will be in Green Hills Cemetery, and pallbearers will be Thomas F. Dabney, Hugh B. Stevens, Hubert Kanipe, Hoyt Johnson, Charlie Clark, Robert Blake, Frank A. Johnson Jr., Howard Miller, Wilbert Burgess, David Ball, Charles Daniel, Gordon Liverette, Lee A. Hollars and Gene Pope.

The body will be placed in the Groce Funeral Home chapel Thursday morning to remain until time for the service Friday.

A native of Greenville County, S. C., a son of John T. and Mildred Goodlett Groce, Mr. Groce began his church work as a supply pastor in the South Carolina Conference in 1907.

Two years later, he was admitted to the Western North Carolina Conference and came to the mountain region at the age of 30.

The Rev. Mr. Groce first served the Jonathan Creek Church in Waynesville District and later was given the Mills River and Fairview charges in the Sulphur Springs circuit.

His parsonage in those early days of the century was furnished with a few sticks of furniture and a 1,200-pound horse.

By the time he received the Sulphur Springs circuit, he had a horse and a buggy and finally graduated to a T-Model Ford, which he once said got around like an old horse.

A short period of service in Statesville at Mt. Zion Methodist Church was followed by a new career in the Army Chaplain Corps at the outbreak of World War I.

Although his health prevented his acceptance for overseas duty with the troops, he served as chaplain at Camp Green in Charlotte.

The armistice saw him return to the mountain region where he first worked with the YMCA in the interest of rehabilitation of 16 western counties.

In 1919, Mr. Groce was appointed evangelist for the Waynesville District and served as pastor at the Methodist Church in Andrews.

Shortly thereafter, he became the first Methodist chaplain to be stationed at the then new VA Hospital at Oteen.

The late Twenties, from 1926 to 1929, saw him serve Haywood Street Methodist Church in Asheville, followed by a year at Race Street Methodist Church in Salisbury.

His health made it necessary for him to return to a higher altitude and from 1930 to 1934 he worked in the Acton circuit.

From 1934 to 1935 he was minister at Asbury Memorial Church, then he served Montmorenci Methodist Church of the Candler circuit until 1939.

His wife's illness was responsible for his retirement (for the first time) in 1939. (He had married the former Elizabeth Hunt of Dacusville, S. C., who died in Asheville in 1948 at the age of 70).

Another world war took many young ministers from Mr. Groce's beloved mountain region, and he left retirement to take the Piney Mountain charge from 1942 to 1945.

The church burned during this time, and Mr. Groce saw to it that the structure was re-built, a model rural church costing $22,000.

He served at West Asheville Methodist Church for several months after the Rev. H. C.

BUNCOMBE MEMORIAL PUBLIC LIBRARY

Sprinkle entered service as a chaplain.

Mr. Groce helped organize the Abernethy Methodist Church in 1946. In 1950, for the second time, he retired. Again his plan was short lived.

He began to fill in on the Swannanoa charge, holding services at Bethel and Azalea Methodist Churches, and spent six months at Sandy Mush.

When the Methodist residents of Beverly Hills began to want a church in their community, the Rev. Mr. Groce was sent to investigate the needs, and for the second time since his "retirement," he helped a group of families organize a church.

Three years ago, the Women's Society of Christian Service of Groce Methodist Church taped his reminiscences of the old circuit riding days.

Subsequently transferred to a recording, the session served as a permanent commentary on the mountain people and the old religious meetings as remembered by this active minister.

Mr. Groce, while devoting practically all of his time and energy to church and missionary activities, found time after his last retirement to aid various campaigns, such as the Cancer Drive. He was chairman of the Buncombe County unit in 1957.

However, he made a point of conserving his strength to work among his churches and people, and his social activities were confined to such occasions as church or neighborhood gatherings in observation of anniversaries and other special events. He was a member of Hominy Masonic Lodge 491, A.F. and A.M., and West Asheville Rotary Club.

Surviving Mr. Groce who did more in retirement than some men accomplish in a lifetime, are seven sons, J. Robert, Thomas A. Jr., Willis H., Fred F. and Hugh W. of Asheville, Alvin L. of Charlotte and the Rev. W. Harold Groce of Albemarle; three sisters, Mrs. W. E. McCain and Mrs. Buford Trammel of Greenville, S. C., and Mrs. John Balyo of Atlanta, Ga.; two brothers, W. O. of Greenville and the Rev. J. W. Groce of High Point; and 12 grandchildren.

REV. T. A. GROCE

T. A. Groce Foundation Is Outlined

Ash. Cit-Z. 9-30-67

Outlines for the T. A. Groce Memorial Scholarship Foundation have now been completed by the board of directors and executive committee.

The foundation was established in memory of the Rev. T. A. Groce, dean of Western North Carolina Methodism, who died Aug. 29.

To be supported from the annual income of permanently invested capital funds, the scholarship or scholarships will depend upon the size of the invested endowment.

Although it will be directed particularly to Methodist students at Brevard College, it can be granted to a student of another denomination or one attending another institution.

Western North Carolina students who plan to enter a full time Christian vocation or have shown that they plan to make their vocation "the finest expression of Christian service and witness" will be eligible.

The foundation will be handled by a board of directors that includes:

Phil Sales, the Rev. W. J. Miller, Robert Groce, Alvin Groce, Willis Groce, the Rev. Vernon Hall, Hugh Stevens, Paul J. Smith, the Rev. R. G. Tuttle, Ottis Green, the Rev. John R. Jordan, Hubert Kanipe, the Rev. R. T. Houts Jr., Harold Shipley, the Rev. F. W. Kiker, Mrs. J. D. Johnston, Mrs. B. T. Ray, all of Asheville; C. J. Setzer, Candler; Hugh Massie, Waynesville; Mack Ray, Burnsville; the Rev. Harold Groce, Albemarle; Dr. L. F. Zerfoss, Hendersonville; and Glenn Hardesty, Brevard.

An executive committee of nine persons will handle the details of administration. They are Ottis Green, honorary chairman; the Rev. R. T. Houts Jr., chairman; Hubert Kanipe, vice chairman; Mrs. B. T. Ray, secretary-treasurer; Paul J. Smith, legal advisor; and Robert Groce, Willis Groce, Robert G. Tuttle and Hugh Massie, all members at large.

Contributions should be directed to Mrs. B. T. Ray, 167 Lakeshore Dr., Asheville.

I really didn't want to do it, but they needed blood for the soldiers...

It was 1950 and the Korean War was going on when Asheville resident David A. Guthrie gave his first pint of the blood. He didn't come up with the idea on his own, instead Guthrie says two buddies he worked with at American Enka pushed him to do it during a bloodmobile at the company. "They needed blood for the soldiers. I didn't really want to do it because I didn't like the idea of getting stuck but they talked to me into it."

David A. Guthrie

Forty three years and almost 28 gallons of blood later David A. Guthrie is still giving the gift of life. In addition to whole blood, Guthrie has also given platlets 73 times in the apherisis program at the Asheville-Mountain Area Chapter of the American Red Cross. "It's something I can do that helps my fellow man a little bit," Guthrie says.

A lot has changed in the blood donation process since Guthrie's first experience in 1950. At that time doctors, not nurses, drew the blood and donors were given a shot of novocaine to numb the arm before the needle for blood was inserted. "That shot of novocaine was like having a hornet sting you. I dreaded that worse than giving the blood," he says. After a few donations Guthrie says he convinced the doctor to take his blood without the shot of novocaine. He says donors were also required to lie flat on their back during the process which took about two hours.

These days novocaine is not necessary and is not used during blood donation. Donors are seated in lounge chairs and the entire process, from registration until a donor is on his or her way, takes only about an hour. "If you can't spare an hour every 8 weeks what else are you goanna do with your time," Guthrie says. Since Guthrie gave his first pint of blood he's gotten his family into the act - all give blood and Guthrie says one of his daughters helped organize one of the first bloodmobiles at Asheville High School in the 1970's.

Why the dedication? The answer is simple Guthrie says and that's also the point. Giving blood is one of the simplest, most immeasurably important things a person can do and just about anyone can do it. He says anyone can make a difference and help others and they don't have to spend money to do it. "Poor people or rich people can give blood. It doesn't matter because it doesn't cost a dime to give blood."

For all blood donors there must be a "first time" and it's normal for new things to cause some anxiety. That was true for Buncombe county resident Veronica Whitfield who gave blood for the first time just this December. "I guess I was a little afraid it might hurt but she (nurse) had the needle in so fast it felt like just a little sting," says Whitfield. She decided to donate blood because someone simply asked her to. "Change is hard and the unknown is scary but this really wasn't so bad."

If you'd like to donate blood please call the Asheville-Mountain Area Chapter of the American Red Cross during its annual 12 Days of Christmas Blood Drive. It takes about one hour to donate a pint of blood. When you arrive you'll register and be asked about your present and past health and lifestyle. This is done confidentially with a nurse. Next, we'll check your blood pressure and temperature and test the hemaglobin in your blood with a finger prick. You'll then be given a form so you can decide in private whether it's safe to give your blood to another person. No one at the center will know your answer. A nurse will cleanse the arm from which you will donate. All the supplies used, including the needles, are sterile and used only once. You cannot get HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, from donating blood. During the actual donation process you'll fell a brief sting and in about 10 minutes you'll have donated a pint of blood.

After you donate you will be given a snack and drink in our canteen where you'll relax for a few minutes. During our 12 Days of Christmas Blood Drive we'll have some special treats, holiday music and a token of appreciation for you as our way of saying thanks this holiday for giving the gift of life.If you'd like to donate call the Red Cross today at 258-3888 and make an appointment.

HENRY HALL IS REPORTED AS MISSING

Pfc. Henry Garrison Hall has been reported missing in action in the North African theater of war, according to a message received Wednesday by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Hall, of 66 Mildred avenue, West Asheville.

The telegram received by Mr. and Mrs. Hall was from the adjutant general and stated that Private Hall had been missing since March 28.

Young Hall, who became 19 years of age since his induction in the army last June, entered the service immediately after graduating from Lee Edwards Senior high school. He received his basic training at Camp Wheeler, Ga., and then was transferred to Fort Bragg before being sent overseas. He was among the first American troops to reach North Africa.

Young Hall was a member of the Sons of the Legion Drum and Bugle corps and was a member of the local unit of the North Carolina State guard.

Hall Sends Message To His Parents

A Berlin news broadcast has revealed that Pfc. Henry Garrison Hall, 19, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Hall of 66 Mildred avenue, is a prisoner of war in Germany. The announcement cam over a broadcast heard last night by Mr. and Mrs. Edward N. Wright of 26 Farrwood avenue.

Pfc. Hall had been reported missing since April 21. The message was as follows over the short wave radio:

"Dad, I am safe in Germany. Details will follow later. The Red Cross is wonderful. Love to everybody. Signed—Henry." Mr. and Mrs. Wright listen in each night for these messages from Berlin and Tokyo and have relayed their information on to more than a score of parents. Ten messages were received last night.

Pfc. Hall enlisted in the army in June, 1942, and has not been home since entering the service. He received his basic training at Camp Wheeler, Ga., and was sent overseas last October in the first American group to land in North Africa. He was in the infantry.

He was graduated from Lee H. Edwards high school in 1942 and was a member of the Sons of the American Legion drum and bugle corps and of the state guard. He also took an active part in the work of the West Asheville Methodist church.

This Is Memorial Day

IT'S A GRAND OLD FLAG...

By GERTRUDE RAMSEY

Joseph L. Hall is a man who loves his country and reveres his country's flag.

He served his country in the first World War, his sons were in World War II. It is a family to which patriotism is a noble, fine thing, unsentimentalized, shown in loyal service and good citizenship.

Several years Hall acquired a flag that had flown over the U.S. Capitol on July 4, 1961. This was the first day a 50-star flag became the symbol of a 50-state Union. And he treasured this flag not only for its great historical significance, but for all the nation's history told in those stripes and bright stars.

You know how it is with a family with a treasured flag. It's put away carefully for safekeeping, but the family loses something by the very fact the flag is stored away

Hall decided he needed some way to display this flag and yet keep it in a case. With his son Garrison (who had spent two and a half years of World War II in German prisoner-of-war camps) he worked out a blue print for a three-cornered wooden case with glass front exactly the size and shape of the official flag folded into the traditional "tricorne" dating from the days of the American Revolution. Thus mounted, the flag was sealed in a case that could be displayed on mantel, shelf or hung on the wall.

Friends who saw the flag were impressed. And being a generous man, Hall made several cases for friends. His flag case was not only suitable for his own flag, but was a method of preserving and yet displaying the flags treasured by those who have received them from the caskets of loved ones buried with military honor

Hall, of a family with a tradition of serving its country (a grandfather fell at Chickamauga) and himself a veteran and his son Garrison Hall knew how such flags are valued now and will be valued in years to come — but these flags cannot be flown at home; after all, they are about nine by five feet.

Although he experimented with other woods, he settled on walnut for the flag case, which by the way is copyrighted, because of the wood's beauty, durability, response to hand-rubbing, and because it is a much-liked American hardwood.

He was a member of the Asheville Fire Department for many years, retiring as a captain.

A creative man, he has many hobbies including gardening and the care of a large country place, "Hall's Seven Acres." He has a woodworking shop in his home, where he turns out many fine items ranging from wall plaques of birds in flight to the most interesting and comfortable chairs imaginable, also of walnut, which he calls "kibitzer chairs."

A generous man, he willingly permits groups in the area to schedule picnics, retreats and meetings at "Seven Acres." Here many hours of spare time work have resulted in a log cabin museum filled with relics and items from this mountain area showing the history of the section and the people; there are lily ponds and a mallard pond and a mill wheel; walks and paths lead by little nooks each with its own surprise. There is a cooking and picnic area and a large pavilion. There is a huge ancient tree in which one of Hall's ancestors carved his initials more than a century ago.

Those who use the area are asked to leave it clean—there is no fee.

The flag case is copyrighted, but Hall has no intention of letting production become purely commercial. Veterans organizations expressed interest in having them for veterans, and this and similar purposes please him.

MAYOR AND ALDERMEN.

West Asheville Nominations Made Last Night.

A largely attended non-partisan mass meeting was held at the Jarrett school house, West Asheville, last night. On motion N. Plamondon was called to the chair, and Jas. D. Carrier was requested to act as secretary.

S. D. Hall, D. H. Penland, E. G. Carrier, N. Plamondon and J. R. Reynolds were put in nomination for mayor. All but the two first withdrew their names, as they could not serve. S. D. Hall received the majority of all the votes cast and was declared the nominee.

W. E. Logan, W. H. Wright, N. Plamondon, Newton Shepard, colored, J. D. Penland, A. E. Clark, J. R. Reynolds, M. M. Ledford, Jas. Young, colored, and W. G. Looper, colored, were put in nomination. The balloting resulted in the nomination of W. E. Logan, N. Plamondon, J. D. Penland and J. R. Reynolds. Upon the second ballot between W. H. Wright and N. Shepard, colored, the former was nominated. The election will be held the first week in May.

WEST ASHEVILLE ROAD. 1899?

S. D. Hall Hopes the Commissioners Will Push the Work.

EDITOR THE CITIZEN:—I feel the necessity of a good road through West Asheville. I, as well as thousands of citizens of the country that traveled the turnpike road last winter, know something of the necessity of the road, and just to think that a few individuals would cause the work to stop! It is too bad. Let the people have the road. Let our superintendent have the nerve to go ahead and our good commissioners that we elected press the work. When I was a schoolboy I got plenty of whippings and decided that when I got to be a man I would lick the teacher. The former writer says Gaston would get a licking the next election. Gaston, as I understand, says, "Let the surveyor locate a 4 per cent. grade," and he did it. Now, then, if the road doesn't pass my house let it be made for the good of the country and public in general.

So far as petitions to the Commissioners are concerned they don't amount to anything. A friend of either survey may start out and get a thousand names, just because they were asked to sign by a friend. I feel that all those opposing the change in the road are perfect gentlemen and want to see West Asheville advance with the times and let the wave of prosperity strike the ridge on the west side of the French Broad river once. We are now in the mud and need rocks to place our feet upon. We pay our tax and haul produce to Asheville and the traffic is heavy daily on this road. It got so bad last winter that the mail man said: "If you see an old hat in the mud don't drive over it; Uncle Sam's business is down under there."

Now, Commissioners, we know you have the brains, the bullion and the backbone and entreat you to have the nerve to push the work right along on the West Asheville road. If you can't make the change according to law, go ahead on the old road bed. Let us have the road. I know of several sites purchased by Chicago gentlemen in West Asheville and they say they will not build until we have a macadamized road. Strawberry Hill and adjoining property is just in this state. Don't let such a dark cloud come after the sun seemed to be shining for us so brightly.

S. D. HALL.

Real Estate Agent.

There can be no doubt of the fact that one of the greatest assets that any city or section can possess is wide awake real estate men. No class does more to assist in its development and making its advantages known to the outside world, bring settlers and attract the attention of capitalists and investors. Asheville owes much to its real estate men and its phenomenal growth is due as much to their efforts as to any other one thing. Among the best known dealers in the city is Mr. S. D. Hall whose office is located at 11 Patton avenue. Mr. Hall came to Asheville over thirty years ago, when it was scarcely more than a country town with a few thousand inhabitants. For some time he clerked in the general merchandising business at the corner of Patton and Lexington avenues, where the Bon Marche now stands. Years ago, however, he saw the possibilities that lay in the great natural resources of the section and went into the real estate business in which he has been most successful. Although he does a general selling and renting business in all its branches he is particularly interested in West Asheville, the thriving suburb where he resides and which has since the street railway was extended been growing so rapidly. This beautiful section is attracting great attention from investors and values are rising rapidly as the population increases. It is understood that the town will be incorporated at the next session of the legislature, and water works and other improvements installed. In all of these movements Mr. Hall is taking an active part and is always ready to aid every movement for the advancement of this section. It should also be mentioned that Mr. Hall once conducted a business in the Buttrick block, and later was with the Cotton Mills store for ten years, after which he entered the real estate business.

S. D. HALL.

W. ASHEVILLE HAS PERPETUAL BOARD

Just Discovered that General Assembly Played Citizens a "Sanitary" Joke.

MEMBERS OF BOARD "SHALL BE" ELECTED

More Than That, the Board Is Authorized to Fill Its Own Vacancies.

West Asheville probably has the distinction of being the only town on the map that has a sanitary board that has been created by the general assembly of the state to serve perpetually. The act was passed at the last session of the assembly, but it was only lately realized by the citizens of West Asheville that they have a sanitary board that cannot be ousted; one that fills all its own vacancies; and the members of which must be re-elected every two years, whether they are the ones that the citizens desire or not.

No one has yet been able to learn who framed the statute, but it may be found in the new book of public laws of North Carolina, and the facts about the West Asheville sanitary board, as stated above, are borne out as follows:

"That the chairman of the board of county commissioners of Buncombe county, or vice chairman of said board, or temporary chairman of said board, if the chairman is for any reason unable to perform his duties as such chairman, together with J. D. Penland, John McElroy, Duke Hall and J. U. Jarrett, shall constitute the sanitary board of the district mentioned in section one of this act, and shall be known and designated as West Asheville sanitary board; that the parties heretofore designated as members of said board other than the chairman of the board of county commissioners, shall be duly and regularly elected on the first Tuesday in May of the year one thousand nine hundred and thirteen and the first Tuesday in May every two years thereafter, and any vacancy occurring shall be filled by said board."

Community Life Centers About Organized Groups

West Asheville Folks Combine Efforts In Unity Plan

By GLENN W. NAVES

The people of West Asheville believe in organization.

And, incidentally, they believe in co-operation, and that a combination of these two elements is essential to community growth and progress.

Consequently, they have embodied the two in a number of well organized community groups, each of which is varied in policy and purpose so as to conform with the needs of everybody from the business man down to the boys and girls who are going to school and training themselves to be future citizens.

Beginning several years ago, public spirited citizens of the community grouped themselves in the belief that business, religion, social work, education and community government can best be conducted when each is thoroughly organized. And these organizations have grown with the progressive expansion of that section until each is a valuable asset, something which just as essential in a sense as the streets, schools and churches are, because many of these benefits have been obtained through the efforts of one or more of the organizations.

Club Is Oldest

The largest and oldest of these groups are the West Asheville club, the West Asheville Community club and the West Asheville Merchants Association.

The former was organized in November, 1925 with S. D. Hall as president. Other presidents have been: Don C. Young, 1926, Hugh Sowers, 1927 and H. B. Posey, whose term will expire in November of this year. Both Mr. Posey and Mr. Sowers are bankers, the former being cashier of the Bank of West Asheville and the latter connected with the Wachovia Bank and Trust Company. Mr. Young is representative No. 1 from Buncombe county in the General Assembly. G. G. Morgan was elected the first secretary and after his resignation was succeeded by Bert Starnes, who has served in that capacity since.

The club's membership of around 75, includes business and professional men of every calling—lawyers, bankers, ministers, physicians, merchants, public officials, and even one fire chief, a mayor and a few "politicians." The fire chief is A. L. Duckett, of the Asheville fire department, the mayor, Gallatin Roberts and the "politicians" include Mr. Young, who is also among Asheville's best known attorneys.

The club has since its organization shown a deep interest in the upbuilding and progress of the community, and at present has on schedule a number of plans in that direction.

Community Club

Shortly after the West Asheville club was formed the ladies of the community decided that they should also have a similar organization so the West Asheville Community club was formed.

The club has its musical and literary de- which have separate meetings and give programs in which the members participate. One of the most popular of these features is the monthly musical program, usually held at the home of a member. Local talent is used and a visiting artist entertains with vocal or instrumental numbers, or perhaps lectures on some interesting phase of music study. Each month the program is planned under the supervision of a selected member and is arranged so as to provide variety and an opportunity for each member to exercise their talent.

In many other ways the club takes an active part in the social, and church and educational life of the community, and has a large and active membership, many of whom are charter members.

Merchants Group

The West Asheville Merchants Association was organized in January, 1926 with a charter membership of 13 business men. The organization has since grown to 60 members, including practically every business concern in the community.

In accordance with tentative plans this organization has continued to function as a mutual benefit group for business men and citizens, and has accomplished much in the expansion of the business interests of West Asheville.

J. R. Mills, who died about two years ago, was the first president. Other officers elected at the initial meeting who are still serving are O. J. Judd, vice president and V. F. Brown, secretary. John May succeeded Mr. Mills as president.

Other Organizations

Other groups pprovide the essential organization element for the people, of the comunity.

Young people's organizations include two troops of the Boy Scouts of America; the Junior Music club; the Business Girls' Circle; the Young Men of the Presbyterian church, and others.

One of the Scout troops has been organized at the Methodist church and is sponsored by the pastor, the Rev. J. S. Hiatt, and others. Troop 5 of the Presbyterian church is under the leadership of Jimmy Haley, patrol leader and F. Bonnotte, Scoutmaster.

The Junior Music club was organized by Mrs. A. X. Blanchard and has since grown from eight to eighty members. The group was formed so as to give the children of the community with musical talent an opportunity to benefit from study and contact with each other, and to maintain their interest in music. The club is known as one of the most active in West Asheville.

Other organizations are the Calvary Baptist church orchestra and male chorus, the Junior choir of the Methodist church; Business Girls' Circle, Woman's Auxiliary, Men of the Church and Young Men of the Church, of the Presbyterian church, the Woman's Missionary groups of the community churches, the B. Y. P. U., Epworth League and Christian Endeavor organizations, the Mitchell Avenue Home club, the Friendship club, the Parent-Teacher Association of Hall Fletcher, Aycock, Eugene Rankin, and Vance schools, the Sunday school groups and others.

Fraternal organizations include the West Asheville chapter, Order of Eastern Star, Locke Craig Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, Red Men, Moose, Odd Fellows and the A. F. and A. M. Masonic

City Motorcycle Officers Have Many Duties

These are four of the six motorcycle officers of the Asheville police force. Left to right, they are: Captain B. E. Brenton, R. L. Sluder, S. D. Hall and E. R. (Dock) Hall. Two officers are off duty due to illness. They are J. R. Pinner and Frank Hagan, the latter having suffered a broken leg while on duty. The six officers ride approximately 108,000 miles annually on Asheville streets. Captain Brenton is head of the unit.

Motorcycle Police Are Kept Constantly On Go

Officers Have Traveled 108,000 Miles In Past Year

Motorcycle police of Asheville during the past fiscal year have made 738 arrests, escorted 550 funerals, protected 2,500 school children without an accident and traveled within the city limits a total of 108,000 miles, Capain B. E. Brenton, in charge of the squad, said yesterday.

The force is composed of Captain Brenton, R. L. Sluder, S. D. Hall, E. R. (Dock) Hall, J. R. Pinner and Frank Hagan. Mr. Hagan has been off duty several months due to a broken leg received on duty and Mr. Pinner has also been ill and is now on desk duty at headquarters.

The motorcycle squad members work from 10 to 16 hours a day sometimes 18 hours, Chief of Police W. J. Everett said. They ride motorcycles six days each week and, due to the large number of drunks and other disorders on Saturdays, they use automobiles on these days. They patrol their beats from noon on Saturdays until 9 o'clock, at which time the regular night patrol comes on duty. They get one day off every nine days.

The city is divided into the following motorcycle police sections: North end, E. R. Hall; South end, R. L. Sluder; West Asheville, S. D. Hall; and general patrol, Captain Brenton.

The motorcycle officers patrol their beats constantly except when called in to escort funerals, parades, visiting notables and the like and to assist in directing traffic at dances and other events held at night. The officers have the same arresting authority as the chief of police and the sheriff. Their heaviest season is during the summer, when Asheville attracts thousands of tourists and is host to conventions.

Are Expert Riders

Captain Brenton joined the service July 1, 1929. R. L. Sluder joined the force April 1, 1924; S. D. Hall, August 3, 1928, E. R. Hall, May 11, 1925; Frank Hagan, January 1, 1926, and J. R. Pinner, December 17, 1930. All are young men and expert motorcycle riders.

In addition to their other duties, the motorcycle officers conduct examinations for automobile drivers during the rush season. This is done to facilitate the assignment of licenses to new drivers by the tax department of the city.

Captain Brenton and Chief Everett said that as soon as Mr. Hagan and Mr. Pinner are able to ride again, an officer will be assigned to downtown patrol to assist traffic officers in breaking up traffic jams.

Each officer rides approximately 50 miles a day in line of duty. This makes a total of 18,000 miles each year, or 108,000 miles for all officers for the year. Of the 2,500 school children watched and directed at crossing during the past year, not one was hurt in a traffic accident. When the officers are not busy in regular rush hours, they spend the time checking automobile tags and watching boulevard crossings to apprehend careless or reckless drivers.

Dressed As Farmers

During the last tobacco market season, several of the motorcycle officers dressed as farmers and broke up a bootlegging gang at the two warehouses.

The motorcycle officers recently donned new uniforms of Biltmore homespun in cream and khaki colors. They form one of the three units of the Asheville police force. The other units are the regular patrolmen and the plain clothes department.

MRS. S. D. HALL TAKEN BY DEATH

Funeral Services Will Be Held At 11 O'Clock This Morning

Funeral services for Mrs. Amelia Cowan Hall, wife of S. D. Hall, real estate dealer, will be held at 11 o'clock this morning at the Dunn-Groce funeral home in West Asheville and burial will be in Green Hill cemetery. The services will be conducted by the Rev. Carlock Hawk, pastor of West Asheville Methodist church and the Rev. O. J. Candler.

Mrs. Hall died at 7:30 o'clock yesterday morning at her home, 267 Sand Hill road in her seventy-first year, after a long illness.

She was the daughter of Canada Cowan, pioneer Asheville jeweler, and Mary Caroline Miller Cowan. She married Mr. Hall October 27, 1886. He was one of the earliest men to realize the great possibilities in Asheville real estate development. For a number of years both he and Mrs. Hall had been active in the West Asheville Methodist church and Mrs Hall enjoyed the affection of all with whom she came in contact.

Besides her husband, she leaves five children: Mrs. L. W. Colson, Hugh C. Hall, Allan D. Hall, Frank C. Hall, and S. Dennis Hall; three sisters, Mrs. B. H. Cosby, Mrs. J. B. Seigler and Mrs. S. P. Burton, a brother, J. K. Cowan; and four grandchildren, Kathryn Ann, Elizabeth, Etta Lee and Billy Hall, all of Asheville.

WEST ASHEVILLE COMMUNITY CLUB NAMES OFFICERS

Mrs. Hamlin Is Elected President To Succeed Mrs. Logan

Mrs. J. R. Hamlin was elected president of the West Asheville Community club at the annual meeting yesterday afternoon at the club house in Rhododendron garden, West Asheville. She succeeds Mrs. Carl Logan who has been president of the club for the past two years.

Other officers elected were: Mrs. J. A. Edwards, first vice president; Mrs. J. Wall Anderson, second vice president; Mrs. Paul Jones, secretary; Mrs. C. A. Hawkins, treasurer; and Mrs. Edward P. Barry, publicity chairman. Mrs. Hawkins and Mrs. Barry were re-elected. The new officers will be installed in May. Future meetings will be held at 3 instead of at 3:30 o'clock.

The following program was presented at the meeting: a talk by Mrs. Anne Kemps on "The Life and Work of Carrie Chapman Catts"; a sketch of Dr. Mary Wooley, noted peace advocate and president of Mt. Holyoke college, by Mrs. Hamlin; and piano selections from Verdi's opera, "Il Trovatore," by Mrs. Edwards.

Brief talks were made by several guests of the club. Mr. Rowland H. Latham, president of the North Carolina Federation of Women's clubs, called attention to the fact that a series of radio talks on art are being broadcast. Mrs. O. C. Hamilton discussed musical activities in West Asheville. Mrs. H. G. Etheridge, district chairman of club presidents, and Mrs. C. B. Osborne, acting district president, also spoke.

Mrs. Hamlin was in charge of the program. A salad course in the St. Patrick motif was served by Miss Rollins and Mrs. Harry Logan, hostesses.

Handte At 87 Alert Trader

By C. R. SUMNER

Jacob S. Handte started working with seeds when he was seven years old and today, at 87, he is still at it and having fun.

There is something about the great potential of seeds that has always fascinated him. In his lifetime he has seen many changes in the way seeds are handled and has watched the encroachment of almost countless aphids, bugs, lice, worms and other pests upon the serenity of the garden operation.

JACOB S. HANDTE

Just now, Handte is owner-manager and general factotum of the Seed Store at 771 Haywood Road. He makes his home with his daughter, Mrs. Elta Handte Blanchard at 77 Blue Ridge Avenue.

A native of Lisbon, Ohio, where he was born Oct. 27, 1868, Handte has during his life seen 18 Presidents of the United States elected. His father, John M. Handte, was a florist and had a greenhouse adjoining his home in Lisbon. It was natural then for Handte to take to flowers and growing things.

When he was a youngster, one of his chores was to get up at 5 o'clock and go to the pasture and drive the cows in for milking and then drive them back to the pasture again before going to school.

He says he never had any trouble waking up because he was always ready to go.

Came Here In 1907

When he was 15 years old he got a little job with a big seed company, the L. Templin organization at Calla, Ohio. During this time he had plenty of opportunity to learn from the ground up scores of "do's and don'ts" about growing things.

It was in 1907, after he had spent some 25 years on the job with Templin that Handte, his wife and daughter came through Asheville bound for Florida. They decided to stop off here a week and were so delighted with the climate that they have been here since.

Handte is proud of the fact that he has never smoked tobacco and has never consumed a bottled beverage. He is not trying to set any kind of record. It is simply that he is just that way.

For some years he has made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Blanchard, a well-known musician, music teacher and composer. He is a faithful member of Centra Methodist Church and takes his post faithfully at the South door each Sunday to greet friends and visitors.

Handte says that the big change in the seed business since he first became interested some 80 years ago has been the rise of the importance of chemicals in gardening and farming. Not only do they greatly influence the fertility of the soil but they also serve to keep a road block on countless bugs and pests that continually attack growing things, he said.

Does Most Of Work

These pests have appeared during his lifetime, he said, but he is not sure just where they came from. Chemicals make it possible to keep them under practical control but it still takes a bit of doing.

He cited the black "Thrip" insect on gladiolas which keep them from opening, the Japanese beetles, the potato beetle, the bean beetle, the tomato blight, a sort of mildew, and the cabbage worm as examples of the several hundred pests that may attack garden and farm production.

Already, he reported, he is making preparations to handle the spring sale of seeds. He does all of the work at his store himself, except a little part-time sacking of seeds for spring handling. For this he pays out about $50 annually and that is his whole labor cost in his store operation.

He has a wonderful time with his work and is still bright, alert and full of energy.

JACOB HANDTE

If per chance, Walter Pitkin should write another book, he would be correct in the title "Life Begins at Eighty" in depicting the many activities of Mr. Jacob S. Handte, owner-manager, bookkeeper, buyer, salesman, and ambassador of good will at his Seed Store on Haywood Road, West Asheville.

Mr. Handte celebrated his 86th. birthday this past October, and among the prized letters he received was one from his friend, the late Gov. William Umstead, written the day before his death. Other letters included one from Major Marshall Kurfees, a close personal friend whose home is in Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

Mr. Handte lives for his church, his home, and his store, and he is happiest when he is at one of these places. He is honorary member of the Board of Stewards and honorary member of a number of the classes at the Central Methodist Church.

He is active with his own Mens' Bible Class at the Central Methodist Church, and every Sunday morning he is there taking care of his secretarial duties, and prior to church service he is always at the door where he gives a cheery greeting to the hundreds of worshipers who enter, each in his own way feeling a little better after this greeting of fellow-ship.

During the week days Mr. Handte may be found at his Seed Store active in many services, -- meeting and talking with people, advising them about various garden problems from the planting on through the harvest. It is always his pleasure to help the prospective gardner (whether it be flowers or vegetables, or both) with his individual needs, and assists him in selecting the seeds that are sown in well prepared earth and later sprout forth into a panorama of colorful loveliness. He sees the tender plants come up and has a feeling of creating something new and fine, and within him a joy as deep and as intangible as the joy of religion arises.

"Polly" the parrot is Mr. Handte's constant companion in his Seed Store. Polly is a good psychologist and greets Mr. Hante

McCullough Seed Company is proud to number among its friends and customers, a man who came to Cincinnati to attend the firm's recent Garden and Lawn Trade Show from Asheville, N. C., Mr. Jacob S. Handte, who is 88 years young operates his own seed store in Asheville. He says he is owner-manager-bookkeeper, buyer-salesman and good will ambassador. He counts his friends by the hundreds and lives for his home, his church and his seed store. Proof of his interest may be seen in the fact he won the prize the McCullough folks awarded the dealer traveling the most distance to their show.

He says we are never old because we have lived a long time. It's what we do-the way we think and the way we live-that makes people old.

Here is a man who proves "Life Begins at 80" and it is a pleasure and a privilege to present to Seed World readers Mr. Jacob S. Handte of Asheville, N. C.

Robert E. Harris Is The Circuit- Rider

Does the name Robert E. Harris ring a bell? If it doesn't, think back to maybe the times you've called Dial-A-Prayer. Remember the voice on the other end telling a Bible story and then having prayer?

Yes, it's the same man.

Robert Harris otherwise known as the Circuit Rider brought the idea of Dial-A-Prayer into North Carolina and Tennessee in 1961, receiving approximately 7800 calls a day; a service too large for the phone company. But still, he pursued the effort and was successful. Robert was born June 13, 1923 to Mr. & Mrs. Bradley Harris of West Asheville.

He had one brother named Bill, and a sister who died at the age of 49. Robert's father was a blacksmith and a man of morals. His grandfather was a Baptist preacher and his great-grandfather was a Methodist minister named Frank Lualan.

The Harris Family in 1923. Mr. & Mrs. Bradley Harris with their two sons, Robert and Billy, made on Hilliard Street in Asheville.

The first dollar bill Robert ever put his hands on was one he found near church.

He asked the Methodist preacher to keep it until it was claimed, and then give it back if no one spoke for the loss. After several hours, the dollar was given back to Robert, and with it, he bought himself a pair of overalls and a Baby Ruth candy bar.

Later in life, Robert Harris took on a role of workmanship to assist his parents during the Great Depression.

That trade was selling ties for a penny-and-a-half. Soon his parents liked the idea well enough that they started their own business.

Robert calls himself a history nut. Everyday of the year he collects between four and five pages of the Asheville Citizen Times.

The front page is pulled out, the sports, comics and then the religious section. Robert Harris is one man that truly believes in giving account of himself; he keeps a diary 365 days of the year of special things completed each day.

Rev. Robert Harris prepares a radio program.

During the year of 1949, Jay Muzzel Mull asked Robert to fill in for a radio program on WLOS, and he liked it so well that he had to have his own program, telling the story of Jesus.

Throughout his ministry, Robert Harris has had several programs on WLOS and WSPA as the "TV Pioneer Preacher", as he has also been well known for having the call-in talk show program in March of 1971 on WWNC, while Claude Freeman was station manager.

Rev. Harris poses with his horse.

Robert tells the story of a lady who stayed up to watch Shock Theater on TV and had to later listen to comforting words from the Nightwatch Pastor to soothe her nerves.

Robert Harris's illustration of the Circuit Rider depicts a fellow dressed in a long-black coat, wearing a pointed hat and riding a black stallion, passing out pamphlets and gospel tracts detailing the simple plan of salvation to all of mankind.

Even today the Circuit Rider, Robert E. Harris says, "I'm everybody's preacher, but nobody claims me." His ministry goes out into the highways and hedges of the world.

Dialing up some inspiration

ASHEVILLE — Technology changes over 40 years, but Dial-A-Prayer remains the same number, the same voice, the same basic message.

"Thank you for dialing a prayer," the recorded voice at 254-5343 reassures the listener. "God be with you and bless you until you dial again is my prayer."

That anonymous voice belongs to Robert E. Harris, better known locally as the Circuit Rider, a preacher on horseback who spreads the gospel message at Ridgecrest Conference Center, at rest stops and the N.C. Welcome Center along Interstate 40.

In his 61 years of ministry, Harris has never been afraid to try new approaches to evangelism, from the old-fashioned to the high-tech. "There's only one message, but there's a million methods to getting the word out."

Dial-A-Prayer is one of the oldest ministries for the 78-year-old Harris, who has also had newspaper columns and radio and TV shows over the years.

Each day for the past 40 years, Harris has changed the two-minute message on his Dial-A-Prayer in Asheville.

He's also offered the service in Marion and Marshall, Knoxville, Tenn., and in Greenville and Spartanburg, S.C.

He's not sure who calls in, although he's heard of people using the service for devotions at bedtime or when they needed a spiritual uplift.

"There are people who have qualms about going to church," he said. "They like to pick up things on the Q-T. They won't tell you that they listen to Dial-A-Prayer, but they do."

In its heyday, Dial-A-Prayer drew 7,800 calls a day, tying up phone lines. Four decades later, Harris says he gets seven to eight calls a day.

Harris has never been at a loss for material. Early in his ministry, he went through the

Please see PRAYER on C4

Bible, making notes on index cards about words, lines and verses that jumped out at him.

Over time, Harris wound up with 4,317 notations, enough fodder for a daily reflection for 13 years, seven months.

He also keeps an eye out for new observations, taking quips from advertising, signs and newspapers.

"The other day I saw something about artificial intelligence. I've seen so much of that in my lifetime." Harris laughed.

Bill Roseborough of Asheville appreciates that sense of humor. "Robert's a beloved man, great Christian. I admire his wit and humor. He's just a delightful person."

Over the years, Roseborough has called Dial-A-Prayer for spiritual pick-me-ups.

"I think many Christians use it for support and encouragement. If you were to track this number, I think a lot of calls would come in the wee hours of the morning. People call and feel they're talking to someone who cares, who appreciates their needs."

Working outside the walls of a conventional church, whether passing out tracts from horseback or preaching in a parking lot during summer Sundays for his Asheville Drive-In Church, Harris makes an impression.

"He's reaching a segment of the population that the average church doesn't reach," said the Rev. Gayle Brown of Morgan Hill Baptist Church, who's preached at Harris' Drive-In Church.

"He's a multitalented preacher who's made an impact with an unusual ministry," Brown said.

While Harris has made use of telephone, radio, television and print, he still hasn't ventured into the latest frontier of technology — the Internet.

"I'm afraid to admit that I'm totally ignorant about computers," he said.

"I wish someone would take that on for me."

AUTHOR OF BOOK FOR BOYS

Guy Harwood

YOUNG HARWOOD PUBLISHES BOOK

(By John Gibbs)

Guy Harwood of West Asheville has just had his manual published titled "Success Tonic," a Manual for Boys and Young Men. It is believed that he is the first boy in the South to ever write a valiant message for the betterment of youth as he did in his message in "Success Tonic."

Guy Harwood was born July 30th, 1911, and reared on his grandfather's farm far back in the rugged mountains of Graham County, North Carolina. Leaving his country home at the foot of the Great Smokies he came to Asheville and worked his way through high school. From age of 16 to 21 he took active part in religious work and for a period of three years served as Boys' Club Director here in Asheville.

Poverty-stricken, he was forced to leave the third year of high school and procure work for a period of two years. He did not give up his studying as so many do when forced to quit, but continued studying, engaging in boys' work and lecturing during spare time. In summer of 1931, he was unexpectedly awarded the "Lyke's Scholarship" to the Grove Park School of Expression. In the coming fall he re-entered High School and was graduated in the class of 1932.

With no financial support, he was four times denied the entrance to a higher academic institution to prepare for ministerial and boys social work. With his long, anxious desire to acquire a college education defeated, he would not acknowledge it, but got busy and obtained a job and it was then during spare time that he wrote "Success Tonic" and "Developing a Boy's Love of Nature." For the past three years during spare time he has borrowed dozens of college books which he has ardently studied and has done much research work. His motto has been the same as that of Lincoln's: "I will study now and be ready when the time comes."

The manual "Success Tonic" is written in the form of a lecture created especially for "Father-Son" banquets. The speaker goes into the present situation of the youth of today, encourage them, advises them in reading, and gives them warning. "Success Tonic" in the manual represents a 'tonic' whose ingredients are composed of various character building agents. Each ingredient is carefully analyzed in precise language. "Love" is the base of all the ingredients in the 'tonic.' The author carefully explains the enactment of these into each one's daily activities. It is believed that never before has the principles of 'success' been arranged and explained as they have in the manner that this youthful author has.

The manuscript "Developing a Boy's Love Nature" is now ready for publication. The work is believed to be the last word on the most vital and intimate problems of the adolescent boys. The manuscript contains several chapters and is a work of tremendous beauty.

For a boy to leave the back woods and come to the city to get a better education—fight his was through poverty—become an influential leader among his youth and to bring the message he has in "Success Tonic" is food for thought on progress of our youth.

These manuals may be purchased at the Y. M. C. A., Sebren's Book Shop, and at the Bilbro Drug Store in West Asheville, N. C.

West Asheville's Two Model Homes

—Staff Photo by Michael

Above are the two model homes selected by the West Asheville Community Club for the community exhibition during Better Homes Week, beginning tomorrow and ending April 28. At the top is the beautiful Spanish type stucco residence of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hauk, 165 Vermont Avenue, the model large home. The spacious living room with its arched entrance is shown at the left. Lower right is the model small home, the property of Misses Fannie B. and DeEtta McCoy, which is located at 25 Clinton Avenue. The well-lighted and cozy living room with its modern furnishings and interior decorating, planned by the Community Club, is shown at the left.

Organization Sponsors Model Home Exhibition

West Asheville Plans Varied Program For Civic Event

With the opening at noon of the first of two model homes planned for the community exhibition, the Better Homes Week campaign was launched in West Asheville yesterday by the West Asheville Community club and other organizations.

Co-sponsors of the campaign and community program for the event include schools, churches and a large group of citizens enthused with civic pride.

The model small home, a brick bungalow located at 25 Clinton avenue, the property of the Misses Fannie and DeEtta McCoy, has been furnished and decorated along modern lines, with landscape work done by a competent designer. At the opening a large number of people were present, and viewed the beautiful and well arranged interior decorations and furniture. During Better Homes Week, April 20-28, the home will be in charge of a hostess committee headed by Mrs. Raymond H. Officer, chairman of the Model Homes committee of the Community Club.

Interior Decoration

Interior decorating was in charge of C. W. Marshall, of Denton and company, who recently came to Asheville from Daytona Beach, Fla. Mr. Marshall is known as one of the most competent interior decorators in the South, having assisted in beautifying the interiors of some of its finest homes. In addition to a number of the largest and costliest homes in Miami, he did interior decorating work in the Daytona Beach homes of John D. Rockefeller, Sr., J. E. Delaney, lumber king, Albert Brumley, of the New York stock exchange, and others. The interior decorating of the beautiful Daytona Beach Golf and Country Club home, and the Halifax district hospital was also handled by him.

The furniture for the model home was furnished by the West Asheville branch of Sterchi Brothers. This is the fourth home the concern has furnished in Asheville in connection with community efforts.

Mrs. W. C. Brownson, former president of the Community Club, and well-known landscape artist, supervised the landscape planning for the home. Mrs. Brownson is noted for her interest in this work, and her beautiful planning of the grounds at Aycock school on Haywood road has been commended by citizens and civic groups of the community.

Model Large Home

The model large home which will be open on the final two days of Better Homes Week, is located at 165 Vermont avenue, and is the property of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hauk. One of the most beautiful homes in West Asheville, its selection as the model large home was influenced by the ideal arrangement of the furnishings and interior decorating which made it suitable for exhibition purposes.

While on exhibition the home will be in charge of Mrs. Hauk and a committee composed of members of the Community Club.

Prize Awards

A number of prizes will be awarded in connection with the campaign. These prizes have been donated by West Asheville merchants and will be on exhibition at the model small home until the final evening when they will be given to winners in contests to be conducted. The contests pertain to the improvement of homes and grounds and merchants donating awards include the Carolina Power and Light company, Sterchi Brothers, Barker's department store, I. M. Teague, Sheider's Pharmacy, and D. L. Moyde, manager of the Southern Hardware corporation.

Judges appointed for the contests are the Rev. J. S. Hiatt, pastor of the West Asheville Methodist church; Mrs. W. C. Brownson and Mrs. C. B. Anderson.

Clean-up Campaign

In connection with Better Homes Week, the city-wide "Clean-up Campaign" planned by officials, organizations and citizens of Asheville, is being promoted in every section of West Asheville. Residents are being urged to clean up unsightly grounds and premises, and where needed to repaint homes and other buildings. As a result of the efforts made in this direction many improvements are now being made. A number of homes have been repaired and painted, and lawns and shrubbery given attention, lending a more beautiful atmosphere to the community.

The West Asheville "clean-up" program will be directed by a group of organized workers, cooperating with the civic organizations and city officials. Plans are being made to assist home owners in planning improvements and promoting their interest in a better and more beautiful community.

Hundreds of people are expected to visit the two model homes during the exhibition week, and their inclusion in the plans of the club for Better Homes Week has attracted community-wide interest and commendation.

CROWDS INSPECT MODEL COTTAGE

Club Exhibition Is In Charge Of Hostess Committee

Large crowds, including many out of town visitors, are inspecting the model small home opened at 25 Clinton avenue, West Asheville at noon Saturday, as a part of the model homes exhibition of the West Asheville Community Club. The opening Saturday was largely attended and Sunday afternoon from 200 to 300 people called between 3 and 6 o'clock and were shown the home by Mrs C Whit Gaskins, president, and Mrs Robert H. Spiro. Many Western North Carolina towns, including Swannanoa Waynesville, Hendersonville and others were well represented on the visitors' list.

The home will be open from 3 to 6 o'clock each afternoon and from 7-30 until 9 o'clock evenings throughout Better Homes Week, which opened yesterday morning. Mrs R H O'Officer assisted by a hostess committee, is in charge of the home. A sign pointing the location of the home has been placed at the intersection of Clinton avenue and Haywood Road for the convenience of visitors.

The model large home, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hauk at 165 Vermont Avenue, will open Saturday. Many of the out-of-town and local visitors have stated that they will attend the opening of the Hauk home.

The interior decorating and furnishings of the small home attracted much interest and favorable comment, the committee announced.

CIVIC GROUP TO MEET WEDNESDAY

Mrs. Hauk To Honor The Community Club At Home Meeting

A general meeting of the officers and members of the West Asheville Community Club will be held at the home of Mrs. C. C. Hauk, 165 Vermont avenue, Wednesday night at 8 o'clock, it has been announced. Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins, president, will preside with the other new officers of the club, and a general business and social program has been arranged.

Mrs. W. E. Logan, delegate of the club to the North Carolina Federated Clubs convention which adjourned at Charlotte Friday, will give a report of the meeting, and it is probable that the "Clean-Up Campaign" and other matters of interest to the club will be discussed.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Hauk was the model large home in the recent Better Homes Week exhibit sponsored by the Community Club under the supervision of Mrs. Gaskins, Mrs. R. H. Officer, and others.

COMMITTEE TO ARRANGE FLOAT

West Asheville Civic Club To Take Part In Festival

Appointment of a committee to supervise plans for the participation of the West Asheville Community Club in the Rhododendron Festival, and to arrange for a float to be entered in the festival parade was announced yesterday by Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins, president.

Members of the committee are: Mrs. J. S. Handte, chairman; Mrs. Carl C. Hauk, Mrs. J. G. Anderson, Mrs. Raymond H. Officer, and Mrs. R. B. Truett. The first meeting was held Thursday night at the home of Mrs. Gaskins where plans were discussed, and other meetings are to be held.

The West Asheville Club is also planning to enter a float, the matter having been discussed at a recent meeting, when it was decided to confer with officers of the Community Club, and to enlist the support of members of both organizations. R. E. Currence, a member of the club, has been appointed by President H. B. Posey to represent the organization on the Rhododendron Festival committee. The appointment was made at the request of the Asheville Chamber of Commerce.

WEST ASHEVILLE GROUP TO GATHER

Community Club Plans General Program For Tonight

The West Asheville Community club will meet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carl C. Hauk, 165 Vermont avenue, tonight at 8 o'clock, for a general business and social program. Mrs. C. Whit Gaskins, the president, will preside with the other new members of the club who were elected for the fiscal year at the last meeting.

Mrs. W. E. Logan, delegate from the club to the state convention of the North Carolina Federated Clubs held in Charlotte last week, will report the convention to the meeting and the program includes other features of community interest.

It is probable that the "Clean-up" campaign being sponsored by the club in addition to other city groups, will be given an important place on the program. The campaign was launched in West Asheville Monday morning and due to much successful preliminary work on the part of the club is community-wide in scope. Previously many lawns, gardens, yards, and homes had been beautified and improved through the club's activities and the city officials have been pledged the full co-operation of the community civic organizations.

WHO'S WHO AND WHY IN ASHEVILLE

Ask. Cit-Times 3/19/33

THE REV. CARLOCK HAWK, pastor of the West Asheville Methodist Episcopal church, South, is noted, both in church and business circles, for his ability in bringing to life financially distressed charges.

Coming to the West Asheville church in November, 1931, Mr. Hawk found the congregation owed $150,000. Since, the indebtedness has been reduced to $135,000 and several cuts in the interest rate have scaled it from 6 to 1 per cent.

In addition to placing the church in good financial position, Mr. Hawk has added approximately 200 new members to the congregation in the less than a year and a half since coming here. The average Sunday school attendance last year was exceptionally good.

Mr. Hawk was born May 30, 1884, in Sullivan county, Tennessee, the son of W. I. Hawk and Martha Morrell Hawk. His family has always been closely associated with the church, his father having served 45 years as a Methodist steward.

His brother, Dr. John C. Hawk, was for 30 years a missionary to China and helped administer the sacrament to President Chiang Kai-Shek when he jointed the Methodist church. Dr. D. E. Hawk, a first cousin, is presiding elder of the Oklahoma City district of the Methodist church and another first cousin, Dr. E. B. Hawk, is pastor of the Fourth Avenue Methodist church at Louisville, Ky.

Mr. Hawk attended Holston Institute, Emory and Henry college and Vanderbilt University. He was admitted on trial to the Holston conference of the Methodist Epscopal church, South, in 1911 at Morristown, Tenn. He served the following charges in the Holston conference: Johnson City circuit, Erwin, Harriman and LaFollette, all in Tennessee. Mr. Hawk during this time was devoting his main energies toward building churches, paying off debts and handling other financial matters.

In 1917, Mr. Hawk was sent by the church to Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, where he was superintendent of the only institutional plant of the church in South America. Before going to Brazil, however, he raised $6,000 in donations for university students in Texas, to be used in forwarding young peoples work in the church in Brazil.

REV. CARLOCK HAWK

At the People's Central Institute in Riode Janeiro 500 lives were touched daily. In addition, Mr. Hawk was superintendent of the American Seamen's mission at Rio de Janeiro and acted as chaplain for the Pacific fleet of the United States for 18 months during the World War. He was commended for his work among the sailors by Edwin Morgan, American ambassador to Brazil.

In 1920, Mr. Hawk returned to the United States because of his wife's health, having been called at that time also to advise with the general committee of the American Red Cross concerning peace-time work in Brazil.

He located at Lake Junaluska he served the following charges, in the order named: Haywood street, Asheville; First church, Lenoir; Wadesboro; Meyers Park, Charlotte; Canton; and West Asheville.

Mr. Hawk married Miss Ruth Hendricks, a native of Asheville, on August 20, 1912. They have two daughters: Miriam, 11; and Elinor, 7, and reside at 25 Balm Grove avenue, West Asheville.

Tar Heel Inventor 'Boots Home A Winner

Bernard Hayes, Ingenious Asheville Designer, Comes Up With 'Boot That Breathes.'

Char. Obs. 7-29-51

An off-hand suggestion by a sick friend during a bed-side visit several months ago may result in the greatest improvement in men's footwear comfort since the invention of the rubber heel.

The chance remark set off a train of thought in the mind of an ingenious Asheville designer that led to his invention of "The Boot That Breathes," a simple device which ventilates the foot without impairing the boot's waterproof qualities. Already U. S. military services are interested in the idea and its development for men in the field on the belief that dry socks lessen the hazard of frostbitten feet. A university research department has expressed interest and a boot manufacturer has made inquiries.

Its designer is Bernard L. Hayes of Asheville, one-time commercial refrigeration and air conditioning sales engineer. His designs and inventions have run from a children's school kit and assorted novelties to adult games involving mathematical probabilities. He has been inventing and designing since he was in grammar school in his home town of Wilmington.

A HEALTHY SUGGESTION

Last winter while visiting a friend who was ill the talk turned to Hayes' latest design, an orthopedic rubber heel. The wedge-shaped moulded rubber heel which the inventor claims not only improves posture but gives the wearer "a lift" comparable to the more expensive elevator - type shoes, had just been accepted by a manufacturer and Hayes was discussing its possibilities with his friend who had some knowledge of marketing. "The heel sounds good, Bill," the friend said. (Everybody calls Hayes Bill instead of Bernard.) "But while you've been talking I've been thinking about boots. Since I've been in bed I've been reading about our soldiers in Korea. Thousands of them have been evacuated because of frost-bitten feet. If you could do something about that — well, that WOULD be something! I talked with my doctor about it a day or so ago. I believe that if you could invent some way to keep man's feet dry they wouldn't be so likely to freeze in cold weather."

Hayes was all ears.

The ill friend enjoys hunting and fishing. "I know something about boots, first hand," he went on. "A pair of rubber waders are the hottest most water-proof things imaginable. And these new hunting boots are almost as airproof as they are waterproof. I have a pair of them made by a famous manufacturer in Maine. They have crepe rubber soles, rubber vamps, and leather legs. They won't slip on rocks. They are grand in the woods, and as comfortable as any boot I ever wore. I wear two pairs of socks with them, a thin wool pair next to the skin and a heavy wool pairs of socks to give me an air cushion. My feet are soaking wet on cold days after a day in the field."

Hayes had never had on a pair of boots in his life. He was interested neither in hunting nor fishing. He knew something about footwear from his work on his orthopedic heel and he was convinced that the American shoe industry was the most conservative business in the world. Ventilated men's shoes he knew were only recent developments, in spite of the fact that women had been wearing out-at-the-toe and flimsy high-heeled things for generations.

Nevertheless when he left his friend's house he went, not home, but to a shoe store and ended up with a brand-new pair of rubber boots, guaranteed water-proof. And for days he forgot everything but boots. The problem as he saw it was how to get air into the boot without letting water in at the same time. It was simple: get it in from the top of the boot. The inventive mind went to work. A rubber tube running from the mouth of the foot to the instep might do the trick. He tried it. He cut a hole in the boot itself and inserted the rubber tube. The ventilation was practically nil. He had to have an air chamber. A hollow rubber ball cut in half and then down to size provided it. He cemented the rubber tube to the rubber ball, attached the open side over the hole in the boot vamp just above the sole and began to get results. Hayes knew he was on his way. The size of the vent tube, the size of the air chamber, which he straightway named a blister, both had to be worked out mathematically to provide the proper ventilation.

The movement of the foot in the boot, he found, had a near-bellows effect. As the foot lifted off the ground, creating a partial vacuum, air was introduced from the outside into the foot or vamp of the boot through the vent tube and the blister. Returning the foot to the ground expelled tht air through the blister and the tube.

IMPROVES INNERSOLE

To increase the bellows-like action of the foot inside the boot he developed an improved innersole, not as soft as sponge rubber, but a material somewhat resembling it.

Hayes found that his boot was "breathing" at every step, "inhaling" every time it lifted and "exhaling" each time it returned to the ground under the pressure of walking. On marching men, he theorized it would "breathe" 120 times a minute, in military cadence!

He incased both tube and breathing blister in a leather covering which he cemented to the leg and the vamp of the boot. It made a neat package.

BERNARD L. HAYES, Asheville, N. C., designer, displays three of his inventions, including a "boot that breathes." He has invented a method of introducing air into the foot of a boot without impairing its waterproof qualities. It consists of a vent tube, leading from the air chamber above the sole of the top of the boot. It breathes every time the wearer takes a step, thus air conditioning the foot and keeping socks dry. Directly in front of him is his "Deskit," which he designed for elementary school children. The manufacturer of the item sold 100,000 of them. At his right is a new parlor game, "Red, White and Blue." The designer calls it "an entertaining and educational game designed for the scientific study and research into the laws of probability relating to numbers." (Observer Staff photo.)

Then he went to a manufacturer.

In the months he was working on his rubber heel idea Hayes' had received considerable technical advice and much encouragement from E. M. Rothermel, research director of the Waynesville division of Dayton Rubber company. Dayton manufactures hundreds of rubber specialities at its Waynesville plant. Consequently, when he thought his device was ready for technical criticism he turned to Mr. Rothermel. Together they went over it. Rothermel agreed that the tube, the casing and the blister could be moulded together in a single operation. The innersole, would, or course, have to be moulded separately for attaching to a boot after manufacture. Hayes says that the two can be manufactured in one piece for incorporating in a boot at the time of manufacture.

"Improvements will come. In fact I have already improved it myself. I have found that I can decrease the size of the blister by using two smaller vent tubes instead of one. The present blister is only three-eighths of an inch thick and one-and-an-eighth inches in diameter. The first blister was twice this size. Streamlining the design will make the blister and tube almost unnoticeable."

BEST FOR MILITARY USE

Hayes believes its best immediate future lies with the military services. Civilian use will come later. Combat boots worn by troops in the last war and in Korea, he points out, have rubber soles, rubber vamps, are waterproof and practically airproof as well. "In World War II," he said, soldiers were issued four pairs of wool socks and were told to wear two pairs at once, a thin pair and a heavy pair. Army instructions were for the men to change and wash their socks daily.

"The theory was fine. The object, of course, was to keep the soldier's feet healthy. But the army didn't provide wash basins and soap in foxholes. As long as the feet are ventilated and consequently dry they are less likely to be frostbitten. The 'Boot that Breathes' adds to foot comfort by evaporating moisture secreted by the skin pores. Such moisture is trapped in present combat boots because rubber, unlike leather, it supplanted, doesn't breathe."

Hayes is of course pleased over the interest being shown by the military services in his design. He has enlisted a retired Navy officer to work with procurement officers in military tests. Reports from him are encouraging.

He doesn't plan to undertake manufacture of his invention himself. "I'm not a manufacturer," he says. "I'm a designer. If I have something good, and I am convinced I have, manufacturers and their design departments will go on from here. Besides, I have a couple of other things on the fire."

One is a game called "Red White and Blue". It is played with three balls in these colors. Each ball is divided into 10 areas, in the center of which is a flat surface. The ball is divided in such a way that the flat surfaces are equi-distant. These are numbered 0 to 9. Corresponding numbers are printed on the interior surface of the box. The players roll the balls on a flat plane and any combination of nine hundred and ninty-nine digits may come up. The game, Hayes points out takes advantage of the law of mathmatical averages and probabilities. He calls it "an entertaining and educational game designed for the scientific study and research into the laws of probability relating to numbers."

RULER FOR CHILDREN

His other design of the moment is a 10-inch ruler made of clear plastic for use of school children. With it they can draw circles, triangles, squares and stars. It is really a simplified draughtsman's ruler, and has a series of holes punched through it to enable the user to mark off designs. An oil company even now is considering its manufacture to distribute to elementary school children.

"School children like it," he said. "They have tried it out already."

Hayes's first design was for school children. He made his kit to hold his pencils, rulers, crayons, and paper when he was in elementary school. Like most of the first-graders of his time and now, he had crayons in a paper box, a tablet, drawing books, and a ruler. He made a little bag which he divided into compartments to hold the tools of a young scholar. Other children admire it. When he progressed beyond the first grade his thoughts turned to other things, like rabbit boxes and kites.

CHILDREN LIKE KIT

Married to an elementary school teacher in the Asheville schools and noticing all the equipment she carried to and from the classroom, he thought of his own school kit. "Twenty five years after that first kit I realized I had had a good thing," he says. First graders were still using crayons and rulers and pencils. For them I designed a little thing I called a "Deskit." I fixed a strap so a little girl could wear it over her shoulder like a woman's handbag. By changing the strap the little boy could fasten it around his waist like a belt and wear the kit on his hip. Mrs. Hayes took several to school and gave them to the children. It proved to be a good testing laboratory. The little girls pasted paperdoll cutouts on the cover. We decided to dress the item up in various shades. It was very successful."

The company which manufactured it sold 100,000 deskits — Not as popular as the whirly beanie of a few years ago but still worth an inventor's time and ingenuity.

Mr. Hayes is now on a trip to Washington and New York. He went to Washington to consult his representative about the "boot that breathes" and to New York in the interest of his Red White and Blue game. A manufacturer is interested.

"The Boot That Breathes"

A FISH DINNER FOR TEN—Proof that large mouth bass have been growing fat and sassy while most of the anglers were away winning a war is furnished by the 10-pound, 26 1-2 inch beauty hooked by E. L. Hayes, Brucemont apartments, West Asheville, in Lake Lure last Friday. Mr. Hayes snared his beauty on a No. 4 Eagle Claw hook and landed him with an 8 ounce rod and rebuilt Shakespere reel after a five-minute battle that "seemed like an hour" while fishing from a boat. In the boat with him, as witnesses to the catch, were his son, Hubert Hayes, a brother, Van Hayes, and Lewis Davis.

HUBERT HAYES NAMED MANAGER OF AUDITORIUM

Playwright And Fireman Succeeds James In Position Here

Hubert Hayes, Asheville playwright and member of the city fire department for many years, has been named manager of the City auditorium to succeed Ralph James, who resigned to become head coach at High Point college, it was announced Saturday by J. Weldon Weir, director of public works.

Mr. Hayes, who was the co-author with John Taintor Foote of the Broadway play "Tight-Britches," is the author of a number of published plays and has had long experience in the show business.

He attended Duke university as a member of the class of 1926 and is a graduate of Asheville high school. He is married and lives at 147 Edgewood road.

Mr. Weir, in announcing the appointment expressed regret at losing Mr. James, who has been with the parks department of the city for several years, but said that he was glad Mr. James was getting a larger field for his talents as a coach. He has an enviable record during the years he has coached football at Lee H. Edwards high school.

Mr. Weir said that he felt that Mr. Hayes was well qualified to handle the work at the auditorium because of his long association with the stage in dramatization, technical direction and in the handling of crowds. It is a field in which he is keenly interested, Mr. Weir added, and he should have ample opportunity to display his knowledge of the theater and the stage.

MANAGER — Hubert Hayes, above, Asheville playwright and member of the city fire department, Saturday was named manager of the City auditorium to succeed Ralph James, who resigned to take a position at High Point college.

Hubert Hayes Dies After Long Illness

JUL 31 1964
CITIZEN

Writer Founded Youth Jamboree

Hubert Hayes, whose annual Mountain Youth Jamboree has nurtured and fostered the old ways, songs and music for countless Western North Carolina children, died Thursday night after a lengthy illness.

Hayes, a compassionate man whose many talents were spent mostly in building up the mountain area, succumbed to a heart ailment. Four heart attacks and nine strokes had previously failed to fell him completely.

A playright in his younger years, Hayes authored "Tight Britches", a realistic drama of the Great Smokies. The play was produced on Broadway in the early thirties. The show later had a long run in Asheville.

He also authored "The Red Spider", "Blackberry Winter", "Smoky Joe", "Where Vanishes The Flame", "Held For Call" and "Dear Tojo".

Another mountain drama with wide success, "Thunderland", was written by Hayes.

Over the past several years, Hayes drew praise from far and near for continued auditioning of mountain youth for the jamboree, despite his failing health.

He had also endeared himself to hundreds of young people and adults by encouraging them in their quest for recognition in artistic endeavors.

Born in West Asheville, he was a son of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Hayes. He was a graduate of Asheville High School, attended the University of North Carolina, and was a member of the class of 1926 at Duke University, where he majored in dramatics.

Following graduation from Duke, he joined the Augustin Stock Co. of Reading, Pa., and Greensboro, appearing in many productions over a period of three years.

Later he returned to Asheville and joined the Asheville Fire Department. He appeared in many productions of the Asheville Theater while a member of the Fire Department.

It was at this time that he turned to writing drama.

During World War II, Hayes did a radio script, "Dear Tojo", which was used in scrap metal campaigns.

Hayes' "Thunderland" was produced in an amphitheater by the French Broad River just south of Asheville.

He became manager of the Asheville City Auditorium in 1945 after he resigned his position in the Asheville Fire Department. It was during his years as manager of the auditorium that Mr. Hayes encouraged any flame of talent that he could find.

The first of his heart attacks and strokes forced his retirement as City Auditorium manager in 1954.

In 1961, Mr. Hayes was named "Man of the Year" by the North Carolina Department of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. At that time he was cited for his work with mountain youth.

At the annual jamboree, Hayes had but one criterion for the performers—that they use authentic old time mountain folk music and dance. No popular or "hillbilly" entertainment was produced at the show.

He founded the Mountain Youth Jamboree in 1949, and it had been sponsored by the Asheville Junior Chamber of Commerce.

On June 9, 1934, Hayes and Miss Leona Trantham of Biltmore, a lead actress in "Tightbritches" were married at the summer home of Mrs. Anna Lee Styles.

He was a member of All Souls Episcopal Church.

Survivors include the widow; a daughter, Mrs. Yvonne Oakley of Richmond, Va.; two sisters, Mrs. Juanita Marshall of Walkertown, N. C., and Mrs. Kate Young of Charlotte, and three grandchildren.

Morris-Hendon-Black Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

Hubert's Mountain Monument

How do you write a tribute to Hubert Hayes? You wonder and the memories flood in, engulfing you with bits and pieces of his past.

Hubert Hayes—playwright, showman, benefactor of thousands of mountain children.

AUG 1 1964

Perhaps, you think, his writing is to be most admired, for Hubert could tell of the region and its people with an insight possessed by few.

Or his ability as a theatrical director, or as an actor or master of ceremonies.

A - TIMES

But you really knew all along—the children will miss Hubert most. Compared with what he has done for them, his other accomplishments, while formidable, run a distant second.

Hubert Hayes loved the talented, bashful youngsters in our mountain coves. His annual trips in search of Mountain Youth Jamboree talent are legendary.

The kids responded to his warmth and came to Asheville in great numbers, winding up at Hubert's beloved cabin on Maney Avenue.

Hubert and his wife, Leona, shared the knowledge that these children had great potential. And the couple knew how to overcome the shyness of the hillborn.

Hubert would ask for a song, and the clear voice of a youngster would respond. His contacts with people were based on respect. He knew this was important, even in the very young. This knowledge and a built-in goodness opened the doors to many a youthful mountain heart.

His illness was to Hubert Hayes an annoyance, not a matter to be brooded upon. His tiring forays into the high hills continued, he went on directing the Jamboree. His speech was dulled, but his mind still raced ahead.

Most artists are dreamers, and there was the dreamer in Hubert. Still, with his wife's assistance, he turned many of his dreams into reality.

Those of us who knew him well hope that the Jamboree will be perpetuated as a memorial. But whether or not this is done, we can say that Hubert Hayes already has built his monument.

Hubert Hayes Funeral Set This Morning

Hubert Hayes, 62, Asheville playwright who died Thursday night after a long illness, will be buried Saturday in Calvary Churchyard Cemetery at Fletcher following a funeral service in Asheville.

The Rev. C. Al Lanske, pastor, and the Rt. Rev. M. George Henry, bishop of the diocese of Western North Carolina, will conduct the service at All Souls Church at 11:30 a. m.

Hayes had been in declining health almost a decade. He authored "Tight Britches," a drama of the Great Smoky Mountains which was produced on Broadway in the 1930s, and "Thunderland," a drama of the Daniel Boone era, which was produced in a forest theater near Asheville.

He also was the author of half a dozen short plays.

He was widely known as the founder of the annual Mountain Youth Jamboree here.

Hayes was a native of Buncombe County and was educated at Mars Hill College and Duke University.

Pallbearers will be Charles T. Jackson, John Hunter, Frank Parker, Richard B. Wynne, Harry Keller, D. B. Dover, C. R. Hunter and J. W. McKennon.

Honorary pallbearers will be Dr. D. H. Vollmer, Dr. Richard Nailling, Dr. C. C. Swann, Dr. Walter Clark, Dr. Edward Moore, Dr. Jack Powell, Dr. L. Nelson Bell, Dr. Billy Graham, members of the Asheville Junior Chamber of Commerce, members of the Scottish Rite and Oasis Temple and members of Local 278, International Stage Employes.

The family has requested that in lieu of flowers contributions be made to the Hubert Hayes Memorial of the Asheville Heart Fund of the Hubert Hayes Memorial of All Souls Church.

Hubert Hayes Never Lost Sight Of Goal: Expanding Youth Jamboree As Attraction

NOV 29 1964 A - CITIZEN

Mountain Youth Jamboree Founder Hubert Hayes, severely restricted by illness, during the last few years of his life, never lost sight of a goal — that of seeing the Jamboree expand to a Southern regional, perhaps national, attraction.

This dedication inspired thousands of children and was the big factor in Mrs. Hayes' decision to direct the memorial festival this year.

Hayes had a firm faith in the mountain heritage, and his career as a playwright, actor, director and folklorist always had uppermost the preservation of folk music, folk stories and folk dancing.

NOV 29 1964

Hayes had published a number of plays and other writings that evidenced this. Perhaps the prime example is the play "Tight Britches," which ran on Broadway. - CITIZEN

An article in the Citizen-Times, by Virginia T. Lathrop, sums up this feeling:

"Hubert's interest in folk culture goes back to his youth in Asheville, when he was attending the public schools and listening to Aunt Mary Frisbee as she read to him from the big family Bible with the entries that produced dramatic stories of pioneer days in the mountains.

"Entering college at Trinity in Durham, after attending school in Asheville, Hayes had the experience of attending both Trinity College and Duke University, since he was there in its transition, and as long as his money held out. Planning at the time to be a doctor, he minored in English and first developed an interest in putting some of the stories he had heard onto paper.

"Leaving Duke, he went to work in Greensboro and during the first summer there tried out for a part with the Augustin Stock Company. In high school he had been active in dramatics and had played the lead, in his senior year, in 'Nothing But The Truth'."

"Returning to Asheville in the early thirties with the depression at its worst, he began writing in earnest . . . "

His writing led to directing, and his ability as a showman was apparent in his acting.

In the late 40's, his energy turned to work with youth, and the Jamboree became the biggest thing in his life. He erected a mountain cabin on his property on Maney Avenue and auditioned and counseled literally thousands of children there. Uncounted others he visited in mountain schools and homes.

Mrs. Hayes, whom Hubert married June 10, 1934, worked closely with her husband in all his endeavors, acting in his plays and taking care of many of the Jamboree details.

For the past several seasons, Hubert's health dictated for her a larger role and she became almost as much a part of the Jamboree as her husband.

Mountain Youth Jamboree To Memorialize Its Founder

The musical youth of the North Carolina hill country will gather next year in Asheville as living memorial to Hubert Hayes, a man who loved them all.

NOV 29 1964

Hayes died in July after shepherding the Mountain Youth Jamboree through the 16 seasons since he founded it in 1949.

Saturday, Mrs. Leona Hayes, his widow, and the Junior Chamber of Commerce, sponsor of the folk music wonder since its beginning, announced that the show will be perpetuated as the Hubert Hayes Mountain Youth Jamboree.

The place will be, as usual, the City Auditorium. The dates are March 31, April 1 - 3. The time 7:15 p.m.

A. CITIZEN

Hubert Hayes always made sure the show was for the children, and that only pure folk music and folk dancing was offered. From this format, the Jamboree has vaulted into national attention.

The only change envisioned by Mrs. Hayes will be those dictated by her career — auditions for the children will be carried out primarily at the Hayes cabin on Maney Avenue and by appointment at other locales on weekends.

Mrs. Hayes, who worked so closely with Hubert over the years, will audition and approve all dance teams and talent and will direct the Jamboree, as did her husband in the years past. This is being done at Hubert's request.

In the weeks ahead, schools in the area are being contacted as the first step of many necessary to staging the event. Rules have been formulated as in the past and are being circulated so that there will be no misunderstanding.

All entries, both team and individual talent, must be school-sponsored and supervised or directed by school personnel. The entries are limited to boys and girls attending school in the first through 12th grades. March 13 is the dance team entry deadline; March 20 the deadline for talent entries.

Square dance teams will consist of eight couples and may compete in three divisions: Class One, grades 1-6; Class Two, grades 7-9; Class Three, grades 10-12. Individuals who sing, play a musical instrument or who have any other appropriate traditional folk talent and who meet the school - connected provisions may audition.

Auditions will be conducted January through March 20 at the Maney Avenue cabin, from 11 a. m. to 5 p. m. Saturdays and from 3 to 5 p. m. Sundays. Auditions and appointments may be arranged by calling AL 2-8409. Additional information may be obtained from the Jaycee office in the City Building, AL 3-5643, or from Mrs. Hayes, who is manager of the Asheville city ticket office for Delta and United Air Lines, in Battery Park Hotel.

Rutherford B. Hayes Came Here In 1882

A-Citizen 2-27-55

(Editor's Note: Asheville over the years has been host to many distinguished visitors, including presidents, ex-presidents and men who were to become president of the United States. The first in a series of Sunday stories on this city's presidential visitors is presented here.)

* * * * *

Careful checking at the Sondley Reference Library reveals that the first President or ex-President of the United States to visit Asheville was Rutherford Birchard Hayes, who succeeded Ulysses S. Grant in 1877.

The visit to Asheville came in 1882 a short time after Hayes had left the White House. John Fox Slater, industrialist and philanthropist, had given $1,000,000 to the cause of education for Negroes in the South. The Congress, in recognition of this generous act, had presented Slater with a gold medal and a resolution of appropriate thanks. Congress also, on April 28, 1882, passed an act setting up a board to handle the fund and naming Rutherford B. Hayes as president of the board.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES

It was while he was serving in this capacity that he made a swing through the South to check up on the Slater Fund operations. This was the trip that brought him through Asheville.

Ex-President Hayes was accompanied by his son, Rutherford P. Hayes. The younger man so struck with the beauty of the French Broad Valley that he declared he wanted to come here to live. His father did not take the suggestion seriously and rather joked about the idea. Rutherford P. Hayes, however, was a man of considerable determination. He bided his time and in 1897 came to Asheville, purchased a farm in what is now West Asheville and made his home here.

He lived here for many years and is perhaps best known because of his operation of the Buckeye Water Co., a private concern which was later taken over by the city.

Asheville Man Specializes In Goats' Milk

Dr. H. A. Heinzerling, who believes that Goats' milk is fine for children, is shown above with two of his fourteen imported goats which he keeps at his home, No. 154 Montana avenue.

GOAT HERD NEW INDUSTRY HERE

Ash. Cit-Ct. 8/21/32

Heinzerling Claims Their Milk Is Fine For Infants

Goat milk is superior as a food for infants and invalids because it is easily digested, is highly nourishing and is alkaline in reaction, Dr. H. A. Heinzerling, chiropractor who specializes in diet problems, said yesterday.

Dr. Heinzerling, who has at his home,—154 Montana avenue— 14 of the finest goats in Western North Carolina, has found goat milk can "get results" in stomach ailments.

His small herd is largely in the experimental stage, Dr. Heinzerling, explained, but he is considering increasing the number to what he terms "commercial" size. He has French Alpines, English Nubians and Swiss Toggenburgs.

The French and Swiss varieties are almost alike, being French and Swiss breeds from the same Alpine strain. They yield more milk than the English Nubians, six quarts or more daily. The English goats yield about four quarts daily, but the milk is exceptionally high in butterfat.

American Goats Worthless

Native American goats are practically worthless from the milk standpoint, said Dr. Heinzerling, since the yield is not large enough to pay for the care and feeding—not more than a quart daily. Asiatics and Europeans bred superior goats for thousands of years to perfect the varieties of animals which must be imported to this country for successful milk production.

Dr. Heinzerling started his herd with only two goats 16 months ago, when he wanted goat milk for his newborn child and could not obtain it. He knew the value of the milk because another child's life was saved by it seven years before.

Other persons began asking him for his surplus milk, so he obtained more goats. He believes a goat farm could be made a paying venture, but pointed out that goats require entirely different attention from cattle and will not prove satisfactory unless correctly handled.

Contrary to popular ideas, goats are the most fastidious animals of all when properly cared for and fed, said Dr. Heinzerling. For example, his goats will not eat anything which touches the ground—nor even anything which has been in a human mouth or been breathed upon by a human. Goats which eat dirty food are simply doing so because they have to do so or go without, he explained.

Males Have Odor

Female goats have no odor, though males have; so it is necessary to keep the males away from milking barns. Goat milk properly produced has a fine flavor. It will yield excellent cream or cottage cheese; by use of a separator, the cream may be obtained for making high-grade butter, though it is pure white like the milk.

Goats are gentle, easily milked. They are immune to tuberculosis. Dr. Heinzerling has in mind a plan of feeding his animals to obtain milk rich in the sunshine vitamin—D—for use of patients indoors.

Two goats would supply an average family, Dr. Heinzerling estimated—that is, two goats of high-production strain. Native American goats can be cross-bred for three generations to yield fairly well. Two goats would be necessary, since one could be milked while the other was being used for breeding. The animals are milked daily, beginning at the age of 20 months or so.

Robert Henry, Esq.

"...in July, 1802, on motion of Joseph Spencer and the production of his county court license, Robert Henry, Esq., became an attorney of the court. This singular, versatile and able man has left his impress upon Buncombe County and Western North Carolina. Born in Tryon (afterward Lincoln) County, North Carolina on Feb. 10, 1765 in a rail pen, he was the son of Thomas Henry, an emigrant from the north of Ireland. When Robert was a school boy he fought on the American side at King's Mountain, and was badly wounded in the hand by a bayonet thrust. Later [Henry] was in the heat of the fight at Cowan's Ford, and was very near Gen. William Davidson when [Davidson] was killed. After the war he removed to Buncombe County and on the Swannanoa taught the first school ever held in that county. He then became a surveyor, and after a long and extensive experience, in which he surveyed many of the large grants in all the counties of Western North Carolina, and even in Middle Tennessee, and participated in 1799...in locating and marking the line between the State of North Carolina and the State of Tennessee, he turned his attention to the study of law. In 1806, he was made solicitor of Buncombe County. He it was who opened up and for years conducted as a public resort the Sulphur Springs, near Asheville, later known as Deaver's Spring and still more recently as Carriers' Springs. On Jan. 6, 1863 he died in Clay County, North Carolina as the age of 98 years, and was "undoubtedly the last of the heroes of Kings Mountain." To him we are indebted for the preservation, and in part, authorship of the most graphic and detailed accounts of the fights at Kings Mountain and Cowan's Ford which now exist. He was the first resident lawyer of Buncombe County. (1922. Sondley, F. A. Asheville and Buncombe County, pp. 124, 125.)

"The late John P. Arthur, author of the History of Western North Carolina and the History of Watauga County, was a grandson of Robert Henry. (1922. Sondley, F. A. Asheville and Buncombe County, pp. 124, 125.)

"...it being again found 'impracticable to take horses from this place [Nolichucky River] to the Bald mountain, Mr. Henry, the chain-bearers and markers, took provisions on their backs and proceeded on the line and the horses went round by the Greasy Cove and met the rest of the company on Sunday on the top of the Bald mountain where we tarried till Tuesday morning." (1914. Arthur, John Preston. Western North Carolina, A History...pp.44, 45.)

"The white occupation of North Carolina had extended only to the Blue Ridge when the Revolution began; but at its close Gen. Charles McDowell, Col. David Vance and Private Robert Henry were among the first to cross the Blue Ridge and settle in the new county of Buncombe. As a reward for their services...they were appointed to run and mark the line between North Carolina and Tennessee in 1799. While on this work they wrote and left in the care of Robert Henry their narratives of the battle of Kings Mountain and the fight at Cowan's ford. After his death Robert Henry's son, William...,furnished the manuscript to...Dr. Lyman C. Draper of Wisconsin. On it is largely based his 'King's Mountain and its Heroes' (1880) (1914. Arthur, John P. Western North Carolina, A History... p. 98.)

"From Robert Henry's diary we learn that 'in the summer of 1815 no rain fell from the 8th of July till the 8th of September. Trees died.' Also that, 'on the 28th day of Aug. 1830, Caney branch (which runs by Sulphur spring five miles west of Asheville) ceased to run. Tom Moore's creek and Ragsdale's creek had ceased to run some days before; the corn died from the drough {sic}. This has been the driest summer in sixty years to my knowledge. Our spring ceased to run for some weeks previous to the above date.' Again: 'The summer of 1836 was the wettest summer in seventy years in my remembrance.' This is the climax: 'Thursday, Friday and Saturday next before Christmas 1794, were the coldest days in seventy years,' though as he had been born in 1765 he could not then have been quite thirty years of age himself. (1914. Arthur, John Preston. Western North Carolina, A History...p.296.)

"Col. [Allen T.] Davidson's Recollections of Robert Henry. 'I must not omit...to mention Robert Henry, who lived, owned and settled the Sulphur springs. He was an old man when I first knew him, say fifty years ago [1891]; he had then retired from the profession of the law which he had practiced many years. This was before I knew him well. He was tedious and slow in conversation, but always interesting to the student. He had been a fine lawyer ,and remarkable in criminal cases. He could recite his experiences of cases in most minute detail. He insisted that, underlying all, there was invariably a principle which settled every rule of evidence and point of law. I chanced to get some of his old criminal law books, such as Foster's Crown Law, Hale's Pleas of the Crown, etc, and I found them well annotated with accurate marginal notes, showing great industry and thought in their perusal. He had a grand history in our struggle for independence; was at Charlotte when the declaration of Independence was made; but, being a boy at this time, he did not understand the character of the resolutions; but said he heard the corwd shout and declared themselves freed from the british government. He afterwards fought at the battle of Kings Mountain and was severely wounded in the nad and thigh, by a bayonet in the charge of Ferguson's men. (1914. Arthur, John P. Western North Carolina, A History...,. p.381.)

"Soon after the Swannanoa settlement was established in 1782, a school was started in accordance with the principles of the Presbyterians. 1Robert Henry taught the first school in North Carolina west of the Blue Ridge.'" (1914. Arthur, John P. Western North Carolina, A History..., p. 421.)

Robert Henry in the Revolutionary war

"...in July, 1802, on motion of Joseph Spencer and the production of his county court license, Robert Henry, Esq., became an attorney of the court. This singular, versatile and able man has left his impress upon Buncombe County and Western North Carolina. Born in Tryon (afterward Lincoln) County, North Carolina on Feb. 10, 1765 in a rail pen, he was the son of Thomas Henry, an emigrant from the north of Ireland. When Robert was a school boy he fought on the American side at King's Mountain, and was badly wounded in the hand by a bayonet thrust. Later [Henry] was in the heat of the fight at Cowan's Ford, and was very near Gen. William Davidson when [Davidson] was killed. After the war he removed to Buncombe County and on the Swannanoa taught the first school ever held in that county. He then became a surveyor, and after a long and extensive experience, in which he surveyed many of the large grants in all the counties of Western North Carolina, and even in Middle Tennessee, and participated in 1799...in locating and marking the line between the State of North Carolina and the State of Tennessee, he turned his attention to the study of law. In 1806, he was made solicitor of Buncombe County. He it was who opened up and for years conducted as a public resort the Sulphur Springs, near Asheville, later known as Deaver's Spring and still more recently as Carriers' Springs. On Jan. 6, 1863 he died in Clay County, North Carolina as the age of 98 years, and was "undoubtedly the last of the heroes of Kings Mountain." To him we are indebted for the preservation, and in part, authorship of the most graphic and detailed accounts of the fights at Kings Mountain and Cowan's Ford which now exist. He was the first resident lawyer of Buncombe County. (1922. Sondley, F. A. Asheville and Buncombe County, pp. 124, 125.)

"The late John P. Arthur, author of the History of Western North Carolina and the History of Watauga County, was a grandson of Robert Henry. (1922. Sondley, F. A. Asheville and Buncombe County, pp. 124, 125.)

The South Fork boys marched to their position with quick step, Major Chronicle ten paces in advance, and heading the column were Enock Gilmer, Hugh Ewin, Adam Barry, and Robert Henry. Arriving at the end of the mountain, Major Chronicle cried, "Face to the Hill!" The words were scarcely uttered when they were fired upon by the enemy's sharp-shooters, and Major Chronicle and William Rabb fell dead. But they pressed up the hill under the leadership of Lieutenant-Colonel Hambright, Maj. Jos. Dixon, Capts. James Johnson, Samuel Espy, Samuel Martin, and James White. Before they reached the crest, the enemy charged bayonets, first , however, discharging their guns, killing Captain Mattocks and John Boyd and wounding Gilmer and John Chittim. As Robert Henry, a lad of sixteen, raised his gun to fire, a bayonet glanced along the barrel, through his hand and into his thigh. Henry discharged his gun, killing the Briton and both fell to the ground.

Henry observed that many of his comrades were not more than a gun's length in front of the bayonets and the farthest not more than twenty feet. Reaching the foot of the hill, they reloaded, and fired with deadly effect upon their pursuers, in turn chasing their enemies up the mountain. William Caldwell, seeing Henry's condition, pulled the bayonet out of his thigh, kicked his hand from the bloody instrument and passed on. Thus the battle raged on all sides. No regiment, no man failed to do his duty. The unerring aim of the mountain men from behind every tree and every rock was rapidly diminishing the brave fighters under Ferguson, who began to despair. At the end of an hour Ferguson was killed and a white flag was hoisted in token of surrender. Three hundred of his men were dead and wounded, and six hundred prisoners. The Americans suffered a loss of twenty-eight killed and seventy-four wounded.

The Lincoln County men, considering their small number, suffered considerably in the engagement: Maj. William Chronicle, Capt. John Mattocks, William Rabb, John Boyd and Arthur Patterson were killed; Moses Henry died soon thereafter in the hospital at Charlotte of the wound he received in the battle; Capt. Samuel Espey, Robert Henry, William Gilmer, John Chittim, and William Bradley were wounded. The Tories, shooting down the steep mountain side, much of their aim was too high. Lieutenant-Colonel Hambright's hat was perforated with three bullet holes, and he received a shot through the thigh, his boot filled and ran over with blood, but he remained in the fight till the end, gallantly encouraging his men.

Lincoln County Pension Roll

On the pension roll as late as 1834, more than fifty years after the Revolution, the following is the Lincoln County list of soldiers yet living and drawing pension: Robert Abernathy, Vincent Allen, Christian Arny, Matthew Armstrong, Robert Berry, Jonas Bradshaw, Caspar Bolick, Alexander Brevard, Samuel Caldwell, William Carroll, John Chittim, Michael Cline, Samuel Collins, Martin Coulter, Thomas Costner, George Dameron, Joseph Dixon, Peter Eddlemon, William Elmore, Samuel Espey, James Farewell, Abraham Forney, Robinson Goodwin, Joseph Graham, William Gregory, Nathan Gwaltney, Nicholas Hafner, Simon Hager, John Harman, John Helm, James Henry, James Hill, John Kidd, John Kincaid, Robert Knox, Shadrack Lefcy, Tapley Mahannas, Marmaduke Maples, Samuel Martin, Thomas Mason, William Mayes, William McCarthy, William McLean, Nathan Mendenhall, Alexander Moore, John Moore, William Moore, Jeremiah Mundy, Humphrey Parker, Hiram Pendleton, Jacob Plonk, William Potter, William Rankin, Charlie Regan, Adam Reep, Joshua Roberts, James Robinson, Henry Rumfeldt, Peter Schrum, John Stamey, Bartholomew Thompson, Charles Thompson, Phillip Tillman, Conrad Tippong, Robert Tucker, John Turbyfill, Charles Whit, John Wilfong, Joseph Willis, James Wilkinson, and Elisha Withers.

P. 380 - Robert Henry

In July, 1802, on motion of Joseph Spencer, and the production of his county court license, Robert Henry, Esq. became an attorney of the court. Born in Tryon (afterward Lincoln) county, North Carolina, on Februay 10, 1765, in a rail pen, he was the sn of Thomas Henry, an emigrant from the north of Ireland. He then became a surveyor, and after a long and extensive experience,, in which he surveyed many of the large grants in all the counties of western North Carolina and even in middle Tennessee, and participated in 1799, as such, in locating and marking the line between the State of North Carolina and the State of Tennessee, he turned his attention to the study of law. In January, 1806, he was made solicitor of Buncombe county. He it was who opened up and for years conducted as a public resort the Sulphur Springs near Asheville, later known as Deaver's Springs and still more recently as Carrier's Springs. On January 6, 1863, he died in Clay County, N.C. at the age of 98 years, and undoubtedly the last of the heroes of Kings Mountain. "To him we are indebted for the preservation and, in part, authorsihp of the most graphic and detailed accounts of the fights at Kings Mountain and Cowan's ford which now exist. He was the first resident lawher of Buncombe county."

Colonel Davidson's Recollections of Robert Henry.

"I must not omit ... to mention Robert Henry, who lived, owned and settled the Sulphur Springs. He was an old man when I first knew him, say fifty years ago (that as 1891); he had then retired from the profession of the law wihch he had practiced many years. This was before I knew him well. He was tedious and slow in conversation, but always interesting to the student. He had been a fine lawyer, and remarkable in criminal cases. He could recite his experiences of cases in most minute detail. He insisted that, underlying all, there was invariably a principle which settled every rule of evidence and point of law. I chanced to get some of his old criminal law books, such as Foster's Crown Law, Hale's Pleas of the Crown, etc. and I found them well annotated with accurate marginal notes, showing great industry and thought in their perusal. He had a grand history in our struggle for independence' was at Charlotte when the Declaration of Independence was made, but, being a boy at this time, he did not understand the character of the resolutions; but said he heard the crowd shout and declared themselves freed from the British government. He afterwards fought at the battle of Kings Mountain and was severely wounded in the hand and thigh, by a bayonet in the charge of Ferguson's men.

"...it being again found 'impracticable to take horses from this place [Nolichucky River] to the Bald mountain, Mr. Henry, the chain-bearers and markers, took provisions on their backs and proceeded on the line and the horses went round by the Greasy Cove and met the rest of the company on Sunday on the top of the Bald mountain where we tarried till Tuesday morning." (1914. Arthur, John Preston. Western North Carolina, A History...pp.44, 45.)

"The white occupation of North Carolina had extended only to the Blue Ridge when the Revolution began; but at its close Gen. Charles McDowell, Col. David Vance and Private Robert Henry were among the first to cross the Blue Ridge and settle in the new county of Buncombe. As a reward for their services...they were appointed to run and mark the line between North Carolina and Tennessee in 1799. While on this work they wrote and left in the care of Robert Henry their narratives of the battle of Kings Mountain and the fight at Cowan's ford. After his death Robert Henry's son, William...,furnished the manuscript to...Dr. Lyman C. Draper of Wisconsin. On it is largely based his 'King's Mountain and its Heroes' (1880) (1914. Arthur, John P. Western North Carolina, A History... p. 98.)

"From Robert Henry's diary we learn that 'in the summer of 1815 no rain fell from the 8th of July till the 8th of September. Trees died.' Also that, 'on the 28th day of Aug. 1830, Caney branch (which runs by Sulphur spring five miles west of Asheville) ceased to run. Tom Moore's creek and Ragsdale's creek had ceased to run some days before; the corn died from the drough {sic}. This has been the driest summer in sixty years to my knowledge. Our spring ceased to run for some weeks previous to the above date.' Again: 'The summer of 1836 was the wettest summer in seventy years in my remembrance.' This is the climax: 'Thursday, Friday and Saturday next before Christmas 1794, were the coldest days in seventy years,' though as he had been born in 1765 he could not then have been quite thirty years of age himself. (1914. Arthur, John Preston. Western North Carolina, A History...p.296.)

Rabid fox helped turn WNC youth in Revolutionary hero

Rob Neufeld

In 1759, England became master of the world, beating France in global wars. At the same time, British dogs, infected with rabies at an unprecedented level, created panics in London's streets, causing magistrates to offer rewards for each dog killed. Moorfields, formerly a squatters' village within the city, became the cemetery for the dog massacre.

Across the Atlantic, a decade later, rabies broke out in Boston. Fox hunts, a favorite pastime of English lords, created an avenue of transmission. America's red foxes became infected, and the virus traveled the wilderness road south.

A rabid fox bit 10-year-old Robert Henry in the woods along the South Fork of the Catawba River — in present-day Gaston County — around 1775. Knowing that rabies can take months to show symptoms, Robert's dad, Thomas Henry, took his boy with him to a meeting in Charlotte rather than chance inflicting a fevered outburst on his large family.

On May 19, 1775, Thomas and other local patriots talked through the night in the Mecklenburg County courtroom, while Robert lay down to sleep on his father's coat. "What are those men doing?" the boy asked his father. They are "passing resolutions for freedom," Thomas replied, which, most probably, "would bring on war."

The meeting resulted in the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence and the Mecklenburg Resolves. Virginians and Northeasterners were more cautious about rejecting British citizenship. The Continental Congress reassured the King on July 8, 1775 that its members had no design to separate from Great Britain, though it did have grievances it wished redressed.

But the mountains of North Carolina were an outpost of resistance to the Crown, based on its experience within the Regulator Movement, fighting unfair taxation and government corruption. And it was a breeding ground of populist democracy, thanks to the longer-ago political history of the Scots-Irish and other settlers.

Robert Henry's fox-spawned experience of mountain farmers arguing for liberty made him a common man's warrior for life, including through his years as a wealthy Buncombe County landowner. As Buncombe's leading criminal attorney in the early 1800s, he won 61 of 63 cases involving capital felonies, according to F.A. Sondley, the late local historian.

"The rabble with whom he (Henry) so freely associated, conversed, smoked, drank whiskey and slept," Sondley wrote, "whose lingo he adopted and whose dress and manner he shared, were the jurors in a court where about every question was left to the determination of the jury."

Henry was at his father's home on South Fork in the fall of 1780 when news came of Colonel Isaac Shelby's call for men from the Catawba-Broad and the Watauga-Holston River areas to attack British Major Patrick Ferguson, encamped near King's Mountain. Robert Henry was not yet a man. He was five months short of 16. But with no father home to stop him at the time, he grabbed his rifle and volunteered.

Surrounding the hill on which Ferguson's men were planted, Henry suffered a bayonet wound while simultaneously shooting the soldier who charged him. The blade went through his hand and into his thigh, and had to be pulled out. The shock and pain, and the horror of seeing men fall beside him, did not shy Henry to the cause. On February 1, 1781, nine days short of his 16th birthday, he participated in the Battle of Cowan's Ford.

"We went up the river to John Nighten's, who treated us well by giving us potatoes to roast, and some whisky to drink," Henry wrote in his account of the battle, and of the news of British Lieutenant Colonel Banastre Tarleton's river crossing. "We became noisy and mischievous ...I proposed to go to the camp at the Ford, if anyone would let me have a gun and ammunition."

Armed with guns and more whisky, Robert Henry and Charles Rutledge, a companion, joined the American picket. Henry fought with fervor, leading to disproportionate British fatalities before the British crossed and Americans retreated.

Few youths involved in revolutionary causes get to experience them as centrally as had Henry. At King's Mountain he'd sat in on officers' councils, and when it was suggested he leave, Colonel William Campbell replied that "he was a son of 'Old Rugged and Tough' (Thomas Henry's nickname), that his cheek was too well hooped to leak."

After the war, Henry established the first school in Asheville, Newton Academy. He went on to work as a surveyor, delineating North Carolina's northern boundary; serve as Buncombe County's first resident lawyer; establish the area's first resort, Sulphur Springs Hotel; and gain a reputation as a seer, foretelling the hour of his own death.

Sondley (Asheville Citizen, Sunday Magazine, March 4-March 25, 1928); and "Narrative of the Battle at Cowan's Ford," by Robert Henry (in the collection of Pack Memorial Library).

Robert Henry

Forster A. Sondley, author of A History of Buncombe County North Carolina, names Robert Henry as Asheville's first physician. Actually, Henry is more famous for being the first schoolmaster west of the Blue Ridge. There is no evidence that he had any special training in medicine. Healing the sick apparently was just one of Henry's many pursuits, which Sondley enumerates as hunter, pioneer, frontiersman, schoolmaster, lawyer, farmer, surveyor, manufacturer, landlord, politician, author and historian, as well as physician. He and his young slave Sam discovered medicinal Sulphur Springs in 1827.

VISITING OUR PAST

Richard Russell has scoured the archives and produced a biography of Robert Henry, the eccentric Asheville pioneer whose accomplishments ranged from fighting at Kings Mountain to establishing the earliest health resort in the area, Sulphur Springs (the site of which is in West Asheville).

We can now get a clearer picture of the man who we mostly know by a photo of him as a 90-year-old (see book cover).

A true son of liberty

There are certain advantages to being a true son of liberty — and Robert Henry was one.

As a boy he'd been in the Mecklenburg County Courthouse in 1775, overhearing locals shouting about the killing of American protesters in Lexington, Mass., and declaring that they were no longer bound to their government, Great Britain.

As an adolescent, Henry had fought as a soldier on the front lines of the Revolutionary War at King's Mountain and Cowan's Ford.

So when Henry, a few decades later — having become a prominent Asheville lawyer and landowner — went to court, he presented his I-don't-need-to-conform, "country bumpkin" (as some described him) self.

» Malaprop's Bookstore/Café, 55 Haywood St., Asheville, 7 p.m. Saturday (254-6734)

» Old Buncombe County Genealogical Society, 128 Bingham Road, Suite 950, Asheville, 1 p.m. Oct 26 (253-1894)

"His appearance," Russell relates, "was more of the criminal than the defender…At times, he neglected to wear stockings."

At home, he dressed like a Cherokee. "It is said he preferred sleeping on the floor." And on journeys of a day or less, he traveled "by foot, using a large walking stick nearly as tall as himself."

Frontier bred

Henry was also one of those people to whom legends adhered, like Davy Crockett.

Robert Henry was born in a "rail pen," biographers say. A rail pen is a crude structure built to confine livestock, a kind of manger.

Russell steps in to explain that the term "defined several building types in pioneer days, including a settler's first dwelling," and could also be called a log cabin.

When Robert's father, Thomas — according to legend, a stowaway carpenter who hid in a box on a ship from Liverpool — arrived in America, it was with a Welsh wife. So, probably no box.

Like many other Scots-Irish, Thomas moved his family down through Virginia to the Catawba River area, and settled on the South Fork, where some other Henrys had preceded him.

Robert, third child and second son, grew up in a flourishing frontier town with a Presbyterian core, an Indian-fighting and Regulator Movement history, and a strong pioneer urge to be fruitful and multiply.

Get your gun

The Catawba Valley community found itself in the crosshairs of British General Cornwallis after he vanquished South Carolina in the Battle of Camden. Cornwallis instructed North Carolina Loyalists to hunt down and hang rebels.

One day, after sunset, Thomas came out of hiding, and sat on his property fence, only to be shot at from across a field. "He ran past a clump of chestnut sprouts and turned and jumped in on the stump," and evaded detection, his grandson, William L. Henry later narrated.

The Tories departed, Thomas followed their trail, got ahead of them, and killed three. Robert was 13 at the time.

The next year, local rebels, joined by other troops including the Overmountain Men, surrounded British Maj. Patrick Ferguson's regiments on Kings Mountain. Teenage Robert and three other South Fork boys followed American Maj. William Chronicle up the hill.

When Chronicle's contingent merged with another, he raised his hat and shouted, "Face to the hill." "The words were scarcely uttered," Henry wrote in his account, "when a ball struck him and he dropped."

Further up, a British soldier charged Robert, who was behind a log, stabbing a bayonet through Robert's hand into his thigh. Robert's gun discharged, sending its load through the soldier's bladder and cutting a main artery in his back.

American cries of "Hurrah for Liberty" echoed as the British retreated. Robert heard that Ferguson had been killed and sought him out.

"He found him shot in the face and the breast — and he saw fellow fighter Samuel Talbot turn him over and take his pocket pistol," Russell recounts.

After the war ended, Robert Henry returned to South Fork. It isn't until several years later that the biographical record picks up.

Cousin Joseph Henry was buying and selling land in newly created Buncombe County and helped get Robert, age 26 in 1793, the position of schoolteacher at the county's first school, Union Hill (later Newton Academy).

Russell repeats a famous story, related by Henry's granddaughter Kate Boyles. Henry called an unruly girl up to the front of the class for a reprimand and, when she extended her hand, apparently for a whack with a ruler, she suddenly "seized teacher Henry by the queue of his hair, spun him around the room and then left for home. Robert recounted this incident for as long as he lived."

ROBERT HENRY

In the office of the Secretary of State in Raleigh,. there is a record of a land grant to Thomas Henry for 168 acres located on the east side of the South Fork of the Catawba, dated September 26,. 1766. Twelve years prior to this time, on February 28,. 1754,. one had been issued to a William Henry down near the confluence of the South Fork and the Catawba, From the two families to which these grants were made sprang the several Gaston County Revolutionary heroes of that name. It is known that Robert Henry was a son of Thomas Henry, who also saw Revolutionary service. One record states that Robert was born in Tryon County on February 10, 1765, another that he was born in Rowan County in a rail pen. It could easily have been in what was then Tryon County on the South Fork grant, for often lands were settled and entries made long before grants were issued.

His father was from North Ireland and had instilled in his son that patriotism so characteristic of the Scotch-Irish., Robert was one of Major Chronicle's "South Fork boys," and though only sixteen at the time, he displayed such heroism at King's Mountain as to cover himself with undying glory. Near the beginning of the engagement, Major Chronicle was killed. Lieutenant Colonel Hambright, now leading the Gaston County men, pressed on and fought with great determination. Before reaching the top of the hill, several of their number were killed by rifle balls. Then the enemy charged bayonet. Robert Henry had placed himself behind a log lying across a hollow and was firing from that position. While he was in the act of cocking his gun, a bayonet glanced along the barrel, passed through one of his hands, and penetrated his thigh. Henry, in the mix-up, shot the Tory. He could not tell how it happened, but supposed that he must have touched the trigger and discharged his rifle. Evidently the ball cut a main artery of his antagonist,. as he bled profusely. Henry fell with the Tory to the ground, completely transfixed. Through a mist of powder smoke he saw many of his friends and neighbors, not more than a gun's length ahead of the Tory bayonets. He saw them fire with deadly effect upon their pursuers and retire to the bottom of the hill, quickly reloading and in turn chasing their enemies up the mountain. William Caldwell, another "South Fork boy," seeing Henry's predicament, pulled the bayonet out of his thigh... but finding it still fast in his hand gave the wounded hand a kick with his boot which loosed the instrument from its hold.

Near the end of the battle, Henry, making his way to a branch to quench his thirst, met Colonel Graham on his large black horse, accompanied by. David Dicky. After he had started home, he heard the firing and could not resist the temptation to return and take part in the battle. In this he was disappointed, for the fighting was over before he reached the scene. A little girl, Sarah, Colonel Graham's only child, was born that night.

On Saturday evening, after the battle, Robert Henry was taken part of the way to his home on the South Fork. He was taken the remainder of the way on Sunday. Hugh Ewing and Andrew Berry, two of his near neighbors and friends, acted as his escorts, They left him, going on to their own homes for the night. Returning early Monday morning they found him much improved, owing to the effects of a poultice of wet, warm ashes which his mother had applied to his wounds.

While Ewing and Berry were still at the Henry home, several Tories, styling themselves as neutrals, called to learn the news of the battle. Ewing and Berry told them that Ferguson was really killed and his army defeated and taken prisoners. They were certain because they saw him after he was dead. Even the wounded Henry was carried to take a look at him. They told of the meeting near Gilbert Town when between six and seven hundred went on ahead, leaving as many or more footmen to follow, and of the surrounding and defeat of Ferguson. The Tories were slow to believe that so few could have accomplished so much, but Ewing and Berry responded, "We are all of us blue hens' chickens - real fighters and no mistake." The Tories, not believing what they were told, said, "There must have been over four thousand in all. We see what you are about - that your aim is to catch Lord Cornwallis napping."

The above conversation took place not more than two hours after sunrise on Monday, October 9th. The Tories then quickly took their departure. Swimming a horse across the swollen Catawba by the side of a canoe, they hastened to give Cornwallis his first news of Ferguson's defeat.

It was accounts such as these, largely exaggerated by the fear-stricken Tories, which so alarmed the British commander that he sent out Tarleton to aid Ferguson, if still alive, and which finally induced his Lordship to depart from Charlotte with all his army.

Robert Henry was at Cowan's Ford and was near General William Davidson when he was killed. After the Revolution, Henry became a surveyor. Ip 1795 hc surveyed and made a plot of Matthew Leeper's land on the west bank of the Catawba. This was a part of thc James Leeper grant. Another part was sold by James Leeper, a son of the pioneer, to Isaac Henry about the beginning of the nineteenth century. The home site of Isaac was one of the most beautiful along the river. The building has long since fallen into decay, but the loveliness of the spot on a bluff overlooking the stream remains unsurpassed. The place is still known as the Henry lands.

Not until after the Revolution did the white occupation of North Carolina extend beyond the Blue Ridge. Subsequent to that time, among the first to cross and settle in the new county of Buncombe were General Charles McDowell, Colonel David Vance, grandfather of Zebulon B.Vance, and private Robert Henry. Doubtless as a reward for their service at King's Mountain, they were appointed to run and mark the line between North Carolina and Tennessee. McDowell and Vance, were commissioners, and Henry was the surveyor, While on this work, Henry wrote the narrative of his own recollections and experiences at King's Mountain and Cowan's Ford. McDowell and Vance also wrote theirs and left them in the care of Henry. After his death, his son, William L. Henry, entrusted the manuscripts to the late Dr. J. F. E. Hanly, who sent them to Dr. Lyman C.. Draper of Wisconsin. On the facts contained therein was largely based his Draper's "King's Mountain and its Heroes," published in 1880. This publication has been frequently drawn upon for incidents of the battle. After he completed his work as surveyor on the Tennessee-North Carolina line, Robert Henry studied law and was licensed to practice in July, 1802. He developed into a very able man and left his impress upon Buncombe County and Western North Carolina, where he spent his later years. He died on January 6, 1863, aged 98 years. He was the last of the heroes of King's Mountain.

To him we are indebted for the preservation and part authorship of the most graphic and detailed account of the battles of King's Mountain and Cowan's Ford which now exist. On page 97 of John Preston Arthur's "History of Western North Carolina" is a picture of Robert Henry from a daguerrotype made in his 94th year.

"Mr. Henry was born in a rail pen, in then Rowan, now Iredell County, North Carolina, January 10th, 1765. Full of patriotism though young, he shared in the trials and perils of the Revolution, and in due time recovered from the severe wounds he received at King's Mountain. In 1795, he was one of the party who ran the boundary line between North Carolina and Tennessee. He subsequently studied law, and practiced his profession many years in Buncombe County. He served in the House of Commons in 1833 and 1834. He was a clear and forcible public speaker and his memory deserves to be held in grateful remembrance for preserving the narrative of the King's Mountain campaign and battle, so frequently cited in this work. He died in the new County of Clay, North Carolina, January 6th, 1863, within four days of attaining the patriarchal age of ninety-eight years and he was undoubtedly the last of the heroes of King's Mountain.

"Robert Henry lived in the vicinity of Tuckaseage Ford, on the Catawba River, which is about ten miles below Cowan's Ford, when Cornwallis crossed at the latter ford. He lived on the West side of the river in Lincoln County. For many years, he owned the White Sulphur Springs about five miles South west of Asheville. It was a popular resort in the summer for the wealthy planters from the South and was the scene of much gayety and pleasure. Mr. Henry died in Clay County, the extreme Western county of the State, bordering on Georgia and Tennessee. I have myself heard my grandfather Michael Schenck, of Lincolnton, N. C. speak of Mr. Henry as 'a great land lawyer'. His practice as a surveyor, no doubt, making him formidable in such suits."

Pioneer led historical life (by Lois Tomas, Staff Writer)

One day Robert Henry, of Tusquittee was walking about as was his custom. As he crossed a small rushing creek flowing down the mountain into Tusquittee Creek, he dropped his compass into the water. From that point on, the creek in which Robert Henry lost his compass became known as Compass Creek. This is according to the North Carolina Gazetteer, a book about the origin of place names throughout the state. The naming of Compass Creek was not the extent of Robert Henry's accomplishments. The Revoluntionary War hero lived 98 years and amassed a number of historic achievements. Robert Henry is buried in a field in upper Tusquittee, not too far from Compass Creek.

According to the weathered tombstone that marks his grave, he was born April 1765 and died February 1863.

Henry reportedly predicted the exact time of his death according to his grandson, E.L. Henry. In an account of the prediction in a 1965 edition of an Asheville newspaper, E.L. writes that "grandsire", as Robert Henry was called by his grandchildren, refused to let his cousin and neighbor George Marstellar borrow some of his slaves.

E.L., who was 10, told Marstellar, "Grandsire said for me to come and tell you that you cannot have one of his Negroes tomorrow because he will die at two o'clock today and they will be busy burying him."

Robert Henry, who was described as tall and thin with stooping shoulders and coarse features, was considered very healthy.

E.L. said his grandfather ate a hearty dinner, talked for a while, and laid down on a bearskin spread on the floor. When two o'clock arrived, his grandchildren remarked that Robert Henry was still alive.

Robert Henry directed his family to stretch out his body and in a moment he was dead.

Robert Henry was born to Thomas Henry and Martha Isabella Shields. His father was of Scotch-Irish lineage, born in northern Ireland.

Thomas and Martha had seven children, five sons and two daughters. Robert, the third youngest, was born in a rail pen near the present day town of Tryon.
Settlers would protect their cattle from wild animals by building a split-rail wooden fence. This was known as a rail pen.

When Robert Henry was very young, he was bitten by a rabid fox. His father was said to be so worried about his son having a fit and doing harm to his family, that he took Robert along with him. It was on one of these journeys away from home that placed Robert at a pivotal even in American history.

Thomas Henry actively supported the drive for American Independence. He took part in a historic meeting in Charlotte, NC in which the Mecklenburg Declaration was read and ratified for the first time.

Robert Henry awoke from a nap in time to hear talk about "declaring for liberty" and "passing resolutions of freedom." The day was May 19, 1775.

Robert Henry was called to service to the new nation of the United States when he fought in the battle of King's Mountain. This is considered one of the most important battles fought in the Revolutionary War. A victory by the Americans here turned the tide of the war in the south.

In a narrative written about the battle, Robert Henry described the battle from his perspective…

"We then advanced up the hill close to the Tory lines," Henry wrote. "There was a log across the hollow that I took my stand by. Stepping one step back, I was safe from British fire. I there remained until the British charged with Bayonets."
Henry had stepped back and was cocking his gun when one of the British soldiers thrust a bayonet along the barrel of Henry's gun, into his hand and thigh.
The bayonet blade was pulled from Henry's thigh but remained dangling from his hand. A fellow soldier kicked it loose, causing excruciating pain. The British soldier who had wounded him lay dead, killed from the blast of Henry's weapon.

Henry was one of the first to move into the Swannanoa Settlements, coming around 1783. The first schoolmaster west of the Blue Ridge line, Henry taught at Union Hill Academy.

He became a surveyor by trade. In 1799, he was one of two surveyors hired to determine the Tennessee - North Carolina border. The boundaries drawn by Henry have never been contested.

This venture drew Henry into the practice of law. When admitted into the practice, he became the first lawyer to live in the western part of the state.
He gained a reputation for defending criminals, apparently successfully, as a colleague stated. Henry also studied medicine, becoming a physician.

In 1809, Henry married Dorcas Bell Love, the daughter of Col. Love, who helped found Waynesville. Henry was 46 and his bride was 12. Dorcas bore six children.

Henry moved to Clay County in 1859. He was divorced. At the time of the 1860 census, he reported his age as 94.

Henry is described in many accounts as being an eccentric, a man that would rather walk then ride his horses. He emulated the ways of the Cherokee instead of the ways of the white.

It is said Henry preferred 'low company' and was fond of whiskey. He disliked shoes, always wore moccasins and was given to mispronunciations of words.
He owned slaves, many of whom are buried near him in graves marked by an unadorned stone. One of these is Julia, reportedly a woman of Christian faith and values. Henry gave her freedom and built a home for her near the ridge in Tusquittee that bears her name.

Henry was one of the first white settlers in Clay County. It is said in the course of his life, he lived through the terms of the first 16 presidents of the United States. He died while Jefferson Davis served as head of the Confederate States.
Henry also saw the creation of the county of Clay in 1861.

In 1928, the Clay County News suggested a day in the summer be set aside to pay tribute to Robert Henry. Nothing came of that effort, with the exception of a poem written by R. E. Crawford. "Among the whispering pines, a lonely grave there be. They whisper day and night, "Honor to Bob Henry." Note: Thanks to Don Taylor of Canton, NC, the great great grandson of Robert Henry, for his help in providing articles and photographs."

Also that, 'on the 28th day of Aug. 1830, Caney branch (which runs by Sulphur spring five miles west of Asheville) ceased to run. Back cover text

Robert Henry is a character more suited for fiction than non-fiction. While just a boy he fought with the Overmountain Men at Kings Mountain and battled British troops along the Catawba River. As a surveyor he helped mark the boundary line between Tennessee and North Carolina. He had a long career as a prominent attorney and owned the famous Sulphur Springs resort. Yet, while Henry is one of western North Carolina's most accomplished ancestors, he is also one of the most eccentric. He preferred to dress in moccasins and traveled with a walking stick nearly as tall as he. Some said he had the gift of foresight and was able to predict his own death. Join author Richard Russell as he navigates the unusual, contradictory and fascinating life of Robert Henry.

Introduction

On the afternoon of October 7, 1780, British major Patrick Ferguson and his Loyalist militia of over one thousand men were camped along the high ridge of Kings Mountain near the border of North Carolina and South Carolina. The American Revolution had dragged on for four years, and Ferguson had been dispatched by Lord Cornwallis to crush local resistance and gain Loyalist support in the Carolinas. While in route to Charlotte, Ferguson decided to reverse course and take a defensive stand against pursuing Rebels. Robert Henry, three months shy of fourteen, stood poised at the base of the mountain with a courageous group of Patriot friends and neighbors known as the "South Fork Boys." The boys had come from their homes on the South Fork of the Catawba River in North Carolina to join forces with more than nine hundred rugged fighters known as the "Overmountain Men." The mountain men had tracked Major Ferguson to the ridge top, and now their forces surrounded the mountain, ready to attack. The South Fork Boys launched an assault up the northeast side of the mountain, and within minutes, young Robert Henry lay on the mountainside with a Loyalist bayonet impaling his hand to his thigh.

The following February, recovered from his wounds at Kings Mountain, Robert stood as one of the picket guards at a location on the Catawba River known as Cowan's Ford. He observed British soldiers on horseback attempting to cross, many being carried away or drowned by the swift current. He fired until a number of them reached his chosen signal rock in the river and then ran up the bank and took refuge behind a tree. He continued to fire as long as he could. With the tree's bark being loosened by enemy bullets, Robert narrowly avoided injury and was able to make an escape.

The zeal to fight for liberty may have been ingrained in Robert at a very early age. In 1775, while accompanying his father to Charlotte, he observed concerned and outraged citizens meeting and deliberating the Mecklenburg

Declaration of Independence.

These boyhood experiences were surely influential and instrumental in preparing Robert for a remarkable life that spanned nearly a century. After the close of the Revolution, Robert studied law, medicine and surveying. He became an accomplished and prominent trial and land lawyer, one of the first in western North Carolina. He was appointed an official surveyor of the boundary line between Tennessee and North Carolina. He was Buncombe County's first teacher, and he also practiced medicine for a time.
Using surveying experience, knowledge of the law and contacts with Revolutionary War veterans, Robert amassed vast land holdings in North Carolina and Tennessee. Discovering naturally occurring sulphur and mineral springs on his land, he established a resort hotel, attracting more summer visitors than the nearby town of Asheville.

He was a landlord, a plantation owner, a farmer and a slave owner.
Robert Henry has been described as versatile, a hero as brave as a lion, a philosopher and naturalist, a historian and author, an inventor, a genius and a pioneer. He was said to have a phenomenal memory.

Conversely, he was noted as slovenly and a bumpkin, a fraud and an imposter, and he has been called a liar.2 He was known to be "fond of the bitters" and smoking. His appearance was more of the criminal than the defender. An eccentric man, he shunned normal attire and preferred to dress in the style of the native peoples, wearing moccasins at home. At times, he neglected to wear stockings when attending court. It is said he preferred sleeping on the floor rather than in a feather bed. His chief method of travel for less than a day's journey was by foot, using a large walking stick nearly as tall as himself.

At age forty-seven, he married Dorcas Bell Love, the seventeen-year-old daughter of Robert Love, founder of Waynesville, North Carolina. Robert and Dorcas Bell lived in Buncombe County, North Carolina, approximately seven miles west of Asheville, where they raised a large family. After thirty years of marriage, the couple was legally separated and then divorced.
Robert Henry was a man of legend, mystery and myth. His life was one of great achievement and one of tragic personal failure, yet his part in history remains unknown to most. A letter referring to Robert in an 1859 issue of Harper's Weekly stated, "Let honor be given to whom honor is due." Perhaps this writing will aid in achieving that goal.

Battle of Asheville was more like a fireworks show

Bob Terrell
COLUMNIST

We missed chronicling the anniversary by a week and a half, but the Battle of Asheville was fought 141 years ago a week ago last Thursday — on April 6, 1865. It wasn't much of a battle, something more like a fireworks show. Our battle was fought three days before Lee surrendered to Grant at Appomattox Court House in Virginia.

On orders from the Union military hierarchy, Union Col. Isaac M. Kirby of the 101st Ohio Infantry, based in Greeneville, Tenn., was ordered to take 900 infantrymen to "scout in the direction of Asheville," reaching here in time to join Stoneman's Raiders, who were headed this way from the northeast, to mop up Asheville's Confederate town.

However, word reached Asheville that "The Yankees are coming!" The courier was sent to town by the Sondley family, who owned a farm where the town of Woodfin is now located. Asheville quickly came up in arms. Backed by cannon emplacements on Stony Hill — where the Battery Park Hotel was later built — and others on a hill on the Woodfin end of Riverside Drive, all Confederate soldiers in the area were rounded up. They then marched with civilian men and boys, dug entrenchments (which are still visible) on the present campus of UNC Asheville, and formed a line of riflemen across Kirby's path. These local "troops" were commanded by Col. George Wesley Clayton, a West Point graduate, in the absence of Asheville's military commander, Gen. James C. Martin, who was away from town on military business.

Cornelia Smith Henry, wife of William Lewis Henry, who lived on the west side of the French Broad River, chronicled what happened those days. She wrote:

"Mr. Henry went to town this morning. About three o'clock we heard the Yankees were in town, but did not believe it till about four, when George came up from the mill and said some men had come from town and said it was certainly so.

"Sam said Mr. Henry had gone to the front and sent me word not to be alarmed. I am very uneasy about Mr. Henry. I fear he will expose himself. It has been raining a little all evening. May a kind Heaven protect my dear husband this night, and all our brave men, and turn back our enemies. Oh! Lord, deliver us from our enemies, I pray..."

Henry was the son of Robert Henry, first schoolmaster in Asheville. A wounded veteran of the Battle of Kings Mountain, he helped survey the state line across the Smokies, separating North Carolina from Tennessee. And at his death, he was the oldest living veteran of the Revolutionary War.

At 3 o'clock the following day, the Yankees and Confederates came together, both sides opening up with ineffective long-range rifle fire. The Union commander, Kirby, knew the war was within a day or two of ending, and chose not to engage the Ashevilleans in close-range combat. This almost became the first battle of the war without casualties.

The Yankees and Confederates came together, both sides opening up with ineffective long-range rilfe fire. The Union commander ... knew the war was within a day or two of ending and chose not to engage the Ashevilleans in close-range combat. This almost became the first battle of the war without casualties.

After five hours of sniping at each other, the Union forces withdrew through Woodfin to a safe bivouac place down the French Broad River, and the following morning before dawn, headed back to Tennessee at a gallop, littering the road with abandoned rifles, ammunition, bayonets, canteens, packs, and other things that might impede their flight back to Tennessee. Two days after that, on April 9, Lee surrendered to Grant at Appomattox Court House.

While gathering up all this treasure, the Asheville defenders discovered that blood had indeed been spilled by the Union forces. Two legs, both wearing the blue pants and boots of the Yankees, were found on the battlefield, blown off their unfortunate victims by Asheville's cannon fire.

This battle embittered Forester A. Sondley against the Yankees for life. They had taken his pony and when they discovered it could not keep up carrying a heavy load, they shot it before Sondley's eyes. Wherever he is at this moment, he is probably still ticked off at the Yankees for murdering his steed.

Mrs. Henry wrote the closing chapter of the Battle of Asheville in her journal on April 7, while the Yankees flew down the old Buncombe Turnpike toward the safety of Greeneville, Tenn.:

"Mr. Henry came back about 11 o'clock. I was glad to see him. . . . Mr. Henry said we repulsed them handsomely. I am very glad of it. He thinks they will fight again today. It nearly killed me this morning to tell him goodbye. He went to town and came back about 12 o'clock and said the Yankees left last night. I believe the Lord heard my heartfelt prayer.

"They took some prisoners at Rankin's tanyard, about four or five. We had two men slightly wounded. We do not know the enemy's loss as they were some 600 yards apart (while they fought).

"They left one leg in a boot. Our men acted well. The artillery played on them all the time. They fought down about Nick Woodfin's farm. I do hope they may never come back again."

So passed the Battle of Asheville.

And so passed the Confederacy!

WM L. HENRY DIES AT THE AGE OF 77

HE WAS A SON OF ROBERT HENRY, A SOLDIER OF THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

Capt. William L. Henry, one of Buncombe's best known citizens, died at his home near Acton yesterday morning. The burial will take place Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the Sulphur Springs cemetery. Friends of the deceased are invited to attend, especially ex-Confederate soldiers.

Captain Henry was in the 77th year of his age. He was captain of company B of the Fourteenth N. C. battalion, which was later organized into the Sixty-ninth regiment.

His father, Robert Henry, was a soldier of the Revolution, and was in the battle of King's Mountain.

Captain Henry is survived by a wife and seven sons and two daughters.

HENSLEY BROTHERS KILLED IN BOMBER CRASH IN ENGLAND

West Asheville suffered a double loss on February 17, when the B-24 "Iron Duke," giant British based Liberator, crashed in the English Channel, ending the service careers of Staff Sergeants Edward Jack and Edwin Joe Hensley, 19 year old twin brothers and sons of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Hensley, 63 Vermont Ave. Also killed in the wrecked plane was its pilot, Lt. L. M. (Mac) Duncan, 22, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Duncan, 94 Starnes Ave. Another Asheville crew member, co-pilot, Lt. Charles M. Frank, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Frank, 1062 Haywood Road, escaped death. The luckless bomber had the distinction of being the only aircraft of its type with as many as four members of the crew from a single city.

Final confirmation of the tragedy came officially last Friday afternoon, when Col. Ulric N. James, commanding officer of the army distribution station here, carried the news in person to Mrs. Hensley, in compliance with a recent ruling of the War Department governing cases where two or more members from the same family are killed.

Col. James was notified by phone by the Fourth Service Command in Atlanta of the circumstances and instructed to go in person to the Hensley family. Capt. George F. Hood, Protestant chaplain here, accompanied Col. James to the home of the boys' grandmother, Mrs. W. G. Hensley, and later drove to Mars Hill to break the news to the mother, who was visiting her sick mother. The family notified the father, who is in New Jersey.

Assigning of the Asheville crew to the bomber, Iron Duke, dates from last summer, when Lt. Duncan found the three other Asheville servicemen at Westover Field, Mass. They were reassigned to his crew with Lt. Frank as co-pilot and the Hensley brothers as gunners. They have been together ever since last October, when they went overseas.

Lt. Duncan was well known here as having been captain of the undefeated 1941 football team at Lee Edward High School. He was a freshman at Duke University when he entered the service in February, 1943.

The Hensley brothers, too, graduated from Lee Edwards High School. Joe was president of the student body and his brother was a member of the student council. They were both honored by being made Junior Rotarians. Both brothers were active as members of Calvary Baptist Church. They enlisted for the war in the fall of 1943 and were assigned Jan. 31, 1944.

Friends of the 19-year-old Hensley twins recalled that the pair held the highest student offices at Lee Edwards High School during the last year they were enrolled there. Joe headed the student council; Jack, the house of representatives. Their popularity never affected the friendliness and democracy that were essentials of their nature.

Lt. Frank, co-pilot of the "Iron Duke," who has cabled that he is safe, entered service February 26, 1943, receiving his commission and his silver wings at Stuttgart Field, Ark., last April. He attended Asheville schools and Biltmore college.

Survivors include a brother, Sgt. James G. Hensley, who was in a hospital in Belgium suffering from wounds when the family last heard from him; the parents; the grandmother, and a number of uncles and aunts also survive.

HENSLEY TWINS, LT. DUNCAN DIE IN PLANE CRASH

TWINS KILLED — S. Sgt. Edward Jack Hensley (standing) and S. Sgt. Edwin Joe Hensley, twin sons of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Hensley of 63 Vermont avenue, were killed when their bomber crashed over the English channel. Lt. L. M. Mack Duncan, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Duncan of 94 Starnes avenue, pilot of the plane, was killed in the same action.

Among 15 Casualties From WNC Listed Yesterday

Three Asheville servicemen who have served together on the same B-24 since last summer were killed February 17 when their plane crashed into the English channel, their families were notified yesterday. They were among 15 Western North Carolina casualties reported during the day, five others being listed as killed, two as missing, and five as wounded.

The three killed in the plane are S. Sgt. Edward Jack and S. Sgt. Edwin Joe Hensley, 19-year-old twin sons of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Hensley of 63 Vermont avenue, and Lt. L. M. (Mack) Duncan son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Duncan of 94 Starnes avenue. A fourth Asheville man who has been serving on the same ship, Lt. Charles M. Frank, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Citation:

The Distinguished Service Cross is presented to William Herren, First Sergeant, U.S. Army, for extraordinary heroism in action near Ville-Savoye, France, August 7, 1918. Sergeant Herren carried guns and ammunition to the front line platoons through an intense barrage after several carrying details had failed to get through. He then volunteered to stay with the right flank platoon, which was under heavy fire in an exposed position. During the afternoon, he and one other man pushed forward with a captured machine gun, and assisted materially in breaking up several hostile counterattacks during the day.

BASKETBALL BENEFIT

Steve Dixon/STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Flowers surround a photo of Sgt. Jeff Hewitt at West Asheville Baptist Church before his funeral on April 8. Hewitt was killed in the line of duty.

A benefit basketball game to fund the Buncombe County Sheriff's Department Honor Guard unit will be held Saturday at the Woodfin Elementary School gym. The Honor Guard unit is trying to raise money for a trip to Washington, D.C., to honor Buncombe County Sgt. Jeff Hewitt, who was killed in the line of duty last year.

Honor guard members will travel to Washington in May as escorts for the Hewitt family and participate in the memorial and other special services to honor law enforcement officers who died in the line of duty last year. They are trying to raise about $15,000 for the trip.

Hewitt was shot and killed while trying to serve commitment papers on a resident who ambushed him. He is one of 159 officers who will be honored and remembered in May.

The basketball game will be held at 4 p.m. and will be among Woodfin Police Department, Woodfin Fire Department, Buncombe County EMS personnel and the Woodfin Youth League coaches and parents. A 3-point shooting contest and other games will also held at the event. Items will be raffled off during the game. Donations may also be made at the Woodfin Police Department.

Money raised will go to benefit the Honor Guard Unit and send personnel to the 2005 National Fallen Law Enforcement Memorial. Tickets for the game can be bought at the door. Cost is $3 for adults and $1 for children.

Obituary

W. D. "RED" HICKEY
ASHEVILLE – W. D. "Red" Hickey, 82, of Asheville, peacefully entered eternal rest after a period of declining health on Wednesday, August 11, 2010.
Mr. Hickey was born in Plant City, Florida, to the late Guy and Mae Carr Hickey. He was a resident of Buncombe County where he and his wife, the late Bonnie C. Hickey, raised their two surviving daughters, Patty Fisher of Arden, NC and Mary Beth Lehnert of Franklin, NC. He graduated from Warren Wilson Junior College and, with his wife, was a long-time businessman and owner of Red Hickey's Alignment Service. He was an active member of the Better Business Bureau and the West Asheville Business Association.
Red Hickey's Alignment Service continually supported Little League teams in the local area for a number of years, as he enjoyed encouraging children of all ages. Likewise, he loved music and as a member of Weaverville Presbyterian Church, led the singing for the Men's Bible Class for many years.
Mr. Hickey will be remembered for his lasting legacy of attention to details, his work ethic, and his generosity through tirelessly donating time, energy, and skill in his area of professional expertise and business. He was also an avid gardener which came from a long time family heritage of farming in Florida.
In addition to his two daughters and their husbands, he is survived by 2 granddaughters, 2 neices, and 2 nephews.
Funeral services will be at 2:00 p.m. Saturday in the Patton Avenue chapel of Groce Funeral Home with the Reverend Sam McGinn officiating. Interment will follow at Ashelawn Gardens.
The family will receive friends from 6:00 to 8:00 p.m. Friday at the funeral home.
Memorials may be made to the Presbyterian Home for Children, 80 Lake Eden Road, Black Mountain, NC 28711, or to Gideon's International, PO Box 1007, Asheville, NC 28802.

Russell Hilliard, who does volunteer work with members of the Hispanic community in Asheville, talks with Carmen Alicia Nomcayo de Ayala during a recent gathering at Grace Baptist Church. She is drawing illustrations for a book he is planning.

Man enjoys helping immigrants

By Eden Foster
CITIZEN-TIMES CORRESPONDENT

WEST ASHEVILLE — Russell and Patsy Hilliard moved to Spain in the mid-1950s for Russell to take a position at a small Baptist seminary. They didn't speak a word of Spanish, and found their new life to be extremely disorienting at first.

Twenty-one years later, Russell was forced to retire on a medical disability, and the Hilliards, now fluent in Spanish, chose to move to Black Mountain to be near one of their daughters.

Patsy began teaching Spanish at Montreat College, and Russell took a series of positions as interim pastor for local churches.

But his health continued to deteriorate, and in early 1988 he faced his sixth major surgery, this time for cancer.

Throughout his recovery, Russell felt an increasing urgency to work with Asheville's then small but growing Hispanic and Latino population.

By the fall of 1988, he and Patsy began teaching English classes for recent immigrants and assisting them with immigration related issues.

Their own experience helped them identify with the challenges these new residents faced.

From this modest beginning, the Grace International Program, as it became known in 1993, has now grown into a series of English classes for immigrants, as well as Spanish classes for English-speakers.

Tuesday evenings at Grace Baptist Church in West Asheville are alive with the musical sounds of Spanish and English, and everywhere children are laughing, reading, playing and studying. A nursery is offered for the young children while their parents are in class and older children receive help with homework and special projects.

Russell helps Spanish-speaking immigrants with any challenges they face involving immigration issues, medical appointments, translations, housing, childcare and work.

He says his health has improved dramatically since he was led to this meaningful, rewarding work, and he now volunteers as much as 70 or 80 hours each week.

Pledge For America Given At Patriotic Social

The pledge of allegiance to the flag was led by little Miss LaVerne Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Johnson of 17 Michigan avenue and Charles Himes, who was dressed as Uncle Sam at a patriotic social given by the adult department of the Sunday school at Calvary Baptist church last night. Carl Logan, associate superintendent of the department, had charge of the program; Mrs. J. A. Bocook led games; Mrs. Don Young had charge of decorations, and Mrs. John Barnard, refreshments. Approximately 75 members of the 11 classes in the department attended. Games were the main features of entertainment. Mrs. Bocook was dressed as the patriotic figure, "Miss Columbia."

Mrs. O. V. Himes Is Director Of Program

Under the supervision of Mrs. O V. Himes, of the Woman's Missionairy Union, Calvary Baptist church, West Asheville, a special service demonstration was given in connection with the all day session of the Woman's Missionary Union of Buncombe county held at the North Asheville Baptist church yesterday. The demonstration was witnessed by a large audience composed of representative missionary workers from all sections of Buncombe county and other points in the state.

Mrs. Himes, Retired School Teacher, Dies

Mrs. Annie Lillian Logan Himes, 79, of 124 Logan Ave., retired school teacher, died at 8:10 p.m. yesterday in an Asheville hospital after a short illness.

Mrs. Himes, a native of Buncombe County and a daughter of the late William Ervin and Rose Addie Deaver Himes, was educated in Asheville public schools. She finished high school at old Asheville Normal School and received her B. S. degree from Asheville Teachers College. She was the widow of Oren Von Himes, who died in 1958.

Mrs. Himes, an accomplished musician, studied under F. Flaxington Harker, who was brought to Asheville from England by George Vanderbilt as organist for All Souls Episcopal Church. Mrs. Himes taught music in private homes, traveling by pony and buggy.

Her first teaching position was at Aycock School, where she taught the kindergarten class until it was moved to Calvary Baptist Church in 1964. Later, she continued the Childs Garden School in her home, retiring in 1968 after 64 years in the teaching profession.

A charter member of Calvary Baptist Church, she had taught a beginners class since the age of 16. She was a member of the Women's Missionary Union, superintendent of the primary department, and had served as president and chairman of community missions of the Buncombe County Baptist WMU and was association superintendent for 25 years. She had served as organist and pianist since the church's organization.

Surviving are two sisters, Mrs. Myrtle L. Lawrence of Asheville and Miss Mary K. Logan of Mars Hill; three brothers, Carl M. and Harry R. Logan of Asheville and Dr. William B. Logan of Babson Park, Fla.; two step-daughters, Mrs. John Ford of Brevard and Mrs. Bennie Bellflower of Asheville; a step-son, Charles Himes of Brevard; and four grandchildren.

Funeral services will be held at 3 p.m. tomorrow in Calvary Baptist Church. The Revs. John Knight, pastor, and Robert Blankenship will officiate and burial will be in Green Hills Cemetery. Pallbearers will be Dr. Harold Keener, Carter Parham, H. C. Caldwell Jr., Doyle Woody, J. R. Rogers, George Buckner Sr., Don Compton and Howard Candler.

MRS. HIMES

The body will be taken to the home at 4 p.m. today, where it will remain until taken to the church 30 minutes prior to services.

Arrangements are under direction of Anders-Rice Funeral Home.

Marksmanship, Taxidermy Combined In Hobby

Two years ago James Pat Hodges was presented a set of books on taxidermy and, instead of letting them gather dust on a forgotten bookshelf, he studied them. As a result, he has a large collection of stuffed birds he has mounted and has derived a great deal of pleasure from the novel and interesting hobby. Hodges, the 17-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Hodges of 89 Dorchester avenue and a senior at Lee Edwards high school, is pictured with a few specimens in his collection. He has mounted more than 150 of the creatures, some for himself and some for his friends. Some of the birds and animals were given to him by friends, but most of them he shot with his rifle as a pastime. His first experience was obtained in mountaing a catbird, his largest mount is a deerhead and his smallest is a baby duckling, which died a natural death. He started his work to get merit badges in the Boy Scout troop. He is an Eagle Scout. In back center of the picture is shown a rabbit hawk and on either side at the back are ring neck pheasants, male and female. Others shown include a screech own, quail, blue wing teal and rabbit. Hodges is a member of the traffic patrol at Lee Edwards, secretary of the Bowhikrif club, a club for students interested in rifling, hiking and archery, and secretary of his assembly.

Victory Bus To Join Street Fleet Here

Here is a new bus that will join the others of the White Transportation company on Asheville streets early next week. This bus is known as a "Victory" model because some accessories are made of wood. All main safety features have been retained in metal. The bus was built by the Ford Motor company and has just been tested here. Colvin White of the White company said today they have not decided to which route the new bus will be assigned. Shown by the bus is M. A. Swearngan, warehouseman of the company.

H. F. Holland is pictured at the wheel of the new bus. He is shown "knocking on wood" for luck of the new bus and to show that the minor parts are made of wood. This bus will seat 27 passengers and is of the same type as the other larger buses of the White fleet.

W. ASHEVILLE RADIOIST GETS 28 STATIONS

John Honney Lists WTAX And WFAA In Log; More Lists Are Wanted

By Station WATT

WATT's request for radio listeners in western North Carolina to send in lists of their one-night achievements has brought an interesting log showing twenty-three stations listed on Monday nigh by John Honney, of 62 Fifth Avenue, West Asheville.

Our invitation is still open and we hope that a score or more of dial-twisters will send in a list. Any number over ten stations is worth while and may show some call letters which even their own air neighbors are unable to list often. How many get WDAE at Tampa? There was an excellent orchestra there, and we notice that is one on the list sent in by by Honney. We got it for about the first time Thursday night, probably because in our nightly wanderings from 200 to 550 we never sought it out. Let your lists come in at once. Perhaps Friday or Saturday night will find you at the dials for two hours or more, and you may be able to list a dozen or more interesting points. If so, write them down and mail to WATT right away, with notes on what you heard.

Anybody getting Canada frequently? What stations?

Here is Honney's list, heard through a Radiola 28 with WWNC on.

KDKA, 6:40 p. m.—Band.
WFAA, 6:45 p. m.—Woman singer.
KWY, 7—Sports.
WHO, 7:10—Band.
WJR, 7:20—Mixed vocal music and speech.
WLW, 7:25—Orchestra and baritone.
WEAF, 7:35—String quartet.
WWNC, 7:50—Mel Trotter revival service.
WJZ, 9:12—Accordion solo.
WSB, 9:30—Women's vocal duet and accordion.
WLW, 9:40—Jazz band.
WWKH, 9:50—Saxophone.
WSIW, 10—Piano solo.
WPG, 10:05—Women singing.
WFBM, 10:10—Piano and violin.
KFAB, 10:15—Recitation and orchestra.
[illegible] Jazz band.
WOI, 10:40—Jazz band.
KTNT, 10:50—Radio speech.
WRVA, 10:55—Three Blind Mice, song.
WWNC, 11—Plaza organ.
KED, 11:05—Piano solo.
WJAY, 11:15—Banjo.
WDAD, 11:20—Awards and prizes.
WTAX, 11:25—Jazz band.
WEAF, 11:40—Chain band.

~~Single-Night~~ Logs Asked Of Fans Here

By Station WATT.

"One Fan's" logging of sixteen stations and twenty program sections during a single night, as announced in this column Tuesday, has caused considerable talk and speculation among other enthusiasts here. Owners of various models have been debating their power and selectivity with rival owners. The result is that The Times' radio editor has been asked to receive and print lists, furnished by radio set owners and attested by at least one friend who listens in at the same time, and showing the number and clarity of stations received.

Any fans who may care to try their sets out in such a test, may send in such lists, and the radio editor will be glad to make use of them.

Among the features you should tune in on Wednesday night, are WSAI's Michael Hauer's orchestra, 11 p. m.; The Royal Palace Artists to be heard over WPG; Gagan's Orchestra, from WEAF about the same hour and the Sylvania Foresters, WJZ at 8:30 p. m. This latter group may give you a pleasant surprise, if you have never tuned in on WJZ at the proper time to hear them.

Send your one-night logs in to WATT, Radio Editor, The Times, right away, giving approximate time consumed in tuning in the whole list, and the time spent on each wave length.

The Police Review

VOLUME 6 MARCH, 1927 NUMBER 3

FRANK CRAWFORD HOOPER
Patrolman
ASHEVILLE, NORTH CAROLINA

Officer Hooper born December 20th, 1894, in Jackson County, North Carolina, living there but two years when his parents moved to Henderson County, North Carolina.

The most of Hooper's life was spent on the farm where he spent his time in an undisturbed tranquil atmosphere, without having his thoughts and dreams interrupted, thereby gaining information from Dame Nature, which led his to be discreet and courteous.

With an environment like this, doubtless Hooper has spent many days along some stream reflecting upon the problems of life. As he is known today, he has a manner which inspires confidence and a strength of character that has led him to be looked up to not only by the police force of Asheville, (having received his appointment May 1st, 1926), but also by its citizens.

He says his work has a peculiar fascination about it which appeals to him. He realizes there is a lot of danger connected with his duties, but is eager to participate in them and calls it an interesting occupation. It is a contrast to his life on the farm, where quiet and peace reigned supreme.

He is a strong advocate of discipline and enforcement of the law; he believes discipline is as necessary to the police department as to the army, and that closer co-operation between the department and the public would make the work more attractive.

Officer Hooper is five feet eleven inches in height and weighs two hundred and two pounds.

He resides at 279 Waynesville Avenue.

A Farewell For Milo Hopper

1979

By BILL MOORE
Citizen-Times Staff Writer

The Wizard came into the office the other day.

His eyes kept filling with tears and his voice broke as he talked.

BILL MOORE

"I've never had any trouble writing coherently before," he said, "But I just can't seem to get this to come out right. Will you help me?"

The Wizard is Bob Brown, the originator of the daily Science For You feature that runs in a number of newspapers across the country.

For years he has been educating people while he entertained them. For years he has been amazing and delighting youngsters with his lectures and demonstrations in schools all over the Southeast.

In the five years that I've worked here in Asheville, I've came to know Bob pretty well.

He is a kindly, soft-spoken, man who is always pleasant, always considerate of other people.

We share an interest in opera and have gone on a couple of jaunts to the Brevard Music Center together.

I never before have seen him as emotionally moved as he was the other day, though.

"My best friend just died," he said.

"He had been helping me with a chore at my house when he fell and injured his shoulder. I was driving him to the hospital for an X-ray. He died two blocks from the hospital.

Bob choked, his face a mask of grief and frustration.

"I've been trying to write something about — it, but it won't work. Here, see what you can do with it for me."

This is what Bob had written:

"Milo Hopper, a very special neighbor, is dead.

"He and his wife, Norma, and my wife, Mary, and I have lived as neighbors and almost as one family for many years.

"A narrow band of grass separated our homes, but like other things, only brought us closer. It gave us something in common; a cool place to sit and talk.

"He and Norma shared with Mary a garden plot behind our homes. Milo always prepared the the flower beds where Norma and Mary, most working on their knees, have grown exceptional flowers.

Conan Doyle, in one of the Sherlock Holmes stories, said that dogs reflect the personalities of their owners.

The Hopper's little white dog, Pogo, is a wonderful neighbor; gentlemanly; harmless, intelligent — just like his owners.

"And the Hoppers have loved our cat, Yellow Bell.

"Whenever one family went away on vacation, the feeding of their pets always fell to the other family.

And whenever the Hoppers great-grandchildren came to visit the Hopper house, they always ran across the grass to exchange hugs and greeting with the Browns.

"Just a few hours before his death, Milo came over to help me move a heavy box.

"He was always looking for things to do to help other people. I tried, but I couldn't find enough things to do help him to stay even at all.

And now Milo Hopper, a very special neighbor, is dead.

What Bob Brown wrote didn't need any help from me.

I wish I had known Milo Hopper.

And I'm very glad I know Bob Brown.

Asheville, NC 28806

Dear Bonnie,

As a lifelong resident and homeowner in West Asheville I would like to make a recommendation to the West Asheville Business Association.

Now that West Asheville will soon have a new Ingles located on Haywood Road, I would like to see other businesses on Haywood Road attempt new approaches to the appearance of their business. This could be in the form of general cleanup, "face lifts", or even reverting to the 30's and 40's appearance of the original buildings - an "old town" in West Asheville which could even be a tourist attraction. I feel that by doing this we could encourage business and growth and discourage some of the unpleasant things that occur on the streets of West Asheville.

There are many residents of West Asheville that have been born and raised in this area and I feel they would agree with me that we live in West Asheville because we like it. It would be great to be able to upgrade the area.

I guess I am laying the burden on the Association to pursue this idea. I also believe that if this could be started and supported by the Association, the residents would follow through in assisting in any way they could.

Thank you for giving this some consideration and proceeding however possible.

Sincerely,

Freddie M. Hopper (Mrs. James)

COMING HOME

John Coutlakis/STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Old friends from the Westwood Place/Vandalia Avenue area of West Asheville gathered Saturday at Westwood Baptist Church for the first-ever reunion of residents who've lived in the residential neighborhood over the years. Organized by Freddie Mitchell Hopper, a librarian with the West Asheville Library, seen here showing old photographs to some of the attendees, some 50 friends from across the country participated in a meat loaf and fried chicken dinner, sharing of memorabilia and plenty of talk about the old days in the neighborhood – which hasn't changed much over the past 50 years.

Teachers Make Blood Donation On Work Day

Freddie Hopper, left, a first time blood donor, joined the Hall Fletcher Middle School staff and faculty Monday for a school-wide blood drive during a teacher work day for the Asheville city schools. She's monitored by Red Cross R.N. Carol Leong. The blood drive at the school was organized by Hall Fletcher teacher Pantha Penley who convinced over 20 of her colleagues to give blood. Many of them were first time donors. Due to the positive response to the school-wide blood drive, Asheville City Schools superintendent Dr. Don Jones has given his approval for a city-wide blood drive for school personnel next year. GOOD WILL TOUR HAD FINE EFFECT SAYS J. T. HORNEY

Declares This City Will Reap Fruits for Years to Come.

ASHEVILLE IS JUST BEGINNING TO GROW

Horney Plans to Place Four Sub-Divisions on Market Here.

"I am preparing for Asheville's greatest season" is the wording on a large sign placed in front of the new offices of J. T. Horney on Government and Haywood Streets which will be opened Thursday.

Mr. Horney returned Saturday evening from a most successful season in Florida. He is filled with enthusiasm over the prospects of this section and he thinks that Asheville and Western North Carolina are just beginning to grow.

Upon arrival here, Mr. Horney stated that he contemplated developing and placing on the market two sub-divisions at once and that later on during the season he will develop and place two other subdivisions on the market. Such activity on the part of Mr. Horney speaks louder than words of his faith in this city and section.

"There is no question but that Asheville this year will enjoy its greatest season," said Mr. Horney yesterday. "The Good Will Tour of Asheville citizens to Florida cities has had a tremendous effect upon visitors to Florida and upon the Florida people themselves. Perhaps, however, the greatest effect has been upon Asheville's own citizenry. The fact that several score of Asheville citizens spent ten days in Florida boosting and gathering information cannot help but be beneficial to this city. Asheville will reap the fruits of this work for years to come."

Mr. Horney, who traveled over nearly the entire state of Florida following the Good Will Tour, states that his observations were that the good will tour had a wonderful effect. Lots and lots of Floridians and Florida visitors told Mr. Horney that they intended coming to Western North Carolina this summer.

Mr. Horney also praised the advertising work being done in Florida and other Southern States for Dixie Route A.

AMERICAN PUBLIC NEEDS PARKS SAYS REALTY OPERATOR

"What the American public needs in the many large cities of America is more parks," declares J. T. Horney, sole owner of Horneyhurst, the residential development that offers more than 200 home sites. "Being a firm believer in parks I have followed the course as much as possible."

When Mr Horney developed and put Horney Heights, West Asheville, on the market, the thoughtfully reserved 10 acres of wooded land, which he deeded to the City of Asheville free of cost and encumbrances. He had been offered $10,000 for the tract and it was estimated at that time to be worth $20,000.

During the winter season, Mr. Horney gave to the City of Lakeland, Fla., a two-acre park, after he had spent $6,000 in developing and beautifying it. He believes that cities are growing so fast that unless some provision is made for parks and open spaces, congestion will become unbearable. The parks are needed according to my poinion, for grown ups as well as the younger generation. WALKS in parks are conducive to good health and good citizenship and are as necessary as the proper diet for the average person, the realty expert declares.

Since John Nolen, the noted City Planner, made a comprehensive survey of Asheville and West Asheville, pointing out the revenues of future growth here, Mr. Horney has made a long study of the suggestions of Mr. Nolen and the former is just as strong advocate for public parks as the latter. When Mr. Nolen submitted his plans, he laid special stress on parks, advising the City Commissioners to proceed to make provision for them immediately, adding that delay meant that thousands or more dollars eventually would have to be expended, when the public at large is in a [illegible]

Rise of J. T. Horney in the Real Estate World Has Been Meteoric; Has Many Interests

In the announcement of the opening of Balla Vista, it would be amiss if something was not mentioned about the meteoric rise in the realty field of J. T. Horney, the sole owner of the new development, whose confidence in land values here has been an outstanding feature of his activities.

Mr. Horney is only 34 years old and his holdings and sales have been conducted in many states but the majority of them have been conducted in North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia and Florida. He is a graduate from Lenoir College with an A. B. degree. He taught for a year and became enrolled in the University of North Carolina where he graduated in law.

After receiving his degree, he began the practice of his profession in Canton, where he built up a large and lucrative practice and gained for himself an enviable reputation at the bar. He was formerly city attorney of Canton and was the prosecutor in the Police Court of that town for six years. At that time he was considered one of the most successful lawyers of Haywood County.

His health failed and consequently he was advised by his physicians that his profession was too confining for him and that he must "get out in the open." Realizing the seriousness of his condition, Mr. Horney became interested in the real estate business. His success in his new line of endeavor was by leaps and bounds. He has conducted hundreds of sales in Western North Carolina and his operations became so extensive that they were not limited to the borders of the state or the South, but have gone into the Middle West and the East.

Although his accomplishments have been largely due to his personal efforts, yet credit is due to the efficient sales force that he has built up. His transactions have not been wholly confined to the auction game; but the general realty business must be brought in for a big share.

Mr. Horney is a member of the First Baptist Church of Asheville, the Kiwanis Club, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Asheville Chamber of Commerce, the High Point Chamber of Commerce, the St. Petersburg [illegible] Chamber of Commerce, the Lakeland, Fla., Chamber of Commerce, Tourists' Club of Lakeland, the Citrus Growers Association of Florida and the American Automobile Association. He retains his membership in the North Carolina Bar Association.

He is general manager of Horney Brothers Land Company, the famous auction company and retains his permanent home in Asheville. He spends his winters at Lakeland.

J. T. Horney is probably the largest and youngest owner and developer of exclusive residential subdivisions in the South. He is the sole owner of all his subdivisions, never taking in a partner. He is a self-made man, having made his own way through college, and entered upon his legal and business career, after graduation, with no funds to speak of. He develops on an average four or five large residential subdivisions each year, especially in Florida and North Carolina. However, he has developed subdivisions in Tennessee, Virginia and West Virginia. He has built up one of the largest and most efficient private sales organizations in the [illegible]

SONG ABOUT CITY WILL BE WRITTEN

J. T. Horney, Prominent Florida and W. N. C. Developer, to Publish and Distribute Copies.

An Asheville song, with appropriate words, will be written for J. T. Horney and dedicated to the City of Asheville for advertising purposes, it was announced yesterday. Mr. Horney recently had a Lakeland song published and around 15,000 copies have been distributed.

Mr. Horney states that he is now making arrangements for the publication of the Asheville song and it will be ready for use this spring. The "Land of the Sky" slogan will be appropriately woven into the words and it is expected to be a great boost for this section. Many of the songs will be placed throughout Florida.

The music has already been arranged by the composers and has ben played several times by the Hornedena Beach Orchestra. This orchestra is under contract with the J. T. Horney devlopments and is now playing in Florida.

J. T. HORNEY

J. T. Horney is the South's youngest and largest residential subdivision developer, financing all his own projects. A man of vision and daring, concentrating his energies in developing Western North Carolina and Florida properties.

Horney's First Development Was in Horney Heights, West Asheville; Many Homes Built

One of the first large and most successful projects carried out here was the development in West Asheville of Horney Heights. The lots in the sub-division have increased, on, two, three, four and even five hundred percent since they were sold by the man promoting the residential section. It is Mr. Horney's prediction that Horneyhurst lots will increase even more rapidly than Horney Heights. He believes that persons "getting in on the ground floor" and buying Horneyhurst lots early, when they can get the choicest sites, will double their money within a year.

Over 50 bungalows have been erected on Horney Heights lots since the addition was opened three years ago and numbers are under course of construction at the present time. Horney Heights was a $150,000 development and as a result of six auction sales, 400 lots were sold in a few days.

Ten Acres of the subdivision were given to the City of Asheville for a Park and water and sewer lines were laid and streets were paved and electric lights installed at the expense of Mr. Horney.

This was one of the first extensive residential developments in West Asheville and since it was started in 1921 land in the immediate neighborhood has been increasing in value at a rapid rate. The land was purchased by Mr. Horney for $50,000 after the former owner had flatly refused previous offers of smaller amounts. It is situated in an advantageous position, lying on both sides of Haywood Road for three quarters of a mile, extending from Dill's Rest to the Five Mile Tea Room.

Since the sale of the lots, the purchasers have made thousands of dollars worth of improvements and construction work has gone forward rapidly.

BOTH Mr. and Mrs. Ellsworth were spellbound while reading from press clippings that John had horded, the histories of men whose lives and achievements were his criterion of success. In this way they learn of Mr. J. T. Horney.

In the announcement of the opening of Horneyhurst, it would be amiss, if something was not mentioned about the meteoric rise in the realty field of J. T. Horney, the sole owner of the new development whose confidences in land values here has been an outstanding feature of his activities.

Although his accomplishments have been largely due to his personal efforts, yet credit is due to the efficient sales force that he has built.

"What the American public needs in the many large cities of America is more parks," declares J. T. Horney. Being a firm believer in parks I have followed the course as much as possible."

When Mr. Horney developed and put Horney Heights, West Asheville, on the market, he thoughtfully reserved ten acres of wooded land, which he deeded to the City of Asheville free of cost and encumbrances. He had been offered $10,000 for the tract and it was estimated at that time to be worth $20,000. He has also given the city a two-acre park in the Hayes addition.

BRUCEMONT CIRCLE—HORNEYHURST

During the winter season, Mr. Horney gave to the City of Lakeland, Fla., a two-acre park, after he had spent $6,000 in developing and beautifying it. He believes that cities are growing so fast that unless some provision is made for parks and open spaces, congestion will become unbearable. The parks are needed for grownups as well as the younger generation. Walks in parks are conductive to good health and good citizenship and are as necessary as the proper diet for the average person, the realty expert declares.

Since John Nolen, the noted City Planner, made a comprehensive survey of Asheville and West Asheville, pointing out the avenues of future growth here, Mr. Horney has made a long study of the suggestions of Mr. Nolen and the former is just as strong an advocate for public parks as the latter.

Robert Henry is a character more suited for fiction than non-fiction. While just a boy he fought with the Overmountain Men at Kings Mountain and battled British troops along the Catawba River. As a surveyor he helped mark the boundary line between Tennessee and North Carolina. He had a long career as a prominent attorney and owned the famous Sulphur Springs resort. Yet, while Henry is one of western North Carolina's most accomplished ancestors, he is also one of the most eccentric. He preferred to dress in moccasins and traveled with a walking stick nearly as tall as he. Some said he had the gift of foresight and was able to predict his own death. Join author Richard Russell as he navigates the unusual, contradictory and fascinating life of Robert Henry.

Introduction

On the afternoon of October 7, 1780, British major Patrick Ferguson and his Loyalist militia of over one thousand men were camped along the high ridge of Kings Mountain near the border of North Carolina and South Carolina. The American Revolution had dragged on for four years, and Ferguson had been dispatched by Lord Cornwallis to crush local resistance and gain Loyalist support in the Carolinas. While in route to Charlotte, Ferguson decided to reverse course and take a defensive stand against pursuing Rebels. Robert Henry, three months shy of fourteen, stood poised at the base of the mountain with a courageous group of Patriot friends and neighbors known as the "South Fork Boys." The boys had come from their homes on the South Fork of the Catawba River in North Carolina to join forces with more than nine hundred rugged fighters known as the "Overmountain Men." The mountain men had tracked Major Ferguson to the ridge top, and now their forces surrounded the mountain, ready to attack. The South Fork Boys launched an assault up the northeast side of the mountain, and within minutes, young Robert Henry lay on the mountainside with a Loyalist bayonet impaling his hand to his thigh.

The following February, recovered from his wounds at Kings Mountain, Robert stood as one of the picket guards at a location on the Catawba River known as Cowan's Ford. He observed British soldiers on horseback attempting to cross, many being carried away or drowned by the swift current. He fired until a number of them reached his chosen signal rock in the river and then ran up the bank and took refuge behind a tree. He continued to fire as long as he could. With the tree's bark being loosened by enemy bullets, Robert narrowly avoided injury and was able to make an escape.

The zeal to fight for liberty may have been ingrained in Robert at a very early age. In 1775, while accompanying his father to Charlotte, he observed concerned and outraged citizens meeting and deliberating the Mecklenburg

Declaration of Independence.

These boyhood experiences were surely influential and instrumental in preparing Robert for a remarkable life that spanned nearly a century. After the close of the Revolution, Robert studied law, medicine and surveying. He became an accomplished and prominent trial and land lawyer, one of the first in western North Carolina. He was appointed an official surveyor of the boundary line between Tennessee and North Carolina. He was Buncombe County's first teacher, and he also practiced medicine for a time.
Using surveying experience, knowledge of the law and contacts with Revolutionary War veterans, Robert amassed vast land holdings in North Carolina and Tennessee. Discovering naturally occurring sulphur and mineral springs on his land, he established a resort hotel, attracting more summer visitors than the nearby town of Asheville.

He was a landlord, a plantation owner, a farmer and a slave owner.
Robert Henry has been described as versatile, a hero as brave as a lion, a philosopher and naturalist, a historian and author, an inventor, a genius and a pioneer. He was said to have a phenomenal memory.

Conversely, he was noted as slovenly and a bumpkin, a fraud and an imposter, and he has been called a liar.2 He was known to be "fond of the bitters" and smoking. His appearance was more of the criminal than the defender. An eccentric man, he shunned normal attire and preferred to dress in the style of the native peoples, wearing moccasins at home. At times, he neglected to wear stockings when attending court. It is said he preferred sleeping on the floor rather than in a feather bed. His chief method of travel for less than a day's journey was by foot, using a large walking stick nearly as tall as himself.

At age forty-seven, he married Dorcas Bell Love, the seventeen-year-old daughter of Robert Love, founder of Waynesville, North Carolina. Robert and Dorcas Bell lived in Buncombe County, North Carolina, approximately seven miles west of Asheville, where they raised a large family. After thirty years of marriage, the couple was legally separated and then divorced.
Robert Henry was a man of legend, mystery and myth. His life was one of great achievement and one of tragic personal failure, yet his part in history remains unknown to most. A letter referring to Robert in an 1859 issue of Harper's Weekly stated, "Let honor be given to whom honor is due." Perhaps this writing will aid in achieving that goal.

THE HIGHLANDERS, newest addition to the local "Hootenanny" clan, warm up for their next production at Rec Park. The music-minded trio includes (L R) Bob Hinkle, 18, of 20 Carlton Pl., a graduate of Lee H. Edwards High School this year who's headed for the University of North Carolina; Bill Horton, 19, of 28 Vermont Court, a junior at Wake Forest, and Nelson Watts, 18, who describes himself as almost a junior at UNC. The three began a Rec Park Hootenanny series last Saturday and hope to continue through Aug. 24.

Musical Trio Here Rides Tide Of National 'Hootenanny' Fad

By PETE GILPIN
Citizen Staff Writer

A Dixieland fan is a dedicated man.

But, given an even slightly open mind, he'll concede there might just possibly be one or two other forms of musical expression.

Like, for instance, the "hootenanny," a word that has not yet attained the status of our office Webster's, but which, roughly translated means a gathering of folk singers with the intent of playing and singing.

Or, as one observer summed it up, a hootenanny is to folk music what a jam session is to Dixieland (and other varieties of) jazz.

Which is where three Asheville youths come in. One a Wake Forest student, Bill Horton, another a Lee Edwards graduate headed this fall for the University of North Carolina, Bob Hinkle, and the third already at UNC, Nelson Watts.

Mention them and you have to take into account Bob's 12-string guitar, the type Hudie Ledbetter, otherwise known as "Leadbelly," and Pete Seeger have brought to folk music fame throughout the land. Also the other guitar man, Horton, and Watts, who divides his time between the banjo and writing the lyrics for this young group of enterprising folk musicians.

On their own hook, they have arranged for possession of the Recreation Park dance pavillion every Saturday night through Aug. 24 to provide Asheville with a regular series of hootenannies.

Naturally, they figured the audience would be mostly the younger set. It wasn't. Young Watts said most of the 90 who showed up were adults and the Highlanders were competing with a country club dance to boot.

But even before their start at Rec Park, they had already achieved something of a reputation hereabouts.

They were en route to a performance in Hendersonville and trying to figure out what they should call themselves.

"We passed a hotel called the Highlander which was closed down for some reason or other," Watts said. "Right there we decided that was our name."

As for their music, a good portion of it is original.

And even when it isn't, the Highlanders aren't content without adding their own touches.

In a practice session this week, a visitor of previous leaning toward Dixieland, quickly found a common meeting ground with Horton, Hinkle and Watts.

The subject was rock'n'roll.

"It's out," they chorused, bringing a grin to their listener's face, and from that point on, there was mutual accord. (There's no disrespect meant here for fans of rock'n'roll. But, as the saying goes, they can have it.)

But just to keep everything happy, they presented their original version of "Gypsy," then tried it again as they imagined twist champ Chubby Checkers would have performed.

A "rasty" version, Horton called it.

Rasty?

"That's what used to be called raunchy," Horton explained.

Upcoming for this Saturday's hootenanny at Rec Park, set for 8 p. m., is, to quote the Highlanders, "An Illustrated History of Contemporary American Folk Songs and Documentary, from Leadbelly to the Highlanders."

They'll offer selections made famous by the Weavers, Woody Guthrie, the Kingston Trio, the Brothers Four and Peter Paul and Mary as well as their own ditties.

With that preface, they launched into a rehearsal, offering their favorites and, occasionally, favoring their listener with a request if they approved his choice.

Such songs as the "Wreck of the Old 97," detailing that mighty rough road from Lynchburg to Danville and all on a three-mile grade. Also on how Steve Brodie died trying to make it on time and winding up with "Never speak harsh words to your true lovin' husband, He may leave you and never return."

There was the fast-gaining in the popularity poll philosophical lament entitled "Blowing In the Wind" in which one line reads: "How many times can a man turn his head and pretend he doesn't see."

And there was the rollicking "Peace Corps," in which the Highlanders query: "Who'll join that crowd of nuts and go and live in wooden huts?"

Commercial?

Not so, the Highlanders protest. Proceeds (50 cents a head) go to the Highlanders' Educational and Development Fund—10 per cent to the city to use the Rec Park location, 60 per cent to the University of North Carolina for Hinkle's and Watts' tuition, and the final 30 per cent to take care of Horton at Wake Forest.

SADDENING NEWS.

Death of Miss Laura Houghteling In Washington.

Dr. S. Westray Battle has received a telegram bearing the sad intelligence that Miss Laura Houghteling, daughter of William D. and Marcia E. Houghteling, died yesterday at the house of Senator Stockbridge in Washington City. Heart disease was the cause of Miss Houghteling's death.

Miss Houghteling was very well known in Asheville in and near which city she has lived for several years. She was a handsome young lady and lovely in every trait of character. Many people will never forget the noble work she did in aiding occupants of the Belmont hotel when they were driven from the building on the night of the memorable Belmont fire. The many friends of the highly esteemed lady will hear of her death with the keenest sorrow.

Miss Houghteling's remains will be interred at Chicago.

MRS. HOUGHTELING DIED YESTERDAY

Remains Taken to Chicago This Afternoon After Funeral at Strawberry Hill

The funeral of Mrs. Marcia Elizabeth Houghteling, who died yesterday afternoon, was held today at 12:45 at Trinity church. Rev. R. R. Swope officiated, assisted by Dr. Brown and Rev. A. H. Bubbs. The pallbearers were Charles McNamee, Dr. Phillip R. Moale, Dr. S. W. Battle, H. Redwood, H. D. Child, Capt. T. W. Patton, Haywood Parker, Dr. M. H. Fletcher, Dr. J. H. Williams and J. H. Law.

Mrs. Houghteling, who had been ill at her home in West Asheville for several weeks, was taken suddenly worse yesterday and died late in the afternoon. Heart trouble was the cause of her death.

Her son, James Houghteling of Chicago and daughter, Mrs. A. C. Canfield of New York had been called from their homes and were with their mother at the time of her death.

Mrs. Houghteling, who was before her marriage Marcia Elizabeth Stockbridge, was born 69 years ago in Bath, Me.

She was married to William D. Houghteling of Chicago, who lived in that city until 12 years ago, when, with her husband, she came to Asheville and purchased the Strawberry Hill property. She had six children, only two of whom, Jane Houghteling and Mrs. Canfield survive.

A niece, Miss Sheldon, has been a member of her household for a number of years.

Mr. Houghteling died several years ago. A woman of sweetness and strength of character, Mrs. Houghteling had ever since she had lived here, been deeply interested in the charitable work of the city and was warmly loved by the poor of Asheville, as well as by her closer friends.

She was a member of Trinity church and was a prominent member of the church guild and auxiliary. She was also one of the managers of the Mission hospital and was interested in other city charities.

The remains were taken to Chicago this afternoon and will be interred in Graceland cemetery.

Asheville Citizen September 2, 1902

W. D. HOUGHTELING DEAD.

He Was Held in High Esteem by Asheville People.

William D. Houghteling died at his residence, Strawberry Hill, ~~near Asheville~~, yesterday afternoon. Mr. Houghteling was aged 79 years. The funeral services will be conducted at Trinity church Wednesday, August 10, at 5 p. m. The interment will be private.

William DeZeng Houghteling was born in 1819 at Geneva, New York. He moved to the then frontier town of Chicago in 1844, where for nearly 50 years he was a useful and respected citizen, taking large part in the upbuilding of that great city. As a merchant his name was a synonym of honesty and enterprise; as a citizen he was always found on the side of good government and civic righteousness; and as a friend his kindliness and generosity endeared him to all with whom he came in close contact.

During his active business life Mr. Houghteling held many positions and offices of trust and honor. He was at one time vice-president of the Chicago Board of Trade, and more than once president of the Chicago Lumber exchange.

Mr. Houghteling married in 1853 Miss Marcia E. Stockbridge of Maine, who, with two children—Mrs. A. Cass Canfield of New York and James L. Houghteling of Chicago, the founder of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew—survives him.

Mr. Houghteling's life during his several years' residence in Asheville had been marked by such public spirit and private generosity as to greatly endear him to a large number of people here in all walks of life, and they will all echo the sentiment expressed by Capt. T. W. Patton in a telegram lately received: "Our dear friend will be sorely missed."

Retired school media coordinator uses skills to spearhead service projects

By Eden Foster
CITIZEN-TIMES CORRESPONDENT

ASHEVILLE — Watching television one night last year, Caryl Houghton learned the Asheville Buncombe Community Christian Ministry was looking for help preparing its new women and children's shelter for occupancy.

She immediately thought of Kappa Kappa Iota, a service organization for educators she has belonged to for more than 28 years.

The society's local chapter immediately agreed with Houghton that sponsoring one of the rooms in the shelter would be an excellent service project for its thirteen members.

"Being a bit naïve, I didn't realize exactly how much work would really be involved," said Houghton with a laugh. "But it was an absolutely incredible experience for us. It just brought us together so much," she said.

Houghton coordinated the massive work project that eventually took 250 hours to complete.

"The room was in really bad shape," Houghton said. The women scrubbed, filled in cracks, painted, hung blinds, and decorated the now cheerful room that can be used by a mother and an infant and toddler. "We had a ball. The room turned out really nicely and we were quite proud and really pleased," said Houghton.

Quote: "Can you imagine a dozen women decorating a room without any arguments?"

HOMETOWN HERO

During the course of the project Houghton learned the shelter needed used cellular phones for the residents to use. These phones do not have service contracts and can only be used to call 911 for an emergency.

Houghton set up a collection box at several schools and took about a dozen of the recycled phones to U.S. Cellular on Hendersonville Road for reconditioning. She said more are needed and anyone wishing to donate a phone can call her at 275-4839.

"She's a very strong leader in our society," said Janice Nelson, a friend and fellow society member. "And she's a very giving person to her fellow man and to animals, too."

A retired media coordinator at Emma Elementary School, Houghton still substitutes in the various county libraries whenever she is needed. She collects old newspapers from the libraries every month and brings them to the Buncombe County Animal Shelter.

"The entire trunk of my car will be filled, and they are always very appreciative." Two of her three dogs were adopted from the shelter, and she said, "This is just a way that I can pay them back. It's helpful and it's easy."

TWO FINE STUDENTS

Elizabeth and J. D. Howell, Jr., children of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Howell, of West Asheville, have made a splendid school record. Neither has been absent or tardy since beginning studies at the kindergarten. Elizabeth has just completed the fifth grade at Vance School and is just as attentive at Bon Grove Methodist Sunday school. She is also a talented pianist and has played for WNC, The Citizen's radio station. Her music teacher is Mrs. Thomas Allen Curry. J. D. has just finished Grade 4-A at Vance School and made an excellent record. He is a great admirer of Tom Mix and when he isn't studying he is practicing with his bean-shooter.

FOUND LYING IN ROAD WITH GASH ON HEAD

Last night about 8 o'clock a man was found lying in one of the streets of West Asheville who appeared to be in a rather serious condition—in fact he was thought to be dead or that was the message that was sent to Dr. Anderson, who arrived in his automobile soon after. The man was found to be John Swink, who lives in Asheville. He had a gash on the been inflicted with some weapon and side of his head that had evidently he was considerably the worse for drink.

Dr. Anderson took Swink, who is a paper hanger, to a drug store in the city and dressed his wound, which looked worse than it really was.

Swink told that he had been hit by W. H. Hughes of West Asheville, a merchant and brother-in-law of Swink. He said that he had been at Hughes' home and they had been discussing some property which is in dispute; that he had started to leave the house and that was the last he knew.

HUGHES MAKES PLEA OF SELF DEFENSE

SAYS CARVER ADVANCED ON HIM WITH KNIFE

No Weapon Found and Both Mr. and Mrs. Carver's Statements are at Variance With Hughes'.

Despite the fact that both George Carver and his wife, who were shot by W. H. Hughes in West Asheville Saturday morning, declared that Hughes shot without saying a word, and gave no indication of even being angry before he shot, Hughes, at the county jail yesterday, declared that he fired the five shots in self defense. He declares that Carver was advancing on him with a knife, and that Mrs. Carver, who is the mother of a three-weeks-old baby, was also advancing on him, with her hand under her apron, and that he thought she had a weapon of some kind.

Hughes was seen at the county jail yesterday, and looked drawn and haggard, with bloodshot eyes, and the general appearance of a man "on the cold grey dawn of the morning after." He admitted that he was drinking Saturday, and said that after the shooting, he went straight home, turned a quart bottle of whiskey up to his lips and drank as much as he could.

Hughes claims that Carver owed him $19.49, and that it had been owing for about a month. He said that Friday was pay day on the Southern, and that he called Carver up that night, Mrs. Carver answering and telling him that Mr. Carver was out. He says that he told her he would call the next morning, and that, true to his promise, he went to the Carver home Saturday morning. Hughes said further that he and Carver had a dispute about the bill, Carver claiming that some of the items were incorrect, and that anyway, he had been forced to meet so many obligations during the past month that he could not pay the bill at present. Hughes then went to tell how Carver had finally become angry and that when it was suggested to him that he produce the memoranda he had made in regard to the bill, said he had burned it and would not pay the bill at all. Hughes says that Carver then advanced on him with a knife and that Mrs. Carver also advanced, holding her hand under her apron, and he drew his pistol and began firing.

The officers found no knife when they went to the Carver home in search of Hughes, and no one seems to know what became of any such weapon. Mrs. Carver, likewise had no weapon when she was picked up, and Mrs. Carver's mother, Mrs. Etta Freeman, who was in the room at the time of the shooting, says that after Hughes emptied his gun, he reloaded, and that she went to him and said:

"You have done enough, now, and had better go away." She says he then left. Both she and the baby, who were in the room, had narrow escapes from the flying leaden pellets.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Carver were resting easily at the hospital last night, and Dr. Arthur F. Reeves, who is attending them, says that, unless complications set in, both are out of danger. Neither could be reached to make a further statement yesterday.

Board Retires T. H. Hunt As Junior High Principal

Hall Fletcher Junior High School students today rallied to the support of their Principal, T.H. Hunt, retired—over his protest—by the City School Board.

The board, meeting in monthly session in City Building yesterday afternoon, listened to some 30 adults and students praise Hunt and urge his reelection as principal. Then it followed the recommendation of its superintendent of schools, E. C. Funderburk, who said that Hunt had reached the retirement age of 65 and that he could not request that he be rehired.

Hunt's retirement becomes effective at the end of the school year. It will end 35 years of service in the city schools system.

Funderburk's recommendation that Hunt be retired touched off a furor highlighted by a demand for the resignation of the entire School Board.

Some of the crowd of 100 persons gathered downstairs in City Council chambers later to organize a protest to City Council. Council appoints the school board but has no jurisdiction over schools.

This morning the Hall Fletcher students marched into the school auditorium and heard student body leaders state that they best could help their principal's cause by returning to class.

Nine students, comprising a student body committee and chosen more or less by acclamation, conferred with Dan Judd, West Asheville businessman and Republican party leader, on plans for a meeting of parents and students in the school auditorium at 7:30 p.m. today.

Among members of the student committee were Larry Brendle, Dickie McGalliard, Richard Owenby, Roy Helton, Julia Teeter and Johnny Rhea.

The nine at first refused to give reporters their names or to have their pictures taken but upon urging of Judd, they agreed to sit for a picture, and six of them gave their names.

A second picture, suggested by a woman identified as Mrs. T.W. Hudspeth, 29 Rumbough Pl., fell through when a teacher ordered the pupils back to class.

Mrs. Hudspeth, who refused to give reporters her name and left hurriedly when asked her name, suggested that the students step outside and be photographed in a posed "spontaneous demonstration."

Judd said he had been asked to help the students plan for tonight's meeting but said he did not know who had telephoned the request that he come to the school.

The Times received an anonymous tip this morning that a strike of students was under way at the school. A few students were in the hall when a reporter arrived. But a teacher hustled them off to classes.

The Hall Fletcher office attendant said Hunt was at Aycock School with the band.

The delegation which met in City Council chambers late yesterday afternoon named Harold K. Bennett, Judd, Troy White, Mrs. George Todd, Mrs. Ruth Sprung, Mrs. A. S. Beaman and W. J. Murphy to a committee to map strategy in a drive to retain Hunt.

Fifteen other city school principals were rehired by the board and virtually all teachers in the system.

Other retirements authorized by board were Mrs. A. S. Beaman, Hall Fletcher; Mrs. Alice H. Jones, Vance; Mrs. Beulah Hoffman, Lee Edwards; Mrs. Louise Bryson, Randolph.

The early stages of yesterday's board meeting was orderly. Supporters of Hunt spoke for an aggregate of one hour and 15 minutes urging his reappointment.

When Funderburk recommended the reappointment of 15 principals — omitting Hunt's name from the list—speakers jumped to their feet to demand a delay in the vote.

W. J. Murphy, who had earlier praised Hunt for his handling of boys—"Hunt believes there is no such thing as a bad boy"—asked that the board hold up action until petitions could be circulated in West Asheville asking for Hunt's rehiring.

When the board showed little inclination to discuss the matter further and appeared headed for a vote, Murphy called for the resignation of the entire five member board. His demand was greeted by applause.

Funderburk, in defending his action in retiring Hunt, said that "in the last analysis the responsibility is mine, whether I like it or not—I can only do according to the courage of my convictions . . . My convictions are purely objective."

He said, at one point, that he had been superintendent here only two years.

"That's two years too long," a voice from the rear of the room said.

At another time he said he had to follow his conscience in deciding that it was time for Hunt to retire.

"What conscience?" asked another voice from the rear.

Among speakers at the outset were the Rev. W. W. Preston, pastor of Malvern Hills Presbyterian Church, and a former teacher and school principal; the Rev. Nane Starnes, pastor of West Asheville Baptist Church; Kelly Roberts, Judd, Dan Foster, Frank Cocke, a retired Marine; Mrs. Nell Crawford, retired teacher; Mrs. L. F. Lott, Mrs. Calvin Marshall, Mrs. Ruth Sprung, Joe Eblen, Hall Fletcher coach.

Also Miss Thelma Jones, Hall Fletcher science teacher; Bland Church, Seth Perkinson, Domestic Relations Court Judge W. A. Hart, James Burns, a student; Frank Glenn, a Lee Edwards student and former Hall Fletcher student; Ed Meadows, Troy White, Dr. P. R. Terry, county coroner, Mrs. A. S. Beaman, G. T. Jones and Guy Weaver.

Nelia Hyatt, 83, is a local legend for hosting her weekly Thursday night mountain music shindigs.

Jam sessions spring out of Nelia Hyatt's own garage

By Carol Mallett

CITIZEN-TIMES CORRESPONDENT

ASHEVILLE – At 7 p.m. every Thursday, cars line the sides of Brevard Road near the WNC Farmers Market as visitors arrive at Nelia Hyatt's garage for an evening of mountain music and dance.

It's been a weekly institution for more than 40 years.

"I've been coming since the early '60s," said Earl Taylor of Candler. "It's a good place to go and have music and food, a lot of fun. Lots of good musicians come here."

And Rex Penley, 73, has been coming since it started: "I come to see all my good friends."

The jam session is informal with the most experienced pickers taking the lead in the center and beginners sitting behind them. Chairs line the walls for the listeners. And in the summer, the garage doors are open to handle the overflow crowd of tourists, guests and regulars who come to watch.

Dancers fill the small floor, including 89-year-old Jennie Robinson, "Sweet Jennie Lee to my friends," she said.

At the center of it all is Nelia Hyatt, now 83. She was born Bertha Cornelia, but her name was shortened to Nelia, and she's now called Nina by her grandchildren. To everyone else, she's simply Mrs. Hyatt. She married Wayne Hyatt in 1935 in Jackson County and they moved to Asheville in 1945. They were both from musical families and her husband was a musician and amateur instrument maker.

Their living room became the site of a regular pickin' session, and in the summers they moved the show under the carport. When Wayne Hyatt retired in 1972, he turned the carport into a building and the session was born. Wayne Hyatt died years ago, but the music lives on.

Every Thursday night, Mrs. Hyatt fills the coffee pot and puts out home baked delicacies.

"I just enjoy everybody and love when the young people come to play," she said. Regulars bring food like a covered dish supper. Her granddaughter, Karen Howard, helps carry on the tradition.

MUSICWATCH

"It's like a gift that was given to me," she said, while sitting outside on the picnic table. "It was the gift of music and it's from the heart."

For fiddler Roger Howell, "what it means is in the pictures on the walls." One wall is plastered with photos of musicians and dancers who have attended.

Another has pictures and tributes to musicians who have passed on. Press clippings and awards fill another. A 1972 clipping from the Asheville Citizen-Times chronicles Wayne Hyatt's 32 years as a conductor and brakeman for the railroad. A framed article from Acoustic Guitar was a gift for Mrs. Hyatt's 82nd birthday. And in 1991, Tom Brokaw's crew taped a feature for NBC.

Almost every week, a photographer shows up. Last week, Mac Carbonell of Pennsylvania was there shooting pictures for a book on bluegrass with his vintage 1940s camera.

"People are pretty open and friendly here," he said. "It's strange to be young and new, but everyone is really nice."

None of the hoopla seems to disturb the musicians, who just keep playing or chatting. Mrs. Hyatt greets and treats them all like family. Many well-known musicians have been regulars, including Tommy Bell, the Parhams, T.C. Naves, Troy Lewis, Robert Blankenship and Grover Sutton. Some have passed on; now their children, grandchildren and students come to play. Some of the mountains' best pickers grew up playing here and still visit, like Marc Pruett and Bryan Sutton who both won a Grammy while working with Ricky Skaggs.

The music and participants are different every week. Bluegrass and old-time mountain music are the standard, but the sounds change with the players.

Family friend Lee Dansby describes the Thursday sessions as a community. "Everyone has great respect for Mrs. Hyatt and loves and takes care of her," she said. "There are no rules except no alcohol. And there is just such a great diversity in the type of people. It's like Sunday dinner at Grandma's, but it's Thursday night at Mrs. Hyatt's."

This guy wants to sell a movie

So he's headed to Utah

By Paul Clark

ASHEVILLE — On Nov. 8, the night the awards were given at the Asheville Film Festival, Jerry Csiesnewski stood with Rod Murphy and Scott Morgan, the creators of the documentary in which he starred, hoping for a win.

Increasingly agitated, he sat down, stood up and sat down again at his table near the back of the vast hangar that Blue Ridge Motion Pictures made available for the awards ceremony. Jerry, a street character, had ridden 16 hours from Southbridge, Mass., where "Greater Southbridge" had been shot.

When the award for best documentary went to "Live and Let Go — An American Death," Jerry, loud by nature, told anyone within earshot that the judges had made a big mistake. Murphy, director of the film, leaned in to tell him not to take it personally. It's just a competition, Murphy said.

So is TromaDance, set for Sunday through Wednesday. But it has an edgier feel that Murphy thinks might bring him good luck in his attempts to sell the film. This morning, Murphy and his wife are flying to Park City, Utah, to show it at TromaDance, sandwiched inside the dates of that other festival in Park City, the Sundance Film Festival.

Photos by Ken Abbott/SPECIAL TO THE CITIZEN-TIMES

Fresh off "Greater Southbridge," Rod Murphy's production company, 6:14 Productions, is working on a documentary of the Thursday night old-time music sessions at Nelia Hyatt's house on Brevard Road.

Everyone who's anyone in film will be in Park City. The plane, hotel, car rental — it's going to cost about $2,000, money the Murphys, parents of two young children, can't afford. But it's money they can't afford not to spend.

"It's a risk we've been shooting for," Murphy said. He's been staying up late getting ready for the festival. He hopes to sleep on the plane.

TromaDance, founded by Lloyd Kaufmann (creator of the "Toxic Avenger" movies) like all film festivals, gives producers a chance to screen their work and maybe sell it to a studio or distribution company.

Murphy and Morgan, whose production company is called 6:14 Productions, have meetings set up with The Sundance Channel, the Independent Film Channel,

Sony Picture Classics, Alliance International Pictures and Troma, TromaDance's own distribution company. They have invites to a couple of swanky, celeb-filled parties and are hoping to get a couple of quasi-celebrity friends/fans to watch their movie.

"Greater Southbridge" won 11 awards at film festivals last year, and Murphy is feeling good. He's got another project in the works: for seven months, 6:14 Productions has been filming at Nelia Hyatt's house on Brevard Road. For decades, old-time and bluegrass musicians have been coming to the weekly jams in a small building beside Hyatt's house. People bring food and dance and clog.

"It's like this lost thing," Murphy said. "These people come out of the hills for 50-something years now, and they bring their banjos and mandolins. And everybody's welcome. Coming from the north, something like that I've never experienced."

"The music has touched and shaped many lives, but probably can't go on forever," said Ken Abbott, producer of the project. "Perhaps this is why there is a touch of fierceness in the faces and voices of those we've interviewed."

Ken Abbott/SPECIAL TO THE CITIZEN-TIMES

Rod Murphy is intrigued by the unique. He tries to capture that on film. Here's a shot from Nelia Hyatt's old-time music night.

People there are passionate about Hyatt and the music they make. Passion is what drives Murphy to people like Jerry. It's why he kinda digs that Jerry gets upset when his film doesn't win an award. He likes being around him.

"We're trying to get him out there (to) TromaDance, but he doesn't fly," Murphy said. "We got him a ticket for Amtrak, takes 53 hours from Southbridge. He might. You never know until he gets on the train.

"There's a six-hour layover in Chicago that we're kind of worried about. Seems like it could be whole 'nother movie, Jerry on a train going across America."

Narrative mountain experience

New print and audio offerings bring genre to audiences

Rob Neufeld

People seek out Western North Carolina and East Tennessee to learn the art of storytelling, what with the legacy of the Hicks family of Watauga County, the Jonesborough Storytelling Festival and such acclaimed storytelling novelists as Fred Chappell. Now, regional publishers are coming up with print and audio narratives aplenty.

Land of Sky Books has published "Of Truth and Freedom: Experiences of a Mountain Lawyer" by Herbert Hyde, North Carolina's legendary legislator and orator. August House is producing a compact disk and tape cassette series of recordings titled, "American Storytelling," featuring such favorites as Haywood County author and storyteller Donald Davis.

Donald Davis

Herbert Hyde

Hyde's book is a little different from his first two, "Genuine Hyde" and "My Home Is in the Smoky Mountains," in that he tells tales from the courtroom rather than his childhood. Much of the time, Hyde is presenting the facts of various cases, including those pertaining to local murders. Yet, his storytelling voice manages to break through often enough, as in this opening line: "Part of my growing up in Swain County was in the neighborhood of a boy I called Little David."

Little David, as it turns out, had gone to the same school as Herbert Hyde, and had bullied him there. Now, Hyde, the lawyer, gets a call from Little David's father.

My boy's in jail, the father says, for shooting out the windows and doors of a couple who'd informed on Little David's bootlegging activity. Hyde secures a suspended sentence for his former nemesis, but Little David is a mean cuss. Sometime later, when his cousins tease him about driving without a license, Little David follows them to their home and makes his preacher uncle curse them at gunpoint.

This time, Little David serves time, but not for long, for he escapes from a work gang and hides out for three years. Then, something happens — some variety of truth and freedom, I suppose — for Little David's father calls Hyde again to say that his son wants to turn himself in. Hyde is directed to drive down the road that goes to nowhere on the north side of Lake Fontana and pick Little David up. He does, Little David completes his sentence, and Hyde concludes, "I have never heard of his having any more trouble with the law."

Donald Davis' stories are as much a part of a community web as Hyde's. Like Hyde, his tales have morals, but they concern themselves more with the power and immortality of a story-borne heritage than in the vindication of justice.

"Father Was a Wise Old Man" begins with an intriguing concept. Davis' father, who had downplayed his son's interest in the Smithsonian by saying things like, "Why do you need to go there, you've never been, and if you've been, why do you need to go back," accompanies his two sons to the Museum of American History a couple of decades later. They spend the whole day there, for as Father sees a Studebaker farm wagon, a hypodermic needle and a wash pot, his stories unfold.

Once, as a child, Davis had complained to his mother about how his father was not young and frisky like his classmates' fathers; he was old, in his 50s. Mrs. Davis tells him, he's not an old man, he's a wise old man; and when Mr. Davis uses a story rather than a spanking to discipline his sons after they tried smoking in the barn, Donald muses, "I'm glad I've got a wise old dad because he knows that good stories teach kids a lot better than hide tanning."

"Father Was a Wise Old Man" by Donald Davis (compact disk and cassette recording, August House Audio, 2001), is part of the publisher's American Storytelling series, which also includes "That's What Mamas Do" by Donald Davis and Kathryn Tucker Windham's two-volume recording, "What Makes Us Southerners."

"Of Truth and Freedom: Experiences of a Mountain Lawyer" is by Herbert Hyde (Land of Sky Books, Alexander, N.C., 2001).

Davis' story about the "truth chicken" is a classic. After the Smithsonian's colonial wash pot elicits his father's story about his grandfather's ruse, Davis winds up with a wry punch line: "Maybe the Smithsonian even had a truth chicken stuffed somewhere."

"That's What Mamas Do," Davis' other new recording, includes a segment called, "The Power of Stories." The author's mother had been a teacher in Hazelwood, and his best friend's father a principal. Davis and his friend, Larry Leatherwood, bonded because neither had a real name. They were always known as Mrs. Davis' little boy and Mr. Leatherwood's boy. At Davis' mother's funeral in 1998, Donald and Larry, who served as a pallbearer, recounted old times. The past was not gone, they realized.

"If you're weird enough that people talk about you when you're gone," Davis says, "then the power of stories ... can keep you alive forever."

Obituary

Herbert Lee Hyde, 80, of 30 Hartshorn Dr., Asheville, went to be with his Lord, Sunday, October 15, 2006 at the John F. Keever Solace Center.

Mr. Hyde was born on December 12, 1925 to the late Ervin and Alice Medlin Hyde. He was also preceded in death by his brothers, Walter S. Hyde and Barnell D. Hyde, and sisters, Helen and Mary Alice Hyde.

Mr. Hyde joined the US Navy in 1941 and served in the Pacific with Naval Intelligence. In 1947, he enrolled at the University of Tennessee at Knoxville. Later that year, he entered Western Carolina University where he served as president of the student body and editor of the college newspaper. After graduating from Western Carolina University in 1951, Herbert became the first person from North Carolina to receive the â€œRoot Tildenâ€ scholarship to New York University Law School. He graduated from NYU in 1954.

He began his law practice in Asheville with the law firm of Harkins, Van Winkle, Walton, Starnes and Hyde, where he served for 25 years. He has been in sole practice for the past 27 years.

Mr. Hyde was elected to the NC State Senate and served from 1964 through 1966 and 1991 through 1995. He also served the NC House from 1972 through 1976, during which time he was instrumental in enacting legislation that has affected womenâ€(TM)s rights, the environment, as well as education.

He was a devoted spokesman for mountain people and was dedicated to improving life and safety for all people of North Carolina.

He is survived by his wife of 57 years, Kathryn â€œKittyâ€ Long Hyde; daughters, Deborah Hyde Cannon and husband Sam; Dale Lynn Wheeler and husband Steve, Dr. Karen Hyde Weissman and husband Dr. Bill Danaher, and Jane Hyde Kordish and husband Capt. Adam Kordish; sons, Benjamin W. Hyde and William Garrett Hyde; sisters, Irene Crisp and husband Clinton J., and Elizabeth Sue Hyde; brothers, Carroll W. Hyde, and Luke D. Hyde and wife Leila Tevett; and grandchildren, Charles Herbert Hyde Cannon, Leonard Vance Hyde Cannon, David Hunter Hamerick, Amanda Lucy Hamerick, and Joseph Garrett Weissman, along with several nieces and nephews.

In 1979, Governor Jim Hunt named him Secretary of Crime Control and Public Safety. His services to the Democratic Party has been life-long. He served as Chairman for Precinct #45, Buncombe County Democratic Party, 11th Congressional District and NC State Party. He was named one of fifty of the most influential citizens in WNC in the 20th Century by the Asheville Citizen-Times. He was listed in Whoâ€(TM)s Who in the South and Southwest, Whoâ€(TM)s Who in American Trail Lawyers, Whoâ€(TM)s Who in America and Whoâ€(TM)s Who in the World. Herbert was inducted into the American Colege of Trial Lawyers in September, 1995.

As author of the following books, Genuine Hyde, My Home is in the Smoky Mountains, Of Truth and Freedom, Living and Learning Just Natural, and Mountain Speaking, he was able to reflect his roots. He also wrote â€œThe Cold Icey Waters of Swainâ€ and could sing it on request, as well as his poem â€œOdd Stand-Off, Head or Tails." Herbert and Kitty have served for almost a half a century as members of Calvary Baptist Church.

Herbert chaired many church committees and served as deacon several terms. He loved his church family very much.

As a mountain man who was widely loved and respected, who would often quote Will Rogers, Mark Twain, and William Shakespeare, and who loved his Lord very much, his influence will long be remembered.

A memorial service will be held at 1:00 p.m. Saturday at Calvary Baptist Church with the Rev. Dr. Buddy Corbin officiating.

Contributions may be made to Calvary Baptist Church, 531 Haywood Road, Asheville, NC 28806.

The Police Review

VOLUME 6 MARCH, 1927 NUMBER 3

GEORGE W. INGLE
Patrolman
ASHEVILLE, NORTH CAROLINA

The conception some men have of their job is as small as the word itself.

To entirely too many the word is nothing more than a very short word in the English language.

What it implies takes as little part in a man's thinking as the word takes space on a page.

But not so with men of George W. Ingle's type.

Across the pages of his life the word JOB is written LARGE.

He says: "If you want to make police work attractive, you must be on the JOB".

"If you want to help the work more efficient, you must be on the Job."

The word doesn't appear small to him, no matter from which angle he approaches it.

And he doesn't wear glasses to magnify either, he just gets this idea from a large sense of duty.

Officer Ingle is what we would term a large scale officer.

Five feet nine and three-fourths inches in height and 225 pounds in weight.

On February 25, 1885, he was born as he puts it in Buncombe County, so again you see he claims thing on a big scale, that is he claims the County and the County is quite proud to claim him.

At first working as a shipping clerk and coming with the department 8 years ago.

Since he likes his present task and is so much in love with that little-big word DUTY we imagine he is anchored for good and all.

His residence is No. 104 Swannonoa Avenue.

HUBERT INGLE IS KILLED BY TRAIN

West Asheville Youth To Be Buried This Afternoon

The body of Hubert C. Ingle, 20, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Ingle, of Lamb avenue, West Asheville, who was fatally injured when struck by a train on the Knoxville railroad yards at 1 o'clock yesterday morning, arrived at the Clayton and Hyer funeral home on Haywood road late last night.

According to a dispatch to The Citizen from Knoxville last night, the young man was struck by the train as he sat on the railroad track asleep. Accompanied by his brother, whose name had not been learned, Ingle was walking down the railroad when he complained of being tired and sleepy, the message stated. Sitting down on the rack he is said to have gone to sleep while his brother walked on down the railroad. A few minutes later a train passed and the brother returned to search for Hubert, finding his mangled body lying across the ties. He died in a hospital a few minutes later.

An investigation by Knoxville officers has failed to reveal why the two boys were there and why they were on the railroad tracks. It was reported in West Asheville last night that one or both of them had been riding on a freight train.

Funeral service will be conducted from the home this afternoon at 4 o'clock, the Rev. Mr. Phipps, pastor of Pine Grove Baptist church, officiating. Interment will be in Green Hill cemetery.

Surviving are the parents and eight brothers and sisters: Mrs. M. D. Hayes, Mrs. L. P. Meadows, Arthur Cline, Roy, Hillary, Drayton and Walter Ingle.

Ingram racing items stolen

Grandson charged in the theft case

By Sabian Warren
SWARREN@CITIZEN-TIMES.COM

CANDLER — Legendary race car driver Jack Ingram accumulated his share of mementos from a stellar racing career — from rings in honor of championships to medallions awarded by a sponsor.

That made the theft of $5,000 worth of items like those saddening and the phone call offering their return for a price infuriating, Ingram said.

Jackson Layne Ingram

Jack Ingram

Deepening the pain was the arrest Thursday of his 25-year-old grandson in connection to the case.

Buncombe County Sheriff's investigators charged Jackson Layne Ingram with breaking and entering and larceny, according to warrants at the Buncombe magistrate's office.

Sheriff's office Lt. Randy Sorrells confirmed the investigation but gave little information about the case.

Items stolen from Ingram's Candler home include a diamond ring he was awarded by NASCAR for winning the 1982 Busch Series championship. His wife's 1957 Reynolds High School class ring also was taken.

Someone also took an assortment of gold and diamond jewelry — a 1985 championship ring presented to him by his racing sponsor, a Skoal Bandit medallion and Elgin watch.

"It's devastating," he said. "You can't just go out and buy another ring like that. And who would want it if it was reproduced?"

"I don't know how you could put a price on it," he said.

Ingram, 74, declined to discuss his grandson and said he has not talked with him since the arrest.

Investigators believe the jewelry was taken on the night of June 29, though Ingram and his wife Aline didn't notice the theft immediately.

The couple had gone out to dinner that night and were away from home about an hour and a half, Ingram said.

Several days later, a man Ingram did not know called him and said he had the jewelry, proposing that Ingram pay him $1,000 for the return of the items.

"I told him I wasn't going to do it," Ingram said.

He said sheriff's detectives developed Jackson Ingram as a suspect after canvassing the neighborhood.

"They talked with the neighbors about anybody they might have seen," he said. "They said he (Jackson) was there."

According to the N.C. Department of Corrections, Jackson Ingram has prior convictions dating to 2005 that include obtaining property by false pretense, breaking and entering, larceny, drug possession, hit and run and DWI.

He served more than a year in state prison before his release last September following a conviction for obtaining property by false pretense.

But Ingram said he still has affection for Jackson.

"I always will," he said. "He's our grandson."

Jackson Ingram, of Justice Ridge Road, Candler, was being held Thursday at the Buncombe County Detention Center in lieu of $5,000 bond.

Jack Ingram was among 2011 nominees to the NASCAR Hall of Fame.

An Asheville native who still operates his race shop off Brevard Road, he won three straight championships (1972-74) in the Busch Series Grand National Division and a fourth when the division was reorganized into the NASCAR Busch Series in 1982. He won his fifth championship in 1985 and won 31 Busch races.

The NASCAR Hall opened last year in Charlotte, and Ingram built a car that is on display there.

NASCAR Hall of Fame inductee Jack Ingram at a glance

Born: Dec. 28, 1931, Asheville.

Family: Wife Aline; daughters Cynthia, Ingrid; son Robbie (deceased).

Career highlights: Competing in up to 60 NASCAR Late Model Sportsman races per season from Maine to Florida, Ingram won three straight series championships, 1972-74. ... He did this while maintaining his cars out of an Asheville shop, often towing them to and from tracks himself. ... His seemingly tireless work and determination brought a nickname, "Iron Man," which endures to this day. ... Ingram didn't slow down when NASCAR upgraded the division in 1982 to a series sponsored by Budweiser. He again took the circuit's season-long championship and was named the series' most popular driver. ... Stout and bulldog-tough, Ingram added another title in 1985 for five overall. ... Ingram obtained his first national sponsorship in 1984 when U.S. Tobacco began backing his team through its Skoal brand. He continued with the company until calling it a career late in 1991. ... At the time of his retirement Ingram held the record for Busch Series victories with 31. He still ranks fifth in wins in what is now the Nationwide Series. ... Counting Late Model triumphs, Ingram, who was especially strong on the short tracks, won 286 races. ... He is the first driver from the Late Model Division/Busch Series to be inducted into the NASCAR Hall of Fame.

Tom Higgins' reflections

Hall of Fame voter and former Observer motorsports writer Tom Higgins remembers Jack Ingram:

I first saw him: On Sept. 10, 1965, at Hickory Speedway, then a dirt track, in the Buddy Shuman Memorial 250, a race for what's now Sprint Cup Series cars.

My favorite memory of him: Ingram's absolute, unabashed pride when Skoal announced during a news conference at Atlanta Motor Speedway in 1984 that it would begin sponsoring his team. It was a rare moment – a 53-year-old driver winning a major sponsor.

Most memorable quote: It wasn't a quote at all, but a reaction.

Up until '84, when Skoal brought its backing and a green/white paint scheme to Ingram's No. 11 cars, he had driven machines that were a drab brown.

Rumor had it that Ingram used that color because gallons of brown paint had been given him by Asheville's maintenance department, which was discontinuing its use.

At the end of the joyous Ingram/Skoal news conference in Atlanta, I asked, "Jack, what are you going to do with all that ugly ol' brown paint?" The press box erupted in laughter.

Stunned, Ingram was speechless for several seconds before shaking his head and breaking into a grin. He departed without answering.

ıck Ingram

An old Woody Guthrie song that should have been Jack Ingram's theme:

I been havin' some hard travelin'

I thought you knowed

I been havin' some hard travelin'

Way down the road ...

When NASCAR's original Iron Man arrived at Richmond International Raceway last September, he could hardly believe the great deal he'd gotten from NASCAR just to show up and talk about being voted into the 2014 induction class of the Hall of Fame.

"They paid for my gas and picked up our motel bill," he said.

[+] Enlarge

*ISC Images & Archives via Getty Images*Jack Ingram, who once ran 86 races in a single season, was NASCAR's original Iron Man.

That, in Ingram's tough old frame of reference, was living pretty high on the hog.

He had come up through, and triumphed in, the hardest-traveling series NASCAR ever sanctioned.

Out of the mountain town of Asheville, N.C., he went way down the road, running 86 races in a single season -- ometimes three and four times a week in as many different states," as the official HOF news release about him points out -- to win the 1972 championship in a series long gone, long since remodeled, fancied up with high-dollar sponsorships and simplified schedules, but still revered by those who remember it as perhaps the purest racing, in spirit, NASCAR has ever produced.

Late Model Sportsman.

Those three words thunder, echo down the decades to the knowing, right through the later commercial names, Busch and now the Nationwide Series.

The hard traveling kept on and on, as he three-peated, adding the Late Model Sportsman championships of '73 and '74. When, in 1982, NASCAR announced the highfalutin Busch Series with a schedule of only 29 races, Ingram took what for him was a couple of relative cakewalks, to the Busch titles of '82 and '85.

That makes five in the same series with the different names. Or is it really the same? Hardly.

Consider the modern-day Nationwide team: more crewmen than can get out of one another's way, well-to-do ownership, millions in sponsorship.

On Ingram's team in the hard-traveling days:

Driver -- Jack Ingram.

Crew chief -- Jack Ingram.

Car owner -- Jack Ingram.

Engine tuner -- Jack Ingram.

Chassis man -- Jack Ingram.

Chief truck driver, welder, sheet-metal fabricator -- Jack Ingram.

"Chief bottle washer," as the late, savvy NASCAR vice president Jim Hunter once put it -- Jack Ingram.

Eighty-six races. One season.

That's why he was the first in NASCAR to be called Iron Man.

Consider the modern-day gratitude expressed from Victory Lane to "all the guys back at the shop."

Hell, he was the shop, on the road, all the time, always traveling hard, always moving tirelessly around the pits and infields, often without the shelter of garages at the little tracks, working and driving in those high-top brogan work shoes of his.

Blessed are the pure in spirit, for they will come no more to NASCAR, and there wouldn't be room for them if they did.

But at least when Ingram, at age 82, comes around nowadays, they pay for his gas and pick up his motel bill.

To him, that's plenty.

ASHEVILLE – The most striking feature of Jack Ingram's trophy room — which houses hundreds of photos, plaques, silver bowls and other memorabilia from 60-plus years in auto racing — is the floor.

A perfect pattern of alternating black and white tiles are laid to resemble a checkered flag.

Not surprisingly, Ingram looks as comfortable in that basement room of his home in Asheville as he did in the winner's circle, a place he visited more than 300 times all over the country, enough to earn inclusion in the discussion about the best stock-car drivers and car builders in history.

On Wednesday night in Charlotte, Ingram, 77, will get the ultimate winner's flag — induction into the NASCAR Hall of Fame.

"I can't think of a better way to cap a career," said Ingram, standing on his checkered-flag floor and surrounded by reminders that he habitually beat every driver in the field when he took to the track.

"As far as I'm concerned, it's the greatest honor in racing."

"He accomplished a lot, and he did it his way, building his cars from scratch, and he deserves to be in there," said Aline, his wife of 56 years.

Hooked on the sport as a youngster, a rare maverick who built, set up and then raced his own cars and was an independent cuss from the first to his last day of racing, Ingram won track championships, local and national points races and titles, about everything that could be claimed by driving in circles.

His love so pure and his pursuit so relentless, he earned and personified the nickname "Iron Man."

A typical race schedule?

"Labor Day weekend, 1973," Ingram recalls.

"Friday night in Columbia, S.C., I ran third in a 250-lap (race). Saturday in Colburn, Va., I won a 300-lap race, Sunday I won a 300-lap race in Maryville, Tenn. Monday I finished fifth in a 600-lap race in St. Paul, Minn.

"Jumped on a plane, flew to Nashville, Tenn., got there with the motors running to start the race, put my driving suit on in the cab, jumped in the car and finished third in a 200-lap race Monday night.

"That weekend wore me out."

But he kept driving, kept winning, and when he got the call that NASCAR would include him in its shrine to the best in the sport, Jack Ingram cried.

Born to run

As a youngster growing up in Avery's Creek, it was always about cars.

"We would sit along the highway and when a car would come up the road, I could tell you the make and model before it even got there," Ingram said.

"We would walk along Long Shoals Road, and I started seeing these posters about racing at Asheville-Weaverville Speedway. I decided to go check it out."

Ingram was about to find true love.

"I went there in 1952, saw a race, and I was hooked," Ingram said from the small office he maintains at his racing shop off Brevard Road.

"I've been around racing ever since."

For the next 10 years Ingram volunteered his services at the garage and racetrack, learning how to build and set up fast cars.

He took his fiance to the Friday night races at McCormick Field.

"A week before we were married, he took me to a race," said Aline, who raised their three children and handled the books for her husband's racing team and garage.

"I thought it was just awful, all those wrecks. But it's what he loved, what he wanted to do, and I supported him."

While he was working on cars for other people, Ingram was employed as a pipe fitter and welder, putting in a lot of overtime to save money for his dream.

"I finally made enough money to where I could take care of my family, and I had enough left over to start racing," he said.

First place, and fast

Once he started, Ingram was a quick study.

"I started racing at Asheville Speedway in 1963," he said. "A year later, I started winning races. Two years later, I won my first NASCAR track championship (at Harris Speedway in Rutherfordton)."

From 1965-80, Ingram ran 959 races in the Late Model Sportsman Series, and won 286 (29 percent). He averaged 60 starts and 17 wins per season during his best years, claimed 12 track championships at six different venues, including Asheville, Hickory and tracks in Tennessee and Virginia.

Racing in the summers and working in the winters for several years, Ingram had enough success on the track that he quit working his other job in 1971 and went racing full-time.

The results included three straight NASCAR national championships (1972-74), and then Ingram figured out a way to make the sport more profitable — as a hired gun.

"Promoters at these tracks would have these local drivers winning every week, because nobody could beat them," he said with a grin of remembrance of past glory days.

"So they hired me to come in and beat them. They would pay big money, more than I was making winning those national championships. When a promoter needed someone to come in and win a race, they called me."

"He's a good fellow, good driver, good builder of cars," said his friend, former Winston Cup driver Harry Gant.

"Jack would run anywhere, anytime, and he would usually win.

"He's the one who showed me you could race full-time, and I quit building houses and went racing after talking with him a lot about it."

And in his mid-40s, at an age when many drivers are scaling back, Ingram forged ahead into the world of Busch Series racing.

He ran 275 races in eight years and from age 45 to 50, Ingram won 31 times and finished in the top 10 59 percent of the time, winning national points championships in 1982 and '85.

Ingram set a record for Busch victories that has since been broken, but in his mind the numbers he posted at that stage of his career still stand.

"Mark Martin (who passed Ingram's total of 31 Busch wins) said one time that he didn't break my record in that age (span)," said Ingram, very proud of all he accomplished.

Off the track

Ingram won a combined 317 races in more than 1,200 starts, at 28 different tracks in eight states, including at the NASCAR mecca — Daytona, the victory he is most proud of.

Also a member of the WNC, National Motorsports Press Association and International Motorsports' halls of fame, Ingram retired from full-time driving more than 20 years ago, the Iron Man finally perhaps a touch of rust.

But he remained until in his 70s a builder of cars that won races and a mentor to younger drivers and others in the field.

"I didn't have any hobbies, didn't play golf, fishing, nothing," Ingram said.

"All I was concerned about was how to make that race car go faster. That was my whole life, and I loved it.

"I made a good living, and I did it the way I wanted to."

"I guess I raced him for 12 years or more, and we never had a problem," said Gant. "He beat me, I beat him, and we raced hard.

"Of all the cars I ever drove, the best I ever sat in was Jack's cars."

"He could do it all," said Hall of Fame driver David Pearson. "Drive, build the car, set it up. When I drove Jack's cars, I don't know that I ever had to change anything once he set it up.

"He was that good."

ROBERT ERWIN'S CAR is nearing completion at long last as the photograph above proves. After professional makers of chairs and carts suitable for cripples had turned down the job, the task of making a "custom-built" vehicle for the little Negro cripple, who with his faithful dog is a familiar sight on the city's streets, was undertaken by W. M. Israel Jr., 76 Tampa Avenue. Working with the committee composed of Pres Bagwell, W. M. Morehead, C. R. Sumner and himself, Israel has done all the work in his spare time. Funds donated in response to a Citizen news story were used for the purchase of materials including a motor. The total cost of approximately $170 is slightly more than the amount raised for the purpose. Only a few more minor items including a paint job are needed to finish the car. It is expected to be ready for use within a short time. Israel is shown in the car.

NICE STRING—As nice a string of largemouth bass as has been caught this spring in Fontana Lake was taken Wednesday by Abe Anders (left) of Woodfin and Bob Jarvis of West Asheville. They made the haul near Tuckaseigee Boat Rock using Whopper Stoppers. Largest fish ran 6 to 7 pounds and the eight on the lower string weighed 40 pounds, an average of 5 pounds. Jarvis said he missed the first five fish which struck at his plug, but patience paid off in the end.

'What My Religion Means To Me'

Religion Brings Peace, Joy And Desire To Help Others

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The author of today's article in this series is a member of the Church of God, 109 State Street. Secretary of the credit department of the Farmers' Federation, she is very active in church work. Positions held include Sunday School teacher, president of Young People's Endeavor, superintendent of the home extension department, and director of Children's Church. She has written and directed several religious plays.

By Miss Esther Jenkins

What my religion means to me can be summarized in one Scripture found in John 10:10b, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly". My religion means that I have an abundant life which consists of many blessings from God.

I know that Christ made the sacrifice for my sins at Calvary and that I am now justified and under no condemnation, and by the righteousness of Christ, in whom I dwell, I can make my wants and petitions known to God who has almighty power.

I am constantly aware of the love of God around about me. Not only do I find His love in spiritual blessings but in material things as well. By accepting God's gift of love, Jesus Christ, as my own personal Saviour and Redeemer, I became a Child of God. Not through any goodness or holiness on my own part, but by the grace of God, I became an heir and joint heir with Christ, my elder Brother. It is sweet indeed to have such fellowship with the Divine and to live daily in the very light of Heaven, and to share my sorrow and my happiness, my joy or my heartbreak with such a wonderful understanding Saviour as Jesus Christ.

When Jesus ascended to Heaven, He said, "I will send you another Comforter"—and I rejoice today that the Comforter which is the Holy Spirit, abides in my heart. Not only is He a comforter, but He is my teacher and my guide. The Holy Spirit makes the Word of God precious to me by helping me to understand the real truths of Its wonderful messages and giving me a new revelation as to Its meaning.

My religion, or my association with Jesus and the Holy Spirit, gives me a satisfaction and contentment in life. I have ambitions and dreams—perhaps some I will attain and others I will not—but whether I succeed or fail, I always have that deep conviction that everything will work out for the best because I belong to Christ and what concerns me, concerns Him too.

MISS ESTHER JENKINS

There is also the peace and joy that come from really knowing Jesus as my friend. In the very midst of confusion, troubles and general turmoil, I am humbly thankful for the peace that I have found by trusting in the Lord. Jesus said, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." I have the peace of God that passeth all understanding and joy that is unspeakable and full of glory. I can truly say that I have experienced times in my Christian life that my cup of joy was full and running over—and the joy of heaven is indeed unspeakable.

My religion to me is a challenge. There is the challenge to do something—to make this a better place because I have lived here for a little while. It is my desire to be a human instrument in the hands of a powerful God, completely surrendered to Him so those about me might be blessed and made to realize that this is not such a cruel, cold world after all. It takes courage to live for the Lord, but Christ conquered Satan at Calvary and he is now a defeated foe and cannot overcome me as long as I am in Christ.

I have a present abundant life including justification, a personal Saviour and friend, a Comforter, guide and teacher, love, joy, peace, satisfaction and contentment—all of which adds up to happiness now and the hope of Heaven where I shall have life eternal. My religion and all it means, makes me glad to be alive and not afraid of death.

WNC native found success, friends in baseball

James Jenkins also used game to teach others

The 1952 Indianapolis Clowns sit for a team photo. James Jenkins was the starting center fielder for the team.

LENOIR — James Jenkins Sr., my dad, was a local sports hero and mentor to many youths in Asheville. Our household had five children, four of whom were boys, and we always knew we could depend upon our dad to shoot some hoops with us, hit fly balls to us and to show us, by example, how to be men.

The interesting thing is that in our community, all the other kids could depend upon him for these things as well.

Son Fisher, as he was known growing up in West Asheville, began his love of sports at an early age. His grandfather, Joe, played a key role in developing his love for sports and also the cultivation of his ability to use sports to teach life skills. My father enjoyed playing stickball and tag football as a child. He loved to read and was a good student.

As an athlete at Stephens-Lee High School, Dad excelled as a basketball guard and a football running back. His football skills were compared favorably to another standout Asheville rusher, Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice. Dad once rushed for six touchdowns in one game.

He would leave school, at the age of 15, to go to fight for his country during World War II. He would later tell me that he, like many young men of his time, took the Japanese attack on America personally. After the war, he returned to Asheville to finish high school. Dad would continue his sports career and earn a football scholarship to Morris Brown College in Atlanta.

James Jenkins strikes a pose in his Indianapolis Clowns uniform. A West Asheville native, Jenkins passed away on March 28, 2001, in Cincinnati.

West Asheville native James Jenkins and his wife, Roberta, raised five children. Jenkins and teammate Hank Aaron helped take the Indianapolis Clowns to the 1952 Negro League Championship.

My father would leave college to marry his high school sweetheart, Roberta Workman, and to pursue the sport that he loved most — baseball.

He would make the Indianapolis Clowns baseball team of the Negro League. He was their starting center fielder. He would become friend, mentor and roommate to a young right fielder on the team named Hank Aaron. In 1952, they would lead The Clowns to the Negro League Championship.

Mr. Aaron and my Dad would remain friends until my father's death in 2001. Dad would call his friend when he was in Atlanta and they'd usually go to watch the Braves play.

BASEBALL: Jenkins stayed friends with Hank Aaron throughout life

Dad attended Mr. Aaron's daughter's wedding and also Mr. Aaron's second wedding.

What I remember most about my Dad and Mr. Aaron's friendship occurred when Dad was in a coma at a local hospital. He had had a noncancerous brain tumor removed that would leave him comatose for seven months.

Mr. Aaron called Dad's room and asked me to put the phone to his ear. He took 20 minutes of his valuable time talking to my dad. While Dad would say, upon recovery, that he didn't remember the conversation, I will always be grateful for Mr. Aaron's genuine concern.

I think Dad loved baseball because lifelong friendships were often the result of playing this game. He made many friends in baseball. Orlando Cepeda, Junior Gilliam and Satchel Paige come to mind. Another friend was a guy that Dad and the other players kidded for being so country. That friend is now better known as country singing legend Charley Pride.

Dad would go on to play for the Detroit Stars in the Negro League. He would play for the New York Giants and the Dodgers organizations, ending his career as a AAA player, one step from the majors. He would quit baseball because it was too slow to fully integrate.

Instead of being bitter with baseball, he spent his life using baseball as a tool to teach life skills.

Neighborhood groups strive to improve West Asheville

By Lynne Billings
STAFF WRITER

West Asheville residents are enthusiastic about living there but say it has its pluses and minuses like any area of the city. West Asheville includes a number of neighborhood associations that are working to preserve and enhance its attractive features.

Martha Hungerford was the first president of the West Asheville Estates Neighborhood Association, and her husband, Jimmy Hungerford, is the current president. They have lived in West Asheville for 25 years.

Several years ago, the City of Asheville was going to take down the maple trees along Vermont Avenue and give us new sidewalks," Mrs. Hungerford said. "We managed to save the trees. The trees on Vermont are absolutely beautiful."

"That's when we really started the (neighborhood) association. My husband and I have tried to keep it going," she said. The annual neighborhood block party was held Sept. 16 in front of the Hungerfords' home.

Their neighborhood association received a grant to plant new trees, and Jimmy Hungerford, and Charlie Ploss, the Hungerfords' son-in-law, have planted 15 new maple trees.

Steve Dixon/STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Gloria Johnson, president of the Burton Street Community, takes time to smell the flowers at her home on Burton Street.

"We have a Neighborhood Watch. We're friends with the police," she said, and she walks her dog in the evening and feels comfortable. In fact, people come from all over the neighborhood and other neighborhoods to walk, run, and walk dogs along Vermont Avenue.

"We have a park at the bottom of the street. We would like to have a speed bump. So far we haven't managed to get that," she said.

Gloria Johnson is president of the Burton Street Community.

"I love living on Burton Street. I've been there all my life. I wouldn't live anywhere else. The neighbors will do anything for you," Johnson said.

"Our main concern right now is the traffic on our street. Cars just speed up and down Burton Street in front of the Community Center. If a child should run out in front of one of them, it's just a tragedy," she said.

The City of Asheville Parks and Recreation Department has said that the Burton Street Community Center has been approved for a grant to re-do the center and its old playground equipment, Johnson said.

"We've been waiting for a long time to get that (playground equipment) replaced," she said.

Also, the community has requested that the streets be paved.

"That was about four or five years ago, and nothing has been done as of yet," Johnson said.

Periodically, there are problems with the selling of drugs, she said.

"We had a march on Burton Street against drugs," Johnson said. "I had a talk with our community and told them 'When you see things going on, report it, so that's what we started doing'."

Lane Reid lives and works in West Asheville. He and business partner Joey Cain own a business there, Image 420 Screen Printing at 420 Haywood Road. Reid is also president of the Falconhurst Residential Association.

Falconhurst is bordered by Louisiana Avenue, Haywood Road and Patton Avenue, three busy roads, but, "It's a great quiet neighborhood, and it's so close to everything," Reid said. He and his family have lived there for about 10 years.

"We know all of our neighbors. ... We help each other, and everyone keeps an eye on everybody else," he said.

The association will have a block party in October.

"We get a permit, block a couple of streets off, set up tables in the middle of the road, and everybody brings great food for a potluck meal," he said.

"When we moved in it was affordable," he said. West Asheville is probably still affordable and has many young people moving in, he said.

However, "There's no sidewalks. I don't think they've paved the road in our neighborhood in eight years. We have grass growing in some of the streets," he said, with a chuckle that seemed to indicate he didn't mind too much.

He doesn't mind the cruising along Patton Avenue either, Reid said, but the screeching of tires from reckless driving late at night does disturb him.

As for his business, "The rents were very reasonable when we started out," he said. The area is getting built up, with a lot of new businesses moving in.

Reid is naturally very concerned about what will happen with I-240. "The status keeps changing," he said. "I try and go to all the meetings, but it's hard to keep up," with that and business and family.

Take opportunities to learn, share views on I-26 Connector plan

This will be an important week for those in Asheville and in the region who care whether the Interstate 26 Connector has six lanes or eight. And that should be just about everyone who lives in the city, who is concerned about air quality or whoever travels the stretch of road that connects the I-26/I-40/I-240 intersection and the almost new stretch of I-26 north through Madison County to the Tennessee border.

Three meetings will be held this week on the connector, and those who hope to influence the decision about the final configuration of the road will have an opportunity to speak during at least one of them.

Asheville City Council members Brownie Newman and Holly Jones have asked that the connector be placed on council's agenda for its 5 p.m. meeting Tuesday. Council invited Department of Transportation planners to give an update on the status of the project, but DOT initially declined, according to Newman. However, state highway administrator Len Sanderson said late Friday that he would make every effort to get someone to the council meeting to provide as much up-to-date information as is available.

Council may also hear from former city traffic engineer Michael Moule and Dr. Joseph Passonneau, a nationally known transportation planner and author of "Washington Through Two Centuries: A History in Maps and Images."

The Southern Environmental Law Center, a nonprofit that works to protect the environment, retained Moule and Passonneau as consultants to review the I-26 Connector project and provide an outside opinion about whether the road should be six or eight lanes. Passonneau, Moule and other members of the public will be allowed to comment if any member of council makes a motion for council to support either six or eight lanes, according to Newman.

The state Department of Transportation has scheduled a public hearing on the connector project at 6 p.m. Wednesday in the Ferguson Auditorium at Asheville-Buncombe Technical Community College. Moule and Passonneau are expected to speak at the public hearing.

And at noon Thursday, the French Broad River Metropolitan Planning Organization will meet and is also expected to take up the I-26 connector. The MPO has already signed off on eight lanes. But that was before a new way of making traffic projections lowered the number of vehicles expected to use the road in the next 15 to 20 years. The MPO meeting is open to the public, but public comment will not be taken.

In 2002, DOT projected that by 2025, about 143,000 vehicles a day would use the stretch of road, if it is eight lanes.

CITIZEN-TIMES

Gloria Johnson who lives on Burton Street in West Asheville, stands on her back deck, which looks over a section of I-240 that will be widened as part of the I-26 Connector project. The road project could take her house.

But in July 2003, the DOT revised those numbers, saying a new traffic model calls for 99,100 vehicles a day in 2020.

The I-26 Connector dominated a community forum on transportation issues sponsored by the Citizen-Times in March. At that meeting panelist Jay Swain, DOT's division engineer for Division 13, based in Asheville, said that DOT traffic engineers and projection specialists continue to believe that eight lanes make the most sense even though the revised traffic projections indicate that six lanes would be adequate.

Another panelists, Dan Baechtold, a city of Asheville employee and coordinator of the MPO, said the number did not change the MPO Traffic Advisory Committee's decision because the number is "right on the border." At the forum, Swain said he felt the public would benefit from hearing a more detailed explanation from the planners in Raleigh and said he would try to set up such a meeting. The public hearing Wednesday is, in part, a response to that request, he said.

In March, Swain said four alternatives are still under consideration for the connector, which involves the proposed widening of 3.1 miles of four-lane Interstate-240 at a cost of $298 million.

The connector will travel through the heart of Asheville and will result in the demolition of dozens of houses and businesses in West Asheville.

DOT is expected to announce the route in 2006 and start building in 2008. The project will take four years. It will have a major impact on Asheville and the region.

Don't miss the opportunity during the upcoming week to examine the alternate routes, learn the thinking of the consultants hired by SELC and of DOT planners' regarding the project and make your own views known.

Pledge For America Given At Patriotic Social

The pledge of allegiance to the flag was led by little Miss LaVerne Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Johnson of 17 Michigan avenue and Charles Himes, who was dressed as Uncle Sam at a patriotic social given by the adult department of the Sunday school at Calvary Baptist church last night. Carl Logan, associate superintendent of the department, had charge of the program; Mrs. J. A. Bocook led games; Mrs. Don Young had charge of decorations, and Mrs. John Barnard, refreshments. Approximately 75 members of the 11 classes in the department attended. Games were the main features of entertainment. Mrs. Bocook was dressed as the patriotic figure, "Miss Columbia."

West Asheville Memories

Walter Johnson

My name is Walter Johnson. My twin brother is Wallace. We lived at 568 Haywood Rd when we were boys, this was next door to Dr. Orr's home. My Mother attended Calvary Baptist and my Father attended Trinity Methodist. We lived in between the two churches.

Dad was a barber at the George Vanderbilt Hotel and Mother worked downtown at My Shop, Lerners, as well as other department stores. My brother and I went to Aycock, Hall Fletcher and Lee Edwards. A memory of Aycock was Dusty Rhodes, a baseball player with the New York Giants visited a fireman (I think his name was Glass) at the West Asheville Fire Station. Dusty came to the school and hit some balls for us. He also broke our bat and promised to send some but never did.

Also Robert Wardlaw, the World's Tallest Man, appeared on the school ground and put a dollar bill on his forehead and gave it to anyone who could reach it. No one could. I think he was eight feet tall.

Also at Aycock, the street adjacent, black people lived on this street. When the janitor was working he would get the black kids to play ball with us.

We also had our Sand Lot ball team at Aycock and played baseball with Eugene Rankin and Vance school teams. Not official school teams but make-up.

All this was around 1930 - 1936.

We also played Roller Hockey with condensed milk cans on Baker Street next to Calvary Church. We were in scouting at Calvary Church in Troop 2. We camped on Spivey Mountain.

There was a cave we discovered over the left field fence in a field.

The Palace Theatre was closed but we could crawl in the back and we played Cops and Robbers in it.

At Beachams Curve we hiked to Rhododendron Park and crossed Hominy Creek to the Biltmore Estate. There was a haul ferry across the French Broad River to the dairy. We would ride it across and eat ice cream that they were disposing.

FORM COMMITTEES FOR DEFENSE WORK IN BUNCOMBE AREAS

Organization of community administrative bodies to coordinate war efforts of Buncombe county's rural inhabitants was completed at meetings held last night at the various county schools.

The committees, named from each of the rural school districts, will meet at the courthouse here Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock to hear Ben Douglas of Charlotte, assistant director of civilian defense in North Carolina, outline the jobs that lie ahead.

Immediate objectives of the farm families of the county will be a step up in the production of feed and food, collection of scrap materials and the repair of farm machinery. All of the programs are expected to be launched at Saturday's meeting.

Directors of the program will be C. Y. Tilson, farm agent, and his assistant, W. Riley Palmer.

In the farm machinery repair program, farmers will be reminded that the normal demands for new equipment cannot be met due to the armament effort. The shortage, they will be told, must be met by making better use of all present machinery. A complete inventory will be the first step requested.

Along with a scale of prices paid, the following items have been listed for collection in the scrap campaign that is to be launched:

Old rags (including burlap, mattresses and cotton), scrap iron free of tin and light sheet iron, and tin free of tin cans, tin cans, books and magazines, mixed paper (any kind of paper except tar), car batteries, radiators (car), aluminum (free of iron and other foreign material), heavy copper and wire, sheet copper and still copper, heavy brass (casting and heavy sheet, free of iron), zinc (jar tops, etc., old innertubes (free of puncture proof tubes), and old tires.

Price Scale Worked Out

A standard price scale for the scrap materials has been worked out by a group of Asheville dealers. The dealers, according to information released by the farm agent's office, are as follows:

Consolidated Hide and Metal company, 353 Depot street, telephone 2222; Harrison Auto Parts company, Craven street, West Asheville, telephone 36; R. Gumpert, 345 Depot street, telephone 2430; Ness Brothers and company, Reed street, Biltmore, telephone 3281, and Standard Iron and Metal company, 785 Biltmore avenue, telephone 284.

Committees selected at mass meetings at county schools last night follow:

Weaverville: Mayor J. C Erskine chairman; Mrs. John Wright and B H. Tomberlin.

Haw Creek: Vernon L. McCurry, chairman; R. B. Armstrong and Mrs J. W. Marett.

Flat Creek: Folsom Morgan, chairman; Mrs. C. J. Council and Mrs. C D. Williams. Mrs. Cecil Chandler was named alternate.

Red Oak: Robert Thompson, chairman; George Rominger and Mrs. C. M. Crowder.

Emma: Ellis C. Jones, chairman; J. P. Walsh, Mrs. C. E. Roberts, S. O. Wilde, J. G. Williams and the Rev L. B. Compton.

Oakley: R. C. Torian, A. T. Davidson, R. B. Fuller, Hall Sayles and Fred Wilkinson. The group will select its chairman. Miss Nancy Roberts was named civilian defense secretary.

West Buncombe: R. H. Lankford, chairman; Miss Maude Battle and C. C. Cook.

Grace: W. T. Morris, chairman; Hal Blackstock and Mrs. C. R. Bailey.

Woodfin: The Rev. O. L. McGinnis, chairman, W. T. Wells and Miss Margaret Worley.

Sand Hill: R. C. Crowell, chairman; Glenn Holcombe and Mrs. L. G. Ballard.

Valley Springs: E. Warrick, chairman; Mrs. E. M. Curtis and G. W. Morgan.

Candler: Howard Sparks, chairman; Mrs. Thomas S. Clark, James G. Rice, Mrs. Glenn Davis and Chester Cogburn.

Venable: W. H. Stevens, chairman; S. O. Nave and Mrs. J. O. Morrell. Alternates, Lloyd Brigman and B. H. Garland.

The mass meeting for the election of the national defense committee for the Leicester district, scheduled for last night, has been postponed until tomorrow at 7:30 p. m.

J. Marvin Glance will speak on the national defense program. The school glee club will present patriotic music under the direction of Mrs. W. E. Reeves.

CANDLER WOMAN

BETWEEN STATES

Asheville Citizen April 5/36

Mrs. Eleura Jones Gave Warning Of Approach Of Raiders

By MRS. CHARLES J. RICE

CANDLER, April 4.—The heroine of an episode of the War Between the States is Mrs. Eleura Jones, of Candler, who at the age of 14 years rode horseback through the Sandy Mush section of Buncombe county to warn the citizens of that community of the approach of Kirk's raiders.

The "Paul Revere" ride was taken by Eleura Robeson, daughter of Capt. John H. Robeson, Company H. 29th North Carolina regiment, on April 9, 1865, the very day of the surrender.

About the time of the surrender, Kirk's men were terrifying the people around Asheville by their raids in which they took whatever pleased their fancy. Lucy London Anderson, in her "North Carolina Women of the Confederacy," says: "The women of the western part of North Carolina were among the most heroic and loyal in our state, ever ready for noble work in the Confederacy. While the women of the eastern and central parts of the state were suffering every indignity and persecution at the hands of Sherman's 'Bummers,' the women further west were enduring similar treatment from General Stoneman's and Colonel Kirk's troops. There were hundreds of cases of real heroism shown. When the men of Western North Carolina joined the forces of the Confederate army, their women folks were not only left unprotected within the line of battle, or the famous march of Sherman to the sea, but were in danger of those unprincipled men who would not join either side and laid out to evade the law and lived by robbing women on whom the responsibility of providing food and clothing for their children rested."

Warned People Of Danger

Learning from a neighbor that a party of raiders had been seen approaching Sandy Mush, Capt. Robeson told his daughter to saddle Mike, a big white horse, and ride as fast as she could up the creek and warn the people in every house of the danger. Capt. Robeson had been invalided home on account of a severe attack of rheumatism which rendered him unfit for active service, but he was employed in making saltpeter from dirt taken from old smoke houses to be used in making Gunpowder for the Confederate.

Mrs. Jones insists that her ride was in no way an act of bravery, as she had always had horses at her disposal and had always ridden at a gallop wherever she fancied. However, if some of those neighbors could tell, they might give a different version.

A rather eventful childhood was that of the little girl, Eleura, for about a year later, during the Reconstruction period, the lure of the west caused the Robeson family to join a wagon train, composed of relatives and friends, and start to Texas. Mike was one of the horses drawng the Robeson wagon. They were about nine weeks making the trip. They never traveled on Sundays but always camped from Saturday night until Monday morning. The family settled on the banks of the Red River, near Gainesville. Eleura was then about 15 years of age and well remembers the Indians from the Indian Territory who came across the river and stole horses and cattle. At times the family were forced to leave their home and take refuge in the timber belt, as the Indians would never continue their attack there. Mrs. Jones remembers once, when warned of an Indian raid, her father took the youngest child on his back, she carried a rifle, and the family went to the great forest to stay until the danger was past.

Twins Killed By Indians

One night a neighbor woman was taken with her twin children and carried away by the Indians. The children were killed, but the woman managed to loosen the cords with which she was bound and, after the Indians were asleep, escaped and made her way home. The Robesons remained in the west only one year and then returned home.

Each of the grandchildren of the family has a piece of the tent cloth which was used on the trip to Texas. One of the pieces has been made into a sampler which gives a history of the trip. Mrs. Jones helped pull and cure the flax and weave the tent cloth. It is a beautifully woven piece of material.

Mrs. Jones is the granddaughter of David B. Cumming, a member of the old Holston Methodist conference, who went as a missionary with the Cherokee Indians when they left North Carolina for the Indian Territory. He lived there until his death. Her father was also a Methodist preacher of the same conference.

Observes 85th Birthday

She was married in 1872 to Russell LaFayette Jones, a prominent farmer of the Hominy Section, whose family were among the first settlers of this section. Mr. Jones died a number of years ago, but Mrs. Jones made her home for 57 years on the present site of the American Enka plant. After selling to that corporation, she moved to West Asheville where she lived until this winter. She is at present with her son, T. P. Jones, and Mrs. Jones, in Candler. She passed her 85th birthday this week.

Mrs. Jones has two brothers, Ed. Robeson, of Waynesville, and Linton Robeson, of Atlanta. She is an aunt of Dr. L. R. Akers, for many years president of Asbury college, Wilmore, Ky.

She has six living children, Miss Bertha Jones, of Asheville; Herbert, L., of Charlotte; T. P. and Linton R., of Candler; Mrs. W. W. Bryan, of Hickory; and Mrs. Alexander Copeland, of Charlotte.

87TH BIRTHDAY

Asheville Citizen 4/2/38

County's 'Paul Revere' Is Spry Despite Her Years

Mrs. Eleura J. Jones, sometimes known as Buncombe county's "Paul Revere", celebrated her 87th birthday at her home on Brevard road yesterday. Five of her six children were with her at a birthday luncheon. A sixth was unable to come to Asheville for the occasion.

Spry despite her years, Mrs. Jones leads an active life. She was born in this county, the daughter of Capt. and Mrs. John H. Robeson.

It was on April 9, 1865, the day that Lee surrendered to Grant, that Mrs. Jones took her "Paul Revere" ride. At that time, residents of Western North Carolina, most of them women, children or old men, were being harrassed by raiders. A group under Colonel Kirk had been making the rounds of this section, living off the country and taking what it wanted.

Mrs. Jones (then Miss Robeson) was living with her father in Sandy Mush when news came that Kirk was about to make a raid. Her father, incapacitated by rheumatism, was unable to assist, so she saddled a horse and galloped up and down the valley, warning all that Kirk was on his way. Today, she discounts the heroic act, saying she was accustomed to gallop wherever she went.

When a young girl, Mrs. Jones went from here to Texas and back in a wagon. She resided with her family in the Lone Star state for a year, then returned to Western North Carolina because of the unfavorable climate and the raids by the Indians.

With Mrs. Jones at the birthday party were the following children:

H. L. Jones, of Charlotte; Mrs. W. W. Bryan, of Hickory; Miss Bertha Jones, of Asheville; L. R. Jones, of Asheville, and T. P. Jones, of Candler. Another child, Mrs. Alexander Copeland, of Newport News, was unable to attend.

Tel-Care Program Has Checks On Elderly

The women of St. George Had this part

By MERIANNE EPSTEIN
Staff Writer

A concern among older and handicapped people living alone is that a sudden illness or accident will befall them and no one will know.

The Tel-Care program operated in Asheville and Buncombe County by the Blue Ridge Region of the Easter Seal Society can provide reassurance to those people through daily telephone calls from volunteers.

"The program provides these people with contact with someone from the outside who makes sure they're all right," said Millie Jones, Tel-Care coordinator. "There are quite a number of handicapped and elderly that live alone. Sometimes neighbors look in and sometimes they don't."

Volunteers call clients at the same time every day just to check on things, and can summon medical or other help if it's needed.

There is an annual get-together during the Christmas holidays for clients and volunteers, where many of the participants meet face-to-face for the first time.

CHRISTMAS 1982

The Tel-Care service is offered free to Asheville and Buncombe County residents.

Clients can participate for as long as they need the service. The service can also be provided on a part-time basis.

For more information on being a client or volunteer, call 258-0782.

MINNIE JONES

'You can do anything regardless of where you are raised'

By Julie Martin
EDITOR WNC WOMAN

Minnie Jones worked by the phone in her Pisgah View Apartments, an arms' length from shelves packed with paperwork. She had finished a quilt top the day before and planned to quickly whip up another. A steady stream of phone calls interrupted a morning interview: Someone wanted to make plans for a Democratic Party luncheon. Another was organizing a City Council recall effort.

"I'm busy," she told a caller. "You know I'm always busy."

Jones was born in South Carolina, attended schools there and married while a teen-ager. The marriage didn't work out, however, and she moved to Asheville at 17. She finished her education in food service at what is now Asheville-Buncombe Community College. Jones also raised her daughter, Birdie, now 25, and several foster children. She worked at Kellwood until 1991, when the plant closed and she retired.

In 1962, Jones moved to Pisgah View Apartments as an Opportunity Corporation volunteer. She already knew many of the residents as a bus monitor for Thoms Rehabilitation Hospital.

Back then, the Pisgah View public housing project was almost all white, Jones said. "That was before integration. There were black communities and white communities. We were all right. We lived good. We didn't have housing. We lived in shabby houses and had poor landlords, but we had good city fathers. "There was no integration either, but you could talk to the mayor and the city council and they would listen."

Part of her work was to help integrate Pisgah View. It was her first foray into civil rights work. She began attending church and met the leaders of Asheville's NAACP. The late Rev. Wesley Grant Sr., among others, influenced her.

Back in those days, Jones said, "I could have gone bad. I could have gone real bad. They were instrumental in my life. They took me in and helped me to do things. These people were leaders of the community — not just the black community."

After the Civil Rights Amendment was passed in 1964, a federal mandate made it clear that public housing must be integrated. Jones became a part of that when she began her work at Pisgah View.

But "The community needed a lot of repair," she said. Jones helped clean up Pisgah View and instill a sense of pride in the community.

About 10 years later, she was elected president of the Pisgah View Residents Association. She met with the late Claude Debruhl, a former representative to the N.C. House and a builder-developer. He told her, "If you're going to be a community leader, you need to get involved in politics."

Jones came to realize getting people registered to vote would motivate them to become better citizens and create a powerful lobbying group to help the community as a whole. She became involved with the Democratic Party, organized voter registration drives and a Legal Aid office.

Her role models included the late Carl Johnson of Hillcrest Apartments, who led a public housing rent strike during the 1960s that began a push for tenants rights that continues to this day. She also marched on city hall in 1988 with Johnson and about 100 others to call for a fight against drug abuse in public housing. "Our goal was to eliminate drugs from public housing and help people in public housing be more self-sufficient." Out of that effort came the Asheville-Buncombe Drug Commission.

Today, Jones' work is by no means finished. She hands out red cards bearing her name and the slogan, "N.C. Community Advocate for Low-Income People."

Jones still serves with a host of organizations to help the poor, including the Opportunity Corporation, which is the umbrella organization for Head Start; the Low Income Housing Coalition, which is seeking federal funds for a health clinic for the homeless, migrants and others who cannot afford health care; and the Asheville-Buncombe Drug Commission, which she said still needs to push more drug education and hiring of people from public housing within the organization.

She also serves on the N.C. Board of Legal Services and the board of the National Housing Law Project, which goes to Washington, D.C., to make recommendations on behalf of North Carolina's poor.

EWART BALL/CITIZEN-TIMES

Jones was pleased when the outgoing city council voted last year to approve the new housing code. The code, effective July 1, affects what residents can do with the 21,000 houses and 13,000 rental units they own within the city limits. The new code mandates inspection of rental housing every five years, heating systems that will maintain a 68-degree temperature when it's 14 degrees outside, and installation of R-19 insulation in rental property ceilings that can be accessed.

But Jones believes that victory for Asheville's poor may be short-lived. She says she can't predict where the new council will lead. Although Jones isn't leading the recall effort, she expects to participate.

"This crowd doesn't believe in the housing code and they will do away with it — I know they will," she said. "(The housing authority) is fixed for the next 20 years, but it's people out there in those shacks who are in trouble."

Before, "We could talk to the mayor, the city council — we could always talk to the city fathers. That's my concern," she said. Jones doesn't plan to return to city council meetings any time soon. "I don't think they'll listen."

"If there is a faction — it seems to be rich people—I want to know where we are going to stand. I don't just mean black people, I mean low-income people, if we are going to care about equal rights and justice for all. If anybody's going to be left out, it's going to be us. It's going to be the poor blacks and the poor whites."

Jones and about 350 others attended a Dec. 7 meeting of the Asheville City Council at the Civic Center at which the city council voted to oust then-City Manager Doug Bean. "I will definitely participate in a recall effort in any way I can," Jones said the next day. "If they're going to tear up the town in 30 minutes, what are they going to do in 30 days? I think we have the right to know what's going on, and we didn't have that right last night."

Mayor Russ Martin also stung Jones at that meeting when, after she asked him to do something about additional street lighting in West Asheville, he responded with "Yows'em." He apologized to Jones afterward, saying he wanted to end a tension-filled meeting on a light note.

"The mayor sent me a letter of apology, but he kind of cut me down, too," said Jones. "You are almost afraid to say anything, when you are cut down by the mayor and the city council you can't talk to."

In the past, Jones said work with the city council has brought help to public housing. "Our money comes through the city. If I had not been able to work with the city, we would not have been able to get this money. This is worrying me. We are going to take some steps backward if things keep going the way they are."

In 1989, a $5.4 million federal grant paid for lead paint removal and remodeling the exteriors to give each of the 262 units at Pisgah View an individual character. An enlarged copy of the check for the grant hangs in a frame on the wall behind Jones.

Before that, she said, families with children under 7 weren't allowed to live at Pisgah View because of the lead paint problem. Since families with young children moved in, she sees the reward in her hard work.

"This is what we pushed for. We were pushing for things to be better for all people," said Jones. "When I see these little babies in here, I think at least they've got a place to live."

She wants to continue the work already under way and seek more money to complete the ground work at Pisgah View.

"I do this because I like people and I feel this is what the Lord wants me to do. I don't owe anybody anything except the Lord Jesus Christ. I know the Lord had to have a hand in everything I've done."

In the future, she says she "would like to continue the journey I was on." She enjoys sewing and making gourmet meals: At one time, she helped to run the Weaverville Milling Co. Her dream is to take a trip to Hawaii. "That's where I'd love to go before I pass away."

Those who live with her at Pisgah View, she says, "are good neighbors, good people. I feel good about it because I know I had a hand in bringing these people in here."

Jones doesn't see the need for public housing ever going away. "There will always be poor people. Because the Lord doesn't intend for all of us to be rich."

Notes on Interview of March 28, 2003

So says Minnie Jones. . . . . .Her tenacity and goodwill have kept. . . . . and helped establish an after-school program and two health clinics. She is worthy of her of the title: "North Carolina Community Advocate for Low-income People"

Minnie Jones was born in Spartanburg, South Carolina, on January 6, 1938. The eldest of five children, her time was divided between her mother's home in Spartanburg and her aunt Edwina's home in Grier. Her childhood memories include the blackouts and rationing of the war years, and anxiety for relatives away at war.

Growing up in the segregated South, her memories also include separate churches, theaters, drinking fountains, schools for blacks and whites. She says of those days, "It was very hard for us. We didn't have much. We got the old books from the white schools. We had to go up there and sign them out. Just about everything we had was second-hand. Anybody that got an education in those days was blessed."

Persisting in spite of the hardships, Minnie Jones got her education. ---(The boy's name was JOEL, not George.) ----- After completing high school, she moved to Alabama, where she stayed with "a wonderful lady who took me to church with her." Answering a call in that church to register votes with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.,.....(your paragraph).

Recalling that time of struggle, danger, and hard-won change, Ms. Jones says, "There were some good white people, too, in those times. If there hadn't been, we wouldn't be where we are today. It took lots of folks working together to start to change things. Just like it does today." ----------

Ms. Jones came to Asheville in the late 1950s to desegregate the Asheville Housing Authority. "I came here to make a difference," she says. "I had never seen a housing project in my life." ("It looked like a concentration camp"—may want to leave that last remark out). . . She got a job at the Irene Wortham Center (in the old Queen Carson School on Park Ave.),working with handicapped children. The first African-American to work at the Center, Minnie stayed busy—"I was the cook and the child care provider. I had to buy the groceries—we had an account at a store up on Pack Square." ----------

She worked at Irene Wortham for a number of years, until administrative problems at the Center forced the layoff of employees. "We were debating what we were going to do for a job, and I went to the Orthopedic Hospital (now Thoms Rehabilitation Hospital) and I saw Mr. Bird." ----------

During these years, catering was a sideline business. Minnie catered many social events in Asheville, especially weddings, and was fondly known as "The Catering Queen".

In the late 1990s, Ms. Jones started an after-school program in the Pisgah View Community Center. The Center is open Monday through Friday, 3:00-6:00, during the school year. The program offers 35+ young children love, learning, recreational opportunities and a warm meal. Every year she manages. . . .
The program expands during the summer, operating from 11:00 – 5:00, Monday through Friday, providing supervised educational and recreation opportunities, and a nutritious meal each day.

Ms. Jones was instrumental in starting two clinics to provide health care services for underserved residents of West Asheville and WNC. At Easter a few years back, she asked a friend, "Why don't you and I meet and draw up plans for a clinic?" A member of the Board of Pisgah Legal Servies for years, Minnie arranged to use the offices during the holiday. She and her friend (Carlos Gomez?) spent the entire weekend holed up at Pisgah Legal Services, talking, typing, figuring. . . 72 hours later their proposal for a clinic was in the hands of the lawyers! Then she began. . . . .
Two clinics emerged from those plans: The Minnie Jones Family Health Center at 1 Granada St., which opened in September of 1997, and Western North Carolina Community Health Services at 10 Ridgelawn St., which opened in late 1998. From the beginning, both clinics have enjoyed the dedicated service of Dr. Polly Ross, Chief Medical Officer.

Minnie is a deacon at St. Paul's Missionary Baptist Church on Fayetteville St., where she has been a member for seven years.
For relaxation, when time permits, she enjoys sewing and crocheting.

And Minnie Jones is not done yet. Lately she is most excited about. . . .

Not long ago, Ms. Jones got a call about 6:00 in the morning from one of her neighbors, who told her that there was a man in a wheelchair sitting alone on the sidewalk in front of the Minnie Jones Family Health Center. "I was worried about him sitting out there by himself," she says. "I just through on my clothes right over my nightgown and got in my car and went down there. I asked him what he was doing there all by himself so early in the morning. He said that he wanted to be the first one to see the doctor, and that he caught a ride with a friend who was going to work. It was the only way he had to get there. I didn't have a key to the building, but I sat there and talked with him until someone came to open up. He needed that help, and he made the best effort he could to get there and get it. And there's lots more people who need help. Most mornings when we open there is a long line of people waiting to be seen. We're busting at the seems in this little clinic. That's why I'm doing this."

The new center, which will be located in a vacant apartment building at Pisgah View, will be a 7000 square foot facility. The building is being made available by the Housing Authority of Asheville. Carlos Gomez, Director of Western North Carolina Community Health Services, says, "the new facility will be open more hours, serve more people, and offer more services, including a lab on-site, and expanded mental health and

Jones puts up fight for health of indigent

When a fire is set in Minnie's soul, the entire forest could burn.

You don't say no to Minnie Jones.

You don't walk up to this former civil rights activist who marched across the country with a mission, a woman who pulls for the poor like a preacher summons sinners, and say "Ms. Jones, this can't possibly be done."

If you do, expect the flames.

Minnie will frown and fold her arms. She'll stand with feet planted, eyes narrowed to hyphens. Then she'll take a deep breath, collect her thoughts and bombard the naysayers with a list of reasons why her ideas WILL work.

She will hand out the red business cards stating her mission: "N.C. Community Advocate for Low-income People," and smile before walking off, having made her point.

College educated and retired from food service and manufacturing jobs, her latest volunteer venture is a community and residential-based health clinic, the primary care so many poor people lack.

Susan Reinhardt

When she heard talk that WNC Community Health Services was considering such clinics in low-income neighborhoods, she thought of her own, Pisgah View Apartments in West Asheville.

It was her job in 1962 as an Opportunity Corporation volunteer to integrate the predominately white neighborhood, a job she completed successfully.

Now there are new missions, such as good health care, on her agenda. If anybody needs a dose of decent care it's her people, the tenants over which she tends as president, she said.

Minnie, a Spartanburg, S.C., native, said Pisgah View is at capacity. Its races are balanced – 262 units with 668 tenants from black to white to elderly to small children.

All with at least one thing in common. Little or no money.

"Nobody seems to want to help the poor people," she said, standing in the waiting room of the small clinic that bears her name. The room is clean, newly renovated in teal and mauve. Pamphlets are scattered across tables. Patients sit with hands clasped, waiting to see an expert, waiting for the medicines that give them relief. Or life.

Minnie talked of similar clinics set up in residential sections all over the country, especially in big cities like Chicago.

"I saw the need," she said. "It's done in other places so why not in the South?"

She talked about an incident that fixed her mind solid on providing her neighbors decent doctoring.

"I had a client with a temperature of 104. We tried various health providers and were told she couldn't get an appointment until the next day. In the meantime, I took her to the emergency room."

CURB SERVICE: It's not that free health care isn't out there. The big problem, she and others in the business agree, is transportation. If people are poor and in bad health, a Cadillac doesn't await them curbside to whisk them toward treatment.

"People who are indigent, truly indigent, don't have cars," said Pat Kelsey, one of two rotating physician's assistants from Hygeia Family Medicine in West Asheville. "Even though health care is sitting there waiting for them, they can't get to it."

So Minnie Jones decided her own neighborhood was the perfect place to start the clinic that opened last September. Scott Pearson, president of the board of directors for WNC Community Health Services, a non-profit, is pleased with the site.

"It's a concept we felt was an important way to bring needed primary care to the underserved, indigent population," Pearson said. "It's difficult for these folks to access our regular health care system."

And some may not try at all.

Minnie and the clinic caretakers are convinced an elderly man living at Pisgah View wouldn't be alive today had it not been for the short walk he took for help.

The day before the man had grabbed his chest and collapsed. Somehow, he made it through the night, lying frightened in his bed, until the next day when the Minnie Jones Health Care Center opened its doors shortly after lunch.

He stumbled across the yard, through the parking lot, fist against heart, until he reached the clinic, located in the community center.

"He had a major heart attack," Minnie said and a doctor confirmed. "If we hadn't been here he'd of probably stayed home and died."

Once a patient arrives at the clinic, which is funded through grants and donations, a registered nurse, physician's assistant, or a doctor checks them out. The patient is either treated and sent home – with advice and medication – or referred somewhere else

Usually Minnie or office help will call a cab to transport. Often, she's loaded patients in her own car and driven them to hospitals and specialists.

One of these days she'd like her own van for the clinic. And few people doubt she'll get it.

LIFE'S LITTLE BASICS: The Minnie Jones center is no plush and carpeted office offering fancy testing and New Yorker magazines. It is not the place to go for CAT scans and X-rays, ultrasounds and minor surgery.

Instead, it is a place for primary care, where anyone who qualifies can find the basics: remedies for flu and colds, medicines for heart and lung disease and diabetes. A friendly face to hear their tales of pain and sickness.

"It's quicker and cheaper," Pat Kelsey said, "than using the local emergency room as primary care provider."

Minnie Jones and others who are associated with the clinic, believe in its benefits.

"I think we're doing some good things," Kelsey said. "If nothing else, people are finding out there are people around here who give a damn."

And if it weren't for Minnie, he said, who came here as a teen-ager, raised a daughter and several foster kids, the center wouldn't be at Pisgah View.

"Minnie Jones is ... pushy," Kelsey said, careful with his words. "But by God she gets things done. She's the catalyst, screaming we need help and care and deserve better than we're getting. She'd tell that to anybody who listened."

MINNIE JONES
Community Activist

Minnie Jones was born in Spartanburg, S.C., and moved to Asheville at the age 17. She finished her education in food service at what is now Asheville-Buncombe Technical Community College. In 1962, Jones moved to the Pisgah View Apartments as an Opportunity Corporation volunteer, where part of her work was to integrate the apartment complex after the 1964 Civil Rights Amendment was passed, mandating that federal housing must be integrated. Ten years later, Jones was elected president of the Pisgah View Residents Association. Realizing that getting people to vote would motivate them to become better citizens and create a powerful lobbying group that would help the community as a whole, Jones became active with the Democratic Party and organized voter registration and a Legal Aid Office. She has served with a host of organizations that help the needy. In 1994, she received a Free Speech Award from the Dr. Marketta Laurilia Free Speech Award Committee. She is the inspiration behind the Minnie Jones Family Health Center at Pisgah View Apartments.

Dear Ms. Jones and Mr. Gomez:

This letter is to confirm our conversation regarding building 16 at the Pisgah View development. I reviewed removing this six-unit building offline for the Minnie Jones Family Health Center with Gene Rehuba, HUD Engineer. He authorized the Asheville Housing Authority to take the units offline for this purpose, if the building is restored to its original configuration, when your organization completes its occupancy.

In summary, this letter officially permits your organization to pursue occupying building 16 at the Pisgah View development.

Yours truly,

Businesswoman's reward: doing good

Minority Enterprise Development Week began Sept. 17 with events honoring diverse business leaders.

Today, a Q&A with Minnie Jones, co-founder of the Minnie Jones Family Health Center. Jones won the 2004 Minority Enterprise Development Week award for a health-care provider.

By Michael Flynn
STAFF WRITER

Name: Minnie E. Jones
Business: Minnie Jones Family Health Center
How long in business: Since 1995
Location: Pisgah View Community Center in West Asheville
What they do: The health center provides primary care for low-income patients of all ages. The center has a doctor, nurse practitioner and office assistant on its staff.

Question: What was your biggest challenge in opening your business?

Answer: The biggest challenge was we didn't have a place to open or the necessary money. We had to depend on the Lord and the goodness of people. The housing authority was very generous in sharing the building with us. If it had not been for leaders at the housing authority and other concerned people, we would not have been able to get started.

Q: What is the most rewarding part of having your own business?

A: It's being able to see that you've done some good in the community and helped people that are less fortunate than yourself. We've saved lives, such as a Pisgah View resident who had a heart attack. Doctors from Mission Hospitals said that if we had not been there, he would not have lived.

Q: What are your plans or goals for your business over the next year?

A: Our goal is to serve more people and provide more services. We really need to because people are losing jobs and health insurance. I also really want to do more for children. Right now we have an after-school program from 3 until 6:30 p.m., which includes a nutritious supper. I hope that we can get a larger space, which we are working on right now, but it's a matter of raising funds. I want to be able to get into a larger building so that so we can serve more people.

Q: What's your reaction to winning this award?

A: I really appreciate people noticing what I'm doing and caring enough to recognize it. I'm not doing this for publicity, but because I care and to help the poor.

Former VP candidate says he's campaigning against poverty

By Bill Cresenzo
CITIZEN-TIMES CORRESPONDENT

ENKA — Former North Carolina senator and vice-presidential candidate John Edwards wouldn't say Saturday whether he plans to run for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2008.

But at Saturday's annual spring dinner for Democrats in the 11th Congressional District, he said he's running a different kind of campaign — one against poverty.

He shook hands with some of the 400 or so people gathered in the Haynes Conference Center on the Enka campus of Asheville-Buncombe Technical Community College. Edwards now heads the newly formed Center on Poverty, Work and Opportunity at UNC Chapel Hill.

"My campaign now is against poverty," he said. "We'll see where that takes me."

He would not comment on whether he would again seek the nomination. "We're going to focus on Elizabeth," he said, referring to his wife, who is undergoing treatment for breast cancer. "We've got to get Elizabeth well. That's the big thing."

Elizabeth Edwards was diagnosed with breast cancer just before Edwards and Sen. John Kerry lost the election to President Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney. Edwards told a supporter Saturday evening that his wife is doing "very well."

Edwards has traveled the country recently, promoting the new poverty center's work. He said he plans to continue to talk to poor people about their problems, and try to come up with solutions. On Saturday, he said, he met with local war veterans.

> JOHN EDWARDS, former senator and vice presidential candidate who heads the new Center on Poverty, Work and Opportunity at UNC

Edwards also wouldn't say whether Kerry planned to run for president again in 2008. "We talk all the time," he said of Kerry. "(The election) is four years from now. Who has any idea?"

Edwards also would not speculate on who, besides Kerry, may vie for the democratic ticket. "I'm not in the political predicting business," he said. "We'll leave that to other people."

Edwards also declined to talk about what went wrong for the Democrats during the 2004 campaign. But other Democrats at the dinner did.

Minnie Jones, who said she's been a Democrat "all my life and I'm going to die one," said the party needs to work harder and focus on its mistakes. "We didn't quite work hard enough," she said. "... We are going to try to regroup and go on and do better."

Concerning the war in Iraq, Edwards said there's still a lot of work to do. But he said the recent elections in Iraq are a sign that things are improving. "It was a very encouraging thing to see all those Iraqis lining up to vote," he said.

Annual Freedom Fund and Awards Banquet

Monday, 12 October 2009

The Asheville Branch NAACP and the Empowerment Resource Center of Asheville/Buncombe County will hold the annual Freedom Fund and Awards Banquet October 31 beginning at 7 p.m. The event, which takes place at the DoubleTree Biltmore, 115 Hendersonville Road in Asheville, honors leaders and celebrates efforts in achieving equality for all people. Tickets are $35 each, and funds raised through this event support the work of the Asheville Branch NAACP.

The keynote speaker is Minnijean Brown Trickey, one of the nine African American students whose courage and determination, coupled with protection from United States National Guard troops, carried them through angry crowds to end segregation at Little Rock Central High School in 1957.

Asheville resident Minnie Jones will receive the Sophie Dixon & Grace Dorn Leadership Award, given to women who exemplify the qualities of leadership, action, and influence in our community exhibited by Sophie Dixon and the late Grace Dorn. The President's Award, presented annually to an agency or business dedicated to the community's economic development, will be presented to OnTrack Financial Education and Counseling.

Tickets may be ordered by mailing checks to PO Box 2881 Asheville, NC 28802 or by calling (828) 281-3066. Attendees are encouraged to order tickets early.

ASHEVILLE — One of the Little Rock Nine will be visiting Asheville next week as keynote speaker at the Freedom Fund and Awards Banquet.

Minnijean Brown Trickey was one of the nine African-American students who, escorted by federal troops, collectively resisted opposition to desegregation to enter Little Rock, Ark., Central High School in 1957. She will speak Oct. 31 at the annual fundraiser for the Asheville Branch NAACP and the Empowerment Resource Center of Asheville/Buncombe County.

John Hayes, president of the Asheville branch, said this year's celebration, which has the theme "Bold Dreams, Big Victories," is particularly significant because it comes in the 100th anniversary year of the NAACP, which began in 1909 in New York.

"This is a fundraiser, to help us keep our phones on and fax machines going and so people have a place that is easily accessible to receive the services they need," Hayes said.

"But we also bring this forth to bring about the words of our Constitution and help make them a reality for all people, and that can only happen when people work together to develop relationships that foster trust and dignity with each other," he said. "And we come together to honor those whose mission it is to lift people up."

Held this year at the DoubleTree Biltmore on Hendersonville Road, the Asheville banquet will recognize and celebrate efforts in achieving equality for all people, Hayes said. A silent and live auction will begin at 6 p.m., followed by the dinner at 7 p.m.

Longtime community volunteer and activist Minnie Jones will be presented with the Asheville Branch's Sophie Dixon/Grace Dorn Leadership Award, given to women who exemplify the qualities of action and influence of leadership in the community.

Hayes said Jones, who organized a family health center at Pisgah View Apartments among other projects, will be honored for the "tireless efforts she puts forth to serve her community."

"She's forever trying to make sure that Pisgah View and West Asheville are not left out of opportunities," he said. "Whether it's cleaning up the community or having a drug free community, Minnie Jones is on the front line."

OnTrack Financial Education and Counseling, a nonprofit United Way agency that began in 1975, will be presented with the President's Award, given to an agency or business working to pave inroads for the community's economic development.

"We are honored to be recognized with the President's Award," said On Track Executive Director Celeste Collins. "Since 2001, we have collaborated with the NAACP to provide the Credit Awareness Project, which offers a free 3-in-1 credit report and score to community members.

"This project, along with our other services of budget counseling, debt management programs and financial education, helps people of all races, genders and income levels take the next steps toward financial independence and empowerment," she said. "We greatly value our partnership with the NAACP and the true impact it brings to our community."

Meals for kids in Pisgah View

Minnie Jones, a 30-year resident of Asheville's Pisgah View community, enlisted the help of County Attorney Joe Connolly and General Services Director Bob Hunter as she made her presentation on the Minnie Jones Family Health Center's summer youth program. The county officials held up two large display boards showing photos of the many children who took part in the program. "A lot of those children would not have had a meal had it not been for the people who cared," declared Jones, adding, "I work nine weeks every year, for free, as my contribution to feed the poor."

The hot, nutritional meals, purchased from the Mission-St. Joseph's Health System, provide continued nutritional support to those children who depend on the free lunches offered during the school year, said Carlos Gomez, executive director (and co-founder, with Jones) of the WNC Community Health Services. That's the parent agency for the health center at Pisgah View Apartments, the largest public-housing development in the county. In a telephone interview, Gomez said the center provides free, walk-in services to Pisgah View residents and other low-income people, with support from the county's Indigent Health Care fund. Speaking after the meeting, Jones said she originally came to Buncombe County "to make a difference.

"I was the first black person to live in the Pisgah View Apartments. I came here 30 years ago to integrate them."

Young people work to carry King's torch

Event throws out challenge

ASHEVILLE — Everybody keeps talking about Martin Luther King Jr., Asheville's Minnie Jones said recently, so "why doesn't somebody pick up the torch and carry it on?"

With Martin Luther King Jr. Day coming next week, Jones is challenging people in Western North Carolina to think about King's actions and accomplishments — and the work yet to be done.

Jones was one of several people recognized Sunday at One Youth at a Time's 12th annual Martin Luther King Jr. Tribute to Children and Youth Celebration, which drew about 250 children and adults to Mount Zion Missionary Baptist Church, on Eagle Street.

One of the Little Rock Nine, the first African-American students to be enrolled in a previously all-white Arkansas high school, Jones worked with King to promote racial justice and social equality.

Jones was surprised by the honor because "I just don't do things to get awards," she said. "I do things because this is what God wanted me to do."

The event brought together church groups and schools for an afternoon of dance, song and inspirational oratory from area students, including Ki'era Gash, a Reynolds High graduate and sophomore at Brevard College.

In her message for the children and adults gathered at the church, Gash said, "It's OK to think for yourself."

The Volunteer of the Year award was presented to Laura Kirby, Homework Help program coordinator at Central United Methodist Church. The program, in partnership with One Youth at a Time, has offered tutoring help for the past two years from 6-7 p.m. Thursdays at the church at 27 Church St. in downtown Asheville.

"I think one of the great things about being there (Sunday) was how they continue to hold on to this vision up in front of us and inspire us in the community to work toward it," Kirby said.

"It just feels good to be a part of it."

She is "one of those that went the second mile. She responded to my call of volunteering and she came up with the idea," Williams said. "And that makes her valuable."

Gash and Najah Bryant, a senior at Roberson High, were each presented with a $500 scholarship. Bryant will attend UNC Greensboro in the fall. Gash is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Demetrius Parks; and Bryant is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Bryant.

"The event brings everybody together ... it's just a gathering, but everybody is just a circle of love; this is what Dr. Martin Luther King wanted," Williams said. "We need to come together to keep the unity alive in the bond of peace."

Gash was one of One Youth at a Time's earliest participants. And she believes the group helped her "stay on the right track" — along with her mother, who is "a strict and determined lady."

"These children, it's just so beautiful (because) when they talk, they talk from the depth of their heart and they let nothing define them when they get ready to speak," said Robbie Williams, executive director and co-founder of One Youth at a Time and keynote speaker at the event.

"This is the way we keep his legacy alive: through the children."

The Volunteer of the Year award was presented to Laura Kirby, Homework Help program coordinator at Central United Methodist Church. The program, in partnership with One Youth at a Time, has offered tutoring help for the past two years from 6-7 p.m. Thursdays at the church at 27 Church St. in downtown Asheville.

"I think one of the great things about being there (Sunday) was how they continue to hold on to this vision up in front of us and inspire us in the community to work toward it," Kirby said.

"It just feels good to be a part of it."

She is "one of those that went the second mile. She responded to my call of volunteering and she came up with the idea," Williams said. "And that makes her valuable."

Gash and Najah Bryant, a senior at Roberson High, were each presented with a $500 scholarship. Bryant will attend UNC Greensboro in the fall. Gash is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Demetrius Parks; and Bryant is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Bryant.

"The event brings everybody together ... it's just a gathering, but everybody is just a circle of love; this is what Dr. Martin Luther King wanted," Williams said. "We need to come together to keep the unity alive in the bond of peace."
